Miss Libby Revell, III Trinity, pointed out that dictatorship was necessary to Spanish internal peace and order. She stated that Spain was faced with anarchy when a republic was set up in 1931. Franco had another alternative, she continued, to set up a monarchy, but this would only mean a fascist dictatorship in another form.

The admission of Spain to the UN would cause a split among its member nations said Bob Collin, III St. Mike's. The UN is in a precarious condition already he continued.

College Players Quebec Success

"It is hard to get used to merely being an ordinary person again!" This is how one of the actors in the U.C. French play "Les Plaideurs" expressed the feelings of the cast regarding their reception at the universities of Montreal and Ottawa. The actors touring with their play were dined, wined and feted in both cities.

The eight actors in the play knew before starting that in presenting Racine's comedy before French-speaking universities they were choosing audiences highly qualified to make a keen judgment of their performance. However, they all expressed almost incredulous delight with the reception they were given.

The advance publicity in Montreal papers gave one fact which had not occurred to many of the Toronto student actors, which was that no other Toronto cast had ever attempted to present a play in French in Montreal. This apparently aroused a fair amount of interest there, to judge by the size of the audience in the University of Montreal auditorium.

Gratien Gelinas (Fridolin of "Ticoq") presented Professor Jeanneret with a beautifully bound and illustrated copy of "Les Plaideurs" for University College. Of the play, he said that he had expected a ... effort, but that he was most ... ably surprised by the quality of ... performance. He complimented ... signer Hubert Fielden-Briggs on ... make-up and the costumes ... congratulated all the actors ... ually.

A. Jackson To Review 4 Paintings

A. Y. Jackson, one of the "Group of Seven" painters and founder of the Canadian Group of Painters will review the paintings of four Calgary artists which are hanging in Hart House Gallery at 5:00 p.m. today. Dave Gardner, assistant to the Warden of Hart House, has announced that the gallery will be open to women from 4:00 p.m. until 6 this afternoon. The four painters who works Jackson will review are Gregory Arnold, George Michalcheon, Roy Kiyooka, and R. J. Spicket.

Jackson was born in Montreal in 1883, just around the corner from the Dominion Gallery. He worked in photo-engraving and lithographic shops and had commercial experience before studying art at the Academie Julien in Paris and at the Chicago Art Institute.

His first exhibition in Montreal in 1911 he described as being received with "thunderous silence". Later in Toronto he met Harris, MacDonald, Lismer and Thomson, and in 1920 he became one of the founders of the "Group of Seven".

Jackson has painted in almost every area in Canada from the Rockies to Quebec and from Southern Ontario to within 100 miles of the North Pole. Arthur Lismer has said that Jackson has painted wherever there was a chance to get away from the cities.

Lismer stated that Jackson's outstanding contribution is in the fact that he has revealed our land to us, our origins, our settlement and the unique character of light and color in Canada. Lismer said that Jackson is not a modern artist; he professes no creed or attachment to any school or "ism"; and is not a city artist. Lismer said Jackson does not paint in terms of the mechanical, psychological, or abstract echo of something theoretical or of some social commentary. Lismer claims that he paints from visual contact with nature and that his reflective range and summarizing technique is alert and vigorous.

As a spokesman for the "Group of Seven", Jackson once said: "We frankly abandoned our attempts at literal painting and treated our subjects with the freedom of the decorative designer."

By DAVID PEDDIE

Jean Paul Sartre's controversial play NO EXIT (or as it is called in the Stuart Gilbert translation IN CAMERA) was presented by the C.B.C. last Sunday on Stage 52. It was, as we say—adequate as a performance. However, the fact that it was presented at all is slightly infuriatious, and I am sure that the CBC will get plenty of letters from irate and shocked listeners. I am inclined to think that the players and the producer did not emphasize enough the moral quality of the play and so there will be many letters that might not have been written had the moral ideas of the author been given more prominence.

Three people find themselves cooped in an ugly room in the depths of Hell and they have never met before. They start to tell each other about how they died and then about how they lived, and it is far from pleasant. The man Garcin is a coward who has run away from fighting a war; he has treated his wife abominably as well. Inez is a lesbian who killed her girl friend when the latter's husband died—a masterpiece of perversion. Estelle, the girl, is a cheap flirt who killed a boy by killing their baby. These three are in an impossible situation where each hurts the other two by his or her very existence. They argue back and forth making it all the worse until they finally seem to reach an understanding which we know will soon disappear and the whole action be played over again.

After the play we know something of what Garcin means when he says "You know what wickedness is and shame and fear. There were days when you peered into yourself . . . and what you saw there made you faint with horror." Sartre has held something of all of us "in camera" for a moment—it is brought out in the exageration of vice in the three characters.

The "in camera" also shows Sartre's ideas of life and death. Death is the end and there is no progress beyond. Death adds a person up and there is no more. "One always dies too soon . . . or too late. And yet one's whole life is complete at that moment . . . You are your life and nothing else." Sartre allows for no excuses from this rigid standard. If ever there was a morality play, this is it, for it relies on horror and terror to make its point. Certainly the characters are not the kind one admires, but they are meant to show us the horror in ourselves in a most emphatic way.

The production by Peter Macdonald was not inspired but it had the general idea of the play. He did not get that terrific tension that is needed, and yet he had all the facilities for it that a stage production could not have. On stage there is only the horror of the furniture and the visions of the life on earth are done by staring. On the radio there were the eerie sounds of elevators and corridors and spine-tingling music. When the prisoners looked at the earth they used a filter microphone but they still didn't seem to be suffering agonies. Margaret Lassner was the best as Inez. There is no mixture of conflicting traits as there is in Estelle—she had merely to be knowing and harsh. Alice Hill combined the delicacy, hardness and falsity of Estelle satisfactorily but she could have been better. Alan King as Garcin was the drag. Instead of being the hypocritical type of coward he was a softie. Garcin courted danger because he knew he was a coward and he is always tensed. The voice should be tight and the thoughts incisive and I fear Mr. King held the show back from what it might have been.

This lack of real terror was noticed in the pauses. The CBC are the only ones who know how to use them. In radio twenty seconds of silence, if built up to dramatically, can be charged with horror, suspense or thought. Last Sunday I found myself counting the seconds. It is an infallible test of dramatic quality in radio and "IN CAMERA" didn't quite make it.

India --Current Crisis

By DICKEN DURAND

(The author, a freshman student in Arts at Queen's, is especially well-qualified to present the current crisis in India. Although he has not visited India personally, his family for four generations has lived in India, where, as army officers, and members of the diplomatic corps, they have acquired unparalleled experience and insight into the social, political and economic status of the Indian sub-continent.)

I would never wish a colony not to achieve Dominion status if it was ready for it.

Socialists claim that India was ready for self-government; that it was a strong nationalist spirit that ended British rule, and when we were gone, men like Nehru, could rule instead. They said that if Britain had done anything for the Indians she had been moving too slowly; the ordinary peasant farmer had gained nothing by British protection and would be far happier ruled by his own people; India was not being ruled democratically enough.

Was India ready for self-government?

Canadian Status

Canada achieved Dominion status in a very short time because the Canadians themselves were Europeans. The English and French have always been adept at governing themselves democratically. Asiatics are different. Indians are not yet sufficiently educated to have a democracy. They must therefore be ruled by beneficial despots while they are educated so that they stop regarding ballot boxes as some form of black magic. Their own princes were hardly beneficial despots. It is a well-known fact that Indian Rajas are among the richest men in the world. This wealth was taken from a land of poverty-stricken peasants.

Political Pressure

It was not Indian nationalist spirit that removed the British. It was constant and increasing political pressure applied by Russia and the USA as well as communist pressure from within. The rank and file of the Indian population didn't want the English to leave. Some peasants were led by communists and others by their local lords who wanted to be free to act as they wished. It will be remembered that after the breakoff of India the State of Hyderabad refused to forfeit British protection.

India A Continent

There was no nationalist spirit in India because India is not a nation, it is a continent. The people speak 130 dialects belonging to six distinct families of speech. There are nine great religions. When the British arrived it was a continent composed of many nations. Previously Moslems and Hindus cut each others' throats almost on sight. Under British protection they were becoming more and more tolerant to one another until some time in the future they would pobably have been as peaceful as Protestants and Catholics in Canada.

Slaughter

The major proof of my whole argument is the slaughter that followed British withdrawal, which Britons had always prophesied would follow an early withdrawal. Under British protection the people of India had spread from their former homes and the national and religious groups had become mixed. In time this would have tended towards complete religious tolerance. In fact, since we left India, as many Indians have been killed there in massacres as members of the British Empire and Commonwealth were killed during World War Two.

The Result

We left India leaving a political vacuum. This is being filled by communism. The "Intelligence Digest" reports that in about five years India will be entirely communist controlled. Our withdrawal left India weak and divided, and at the mercy of the Russian conqueror. Is this the way to Indian self-government?

SCM Club Is Planning New Group

There is a new idea in campus clubs this year, according to Don Featherstone, group chairman of the University College Student Christian Movement club. Featherstone said yesterday that the UC club is sponsoring a "Comparative Religion group".

This group will meet every Sunday evening and will attend the service at a different church, each week, he said. At their Wednesday night supper meetings, Featherstone said, the group will talk over the Sunday visit. The supper meetings are held in the SCM House at 143 Bloor St. West, and Featherstone said that a representative from the visited church will be invited to the Wednesday night meetings to explain doctrine, history and church government.

Featherstone said the group has arranged to have Dr. Harold Young of the United Church speak on Dec. 5, Dr. F. W. Boorer of the Church of Christ Scientist on Dec. 12, and Dr. Gallagher of the Canadian Council of Churches will be the speaker on Dec. 19.

The Campus Student Christian Movement, after 20 years of planning, this year acquired offices near the University, at 143 Bloor St. W. The Wednesday night supper meetings of the UC club are only a part of the many student activities carried on in the building. When the SCM took over the former Phi Delta Theta Fraternity House, the building was completely renovated and space was provided for luncheons, receptions and student discussion groups.

There are two large reception rooms and a kitchen on the first floor, while the basement is being remodelled to contain a tuck shop and other rooms for students.

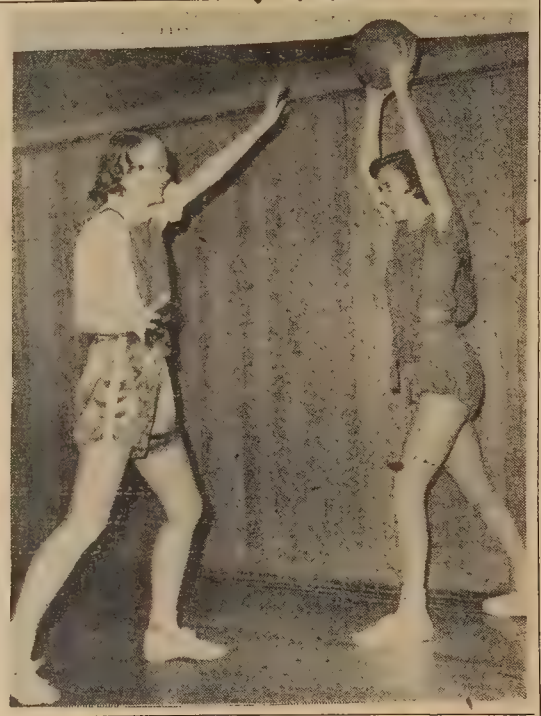
PHE Wins Twice In Women's B-Ball Tilts

PHE won a double victory at Hart House last night in the basketball semi-finals, when they, the PHE II defeated UC Sr.-Jr.'s 20 to 10, and the PHE I bettered the Nurses 39 to 6.



The first game saw two determined teams play tightly defensive ball with the score at the end of half time 8 to 3 for PHE. The squads loosened up in the second half when Physeds took the offensive, sinking 6 baskets and holding the Red and Whites to 7 points. High scorer for PHE was Alma Hatch with 5 baskets. Sally Waller was next with 4. Joan Mooney was top girl for UC when she chalked up five points. The highlight of the game was some terrific guarding by both teams, Mary Lewis doing an outstanding job for UC.

The second game was more one-sided. The end of the first half saw PHE on top of a 14-5 score. Physed opened up in the second half, running circles around the fatiguing Nurses and hurling in a total of 25 points to the Nurses' 1. Beryl Lewis sank 16 points for PHE while Shirley Roberts counted 8 for the winners. Jane Reycroft fought a hard game throughout and scored 4 points in a losing cause.

The winners of these two games, PHE I and PHE II, meet next Tuesday night in the lower gym in Hart House to decide the Intramural championship in a sudden death contest. There will also be a consolation game between the two losers on the same night before the playoff game. This being one of the few occasions that females are allowed in Hart House, a good turnout of fans is expected, although just whom PHE students will elect to cheer for is somewhat of a mystery.

What's The Joke?

Mary Lewis of UC Sophs apparently got a big kick out of checking Alma Hatch, PHE, in last year's final, but the last laugh was had by the Physed girls who won the Women's basketball championship. PHE I and PHE II are the finalists this year, and will play off next Tuesday night.

UC Beats SPS 5-2 Make Boxla Finals

In a see-saw lacrosse game Monday noon the UC squad came from behind to defeat the Senior SPS squad 5-2 in overtime and earn themselves a berth in the playoffs which begin tomorrow at noon. The score was tied two all at the end of regulation time, and UC notched three counters during the two periods of overtime play.

The win puts the UC squad into playoff position against Senior Meds, perennial contenders for the lacrosse title, who defeated St. Mike's 8-4 last Monday in their semi-final game. Playoffs will be the best two out of three games with the first contest slated for this Thursday at noon in the main gym and the other two scheduled for Monday and Wednesday of next week.

The Skulemen went ahead in the first period on a fast, screened shot that the UC goalie never saw. The Red and White crew evened things up half way through the second period when several of them ganged up on Bates in the Skule net who up to then had made several spectacular saves.

The Engineers seemed to have a definite edge in the third stanza and managed to regain the lead. Towards the end of regulation time the UC attack caught fire and started to apply the pressure, tying up the game and forcing it into overtime.

During the overtime periods, UC took over the role of aggressor and was definitely the superior team. Their three counters in overtime play made the win a decisive one, the first two coming in the first overtime period and the fifth goal in the last one. Dutch Young's appearance late in the game made all the difference for the winners. Dutch has been one of the leading lights in the UC lacrosse scene for four years and his abbreviated performance in this game was no exception.

Scorers for UC were Watson and Young with two goals each and Kopsky with a single. McKay and DeWar did the scoring for the Engineers.

Lacrosse fans are in for a treat in the next week with three playoff games between the two top teams on the campus in the offing.

Hockey Meds Tie SMC 2-2 In 3rd Period

A fighting senior Meds team came back in the dying minutes of the last period yesterday to tie a smoother and faster St. Mike's A team, 2-2. Although the double-blue squad outshot the Medsmen 17-8, they seemed to lack the actual scoring punch when inside the blue-line.

In the first period the play was fairly even but St. Mike's were definitely the smoother and faster team, while Meds, although they often ganged the puck and let positional hockey go by the boards, managed to keep the puck out of their own end fairly well. The lone tally came from Cole of St. Mike's when he slapped at a loose puck at the ten minute mark.

The first half of the second was St. Mike's all the way and had they not lacked scoring punch they could easily have notched three or four goals. Hunt got the St. Mike's goal by firing in a rebound.

From this point on the double-blue squad simply coasted along and before the final bell had gone, McGillivray of Meds, who had played well throughout the whole game, fired one past Grossi in the St. Mike's nets. Then Cosens deflected a shot from the corner into the twine, to tie the score. The score was obviously the result of a harder working Meds team who took advantage of some sloppy clearing by the St. Mike's defence and who refused to be beaten.

Except for one or two lapses, McDonald and Harwich played good defensive hockey for St. Mike's and the Cole, Hunt, Kane line was best up front. For Meds, the goal getters, McGillivray and Cosens, were best.

McGill Cagers In Good Shape For First Game

With the opening basketball game on the McGill Redmen's schedule just a day away, Coach Anderson is rapidly rounding his team into shape. Like the Blues, the McGill hoopsters schedule a group of exhibition tilts before the Intercollegiate schedule gets under way in order to have a little experience under their belts when that time arrives.

The Redmen will be Varsity's first opponents on the Intercollegiate circuit this winter with the game slated for Montreal on January 25th.

This year's quintet of Redmen will be one that has to depend on speed and set patterns of play instead of rebounding powers as they are lacking in height. The tallest man on the team at the present time is Dave Winship who stands 6' 5", but this is his first year of senior ball.

Nex in line is 6' 4" Sheldon Merling who has been a standout on the team for the past two seasons. Sheldon will probably hold down the regular bucket position on the squad. Harold Wipper at 6' 2" is the only other tall man on the team. He is graduating from last year's Intermediate team.

Asher Garbuz and Ben Tissenbaum, two of last year's stalwarts are returning to the lineup this season and will be supported by newcomers Paul Anderson from the Maritimes and Alex Sulyok, a product of Windsor, Ontario.

Archery

Hart House Archers (Dominion Champions) visited Guelph on Thursday, November 29th to do battle with the OAC team. The local archers defeated the OAC team by a score of 2879 to 2249. The return match will be held at Hart House late in January.

The 6th Annual Christmas Shoot will take place in the COTC Drill Hall, 11 St. George Street on Wednesday, December 12th. All who are interested in archery are invited to attend.

Soccer Final Today At 2:30

Today at 12:30 the interfaculty soccer final will be held on the Back Campus. The Arts Faculty Cup, emblematic of intramural soccer supremacy, is the prize sought by the Trinity "A" and the U.C. soccer teams.

For one of the teams, playing in the final seems an annual event, while for the other it is a novelty. This is the fifth consecutive year that Trinity has played in the final, while it is more than a decade since U.C. has attained that height.

The contending teams have already met twice this year. The first game produced a 1-1 tie, while the second the Redmen upset the Buttery Boys 3-1. U.C. advanced to the finals the hard way, having been forced into three overtime games before eliminating Dents and St. Mike's. Trinity dumped Emmanuel and Senior Skule on the playoff trail.

The general concensus of opinion is that the Trinity team is not the powerhouse of previous years. With some talented additions to last year's scrappy team, U.C. has produced a vastly improved squad, which headed the first group, posting an unbeaten record. Trinity has dropped only one game, and that to U.C.

U.C. has a strong defensive team. Fred Brauer in goal, thanks to the strong defensive play of fullbacks Doug Dies and Ochem During, has allowed only five goals in nine games. The half-line, sparked by Lloyd Elmer and Captain Robin Scott is going strong both ways. Up front, centre Steve Dalonki spearheaded the forward line, ably supported by Jim Treliving and Jack McKenzie as insides, and by Ward Russell at right wing.

Trinity, as always, is a strong defensive team. Fullbacks Hugh Wareham and Dennis Snowdon, supported by goalie John Pettigrew and centre-half Rick Gaunt, have given the team six shutouts in nine games. On the forward line the strong right wing of Doug Andison and Captain Hugh Rowan has carried the mail, helped by the good left wing play of Murray Jackson. Six of the Trinity team —Wareham, Snowdon, Gaunt, Hal Macdonald, Rowan and Tim Clarkson—are veterans of the 1949 championship team.

The game will be refereed by Bobby Auld. If weather conditions are right, it should be the best soccer game played on the campus this year.

Sportshoes

Intramural hockey action yesterday saw the Junior Vicsters fire home four goals in the second period to trounce Pre-Meds 4-1. Holden was the big man in that second session splurge as he drove in a brace of counters. The others went to Bird and Mason. Walsh saved the future Docs from being shut out as he rapped in a singleton.

In another hockey game Law really threw the book at St. Mike's "C" as they rolled to a 12-1 win. J. A. Tory was chief for the Barristers as he netted four goals, and he was ably assisted by Jenner, Long and J. M. Tory who scored two apiece. McLennan and Haigemeister blinked the light to finish off the Lawyers' scoring. Large Dick Trainor was the lone St. Mike's marksman.

Two volleyball smi-finals were played today with SPS III and Med III-yr. coming through with wins. The games were on a three out of five basis. The Engineers took Emmanel A's 15-6, 15-6, 7-15, and 15-14. In the other contest the Medsmen trounced UC Seniors in straight games 15-2, 15-4 and 15-9.

Led by Gear, with five goals, Meds I came from behind to defeat St. Mike's A 8-4 in the lacrosse semi-final yesterday. Samis added two more, and Grossi got two for the Irish.

On the hockey scene, Sr. UC edged Sr. Vic 2-1, while Vic III defeated SPS III 4-1.

Hockey Blues To Play Two On Weekend Quebec Jaunt

The Hockey Blues, last year's Intercollegiate champions, get set to defend their title begining this weekend, opening the season Friday night at the Montreal Forum against McGill, and going on to Quebec city from there to play Laval Saturday night.

The team has been cut pretty well down to size, and there has been quite a bit of jiggling of the lines since that 10-2 pasting last Friday at the hands of Peoples'. Forward Jack MacKenzie has been moved back to bolster a none-too-strong defence. He teams up with Joe Kane on the first line, while Gerry Fitzhenry is paired off with Fasan, a rookie who seems to have caught a regular post with the team, though Paul Prendergast is still up as a spare defenceman.

The first line is composed of Rope at centre, with Adams and Weldrake at the wings. Stevens centres the second line and Arrowsmith and Frey flank him, and the third line is composed of Fox as centre and Conboy and Vernon at wings. Henderson and Bennett are spare forwards.

The team is starting the season off the hard way, playing two games on two consecutive days. With the way that Wade has been working them out, they should none-the-less be in shape. McGill who have already started their season with a win over Laval, were the third place team last year.

CAMPUS ELECTIONS THURSDAY

Mock Parliament Elections

Planks

As a preliminary to the forthcoming Mock Parliament Election The Varsity is printing the following planks from the platforms of the various campus political clubs participating in the election. These are the official statements of these clubs. Today's statements cover defence.

Conservative

Canada is presently faced with a threat to her national existence and to protect herself she has undertaken certain committments under the United Nations and NATO. These must be properly fulfilled.

Compulsory Military Service is presently out of the question because of the lack of unanamity on this subject. But in the case of open hostilities with a foreign power, there is no doubt that Conscription must immediately be resorted to.

Arms standardization on the U.S. pattern is making a vast increase in our unfavorable trade balance with that country and should not be pursued, at the detriment of our economy.

All efforts should be made to increase the efficiency of the reserve forces and to build up a citizen soldiery. There is not the slightest indication that this leads to a military state or a warlike spirit, take note of the Swiss.

War benefits no one. There can be no victor considering the power of modern weapons. But Canada must be prepared to meet any attack launched against her and the present state of international affairs indicates considerable urgency.

LPP

Is the tremendous arms race necessary? The Labour Progressive Party maintains it is not. It is only bringing the world dangerously close to war. The LPP advocates universal arms reduction based on an agreement for peace among the big powers. It believes that world war is not inevitable and that if the will of the majority of the people for peace is advocated strongly enough, governments will be forced to seek a peaceful solution to world problems.

A look at the world situation shows that the main trouble spots are in the so-called "backward" countries. The movements for national independence in these areas are justified. They should not be suppressed by military force, used to "prove" Soviet aggression and to justify the arms race.

Business men have expressed fear of an economic crisis coming in the event of a "peace scare." Armaments have been hailed as solving economic difficulties. They did this but only for a time. Now they are only producing high prices, lay-offs and general hardship.

A policy of peace, friendship and trade with all countries would increase Canada's welfare and be her best defence.

Liberal

The threat of Communism is Canada's chief danger today. We must prepare to defend our shores and fulfil our International commitments. Our army and navy units are serving in Korea and will soon serve in Europe. Our surplus arms are equipping other North Atlantic Treaty forces.

Our armed services have been strengthened in both active and reserve departments. We must be ready to support them and if necessary to adopt conscription without regional consideration. Our dependence on the United States must be recognized, but this does not imply slavish devotion to Washington. Canada must be a free associate in the defence of democracy.

An integrated program of defence production and weapon standardization with the U.S. forces will be impemented. Canada is now forced to rearm in the face of increasing arming of other unfriendly nations. However, Canada remains more than willing to enter any East-West arms reduction program that shows any possibility of proper enforcement and progress toward peace for our world.

CCF

The CCF Party believes that we should be guided in our defence efforts by the policies of the United Nations. On the whole we have supported the present defence policies, but with reservation. We have emphasized that military preparation is not the only defence against Communism. The CCF considers that aid to backward countries which could fall victims to Communism is equally important to our defence. We consider it very important that a better balance be made between direct defence, and defence in form of aid. We believe that not enough is being spent in the latter form. Besides, it is important that we do not cut social security at the price of defence.

We support the principle of collective security through the United Nations and, hence, we support the action taken in Korea by Canada through the United Nations. Our party believes that atomic weapons should be outlawed providing that atomic energy is placed under international control with a system of continuous international inspection. We believe that regional pacts such as the North Atlantic Pact are not wholly desirable. Since the United Nations has been only partly effective in this regard, we do support the general set-up of the Atlantic Pact as essential to our defence.

Finally, the CCF does not believe that military conscription is necessary or wise at the present time.

Party Preferences Will Be Revealed In Campus Voting

Tomorrow the University of Toronto will see its first campus Mock Parliament election. After many preliminary arrangements made last winter and still more difficulties this fall with date, the election will be held tomorrow from 11.00 a.m. to 2.30 p.m. The Political Science Club has made all the arrangements and will officiate at the ballot boxes during the election.

Students will be able to vote in eight different places on the campus. One in each of: Victoria College, University College, Trinity College, St. Michael's College, Hart House, the Economics Building, the Medical Building, and the Skule Building. At each of these polling stations there will be scrutineers from each of the political parties on the campus, and a non-political student provided by the Political Science Club who will act as returning officer.

All students voting will have their A.T.L. cards stamped or marked so that no student will vote twice. This will also prevent the possibility of one of the parties having its members vote over and over to pack the election.

Both the MacDonald-Cartier Club and the CCF club have already held pep rallies to bolster their position, and put their policies in front of the students. The Liberal Club will hold a pep rally today at noon in front of Hart House. It will consist of campaign speeches by the club heads, and entertainment by the Mudville Harmonisers.

E. B. Jolliffe was the guest of the CCF Club at their meeting on Monday. The MacDonald-Cartier, on the same day, conducted a meeting to the blaze of bagpipes at which David Fry, IV Trin., told the members the party platform and asked for good support.

The Mock Parliaments have been run by the University of Toronto Debating Union up until now, and it was only last year that it was turned over to the Poli Sci club.

This year the Legislative Chamber will be used for the Mock Parliaments. Since it cannot be used while the Legislative Assembly is in session, the parliaments will have to be held later, one this month, and one some time in January. Resolutions for debate will be provided by the party asked to form the government, with amendments by the opposition.

The subjects to be discussed will be on any level and will not necessarily be any part of any party platform. The members of the assembly may vote as they like, but, like a regular legislature, the government will not introduce any bills not acceptable to its supporters.

Party Heads State Platform Campus Election Compaign

In preparation for the Mock Parliament elections being held on Thursday, speakers from the four clubs on the campus spoke yesterday on the topic, "What our party stands for".

Walter Parker, IV UC, president of the CCF Club, told the students at the political forum in Rm. 6, UC, that his party stood for just what the abbreviations stand for—co-operative commonwealth federation. He said "our economy has been on a war or semi-war basis for the last ten years, and now it needs projects like housing and the St. Lawrence Seaway to keep our economy up."

Parker said that the housing problem cannot be met by private enterprise, so it must be met by public enterprise. He felt that we must bring our economy into the hands of responsible people.

Speaking for the Labor Progressive Party Club, Ron Biederman stated that in his opinion the government of Canada was not playing a role conducive to peace. He said that there is but one way to promote peace today and that is by negotiations leading to disarmament. Because the LPP Club is the only university club taking up the peace issue, Biederman felt that every student interested in peace should vote for the LLP Club regardless of whether the student believed in the ultimate aims of the LPP Party.

The Liberal Club is basing its appeal to students in the Mock Parliament elections on the basis of the general support of the party and on the club's record on the campus, according to John Medcoff, president of the Liberal Club. He said that the Liberal Club had never been a "shrinking violet" and would add life to the Mock Parliament.

Medcoff said that the Conservatives should remember that a party should represent all the people. He then said that the campus Liberals agreed with much that the CCF has to say on such things as social security. He also said that while they do not believe in free enterprise right or wrong, profits must be shared by the manufacturer, laborer, and the consumer.

David Fry, president of the MacDonald-Cartier Club, said that conservatism is a political philosophy. He predicted that the conservative party would last longer than any of the other three parties and stated the Conservative Party was the oldest and longest lasting. Fry said that the Conservative Party was all for women and also read part of a 15-point manifesto on their belief in the relation of the liquor laws.

Parker asked Fry in the discussion period that followed if Fry could lead his party to the polls on the liquor platform that Fry had outlined. The CCF Club president pointed out that the program he proposed was a direct contradiction to the letter Premier Frost had sent to the Temperance Federation. Fry answered that he was leading his party on this compus on this very issue.

A speaker from the floor then asked Parker if the CCF party was afraid of being labelled "red". Parker answered that the CCF's reasons for modifying their stand on socialism from their early days has nothing to do with the fear of being labelled "red". He said that too much socialism can lead to restrictions in the individual's freedom.

Vote But

The "vote as you like but vote" slogan has been hurled at the public somewhat mercilessly during the last few weeks. And for University of Toronto students, the hue and cry will continue till after the Mock Parliament elections this Thursday. We would suggest that any desire to give way to political indigestion or campaign fatigue should be withstood till Friday.

For the first time, elections to the Mock Parliament have been thrown open to the whole campus. Every student is eligible to vote. But the success of such a campus wide campaign will depend entirely upon the number of students who take the time to vote.

The Mock Parliament is potentially at least, one of the more valuable organizations on the campus. Like any other, it is dependent upon student interest to make it successful, but it does offer an opportunity for students to learn about political platforms by taking part in parliamentary debates.

Possibly, the campaign programs presented by the competing parties have lacked the colour which might have been expected and which would have helped to ensure a good vote. At all times they seem to have mirrored the ideas of their big brothers in Ottawa and Queen's Park.

Campus parties have, or should have, a remarkable opportunity not only to follow but form and interpret the basic ideas of their parties. They may not have made the most of their chance in the past, but the future, as always, offers possibilities for change. But the future of campus parties lies in the hands of the students.

We cannot bring ourselves to say "vote as you like, but vote." Just "before you vote, think" — a little.

Not Entirely Blameless

Book Store Story

The following is the First in a Series of Two Articles on the University of Toronto Press Book Store. Opinions Expressed are Not Necessarily those of The Varsity.

By DENISE RICHARDS

From its inauguration two years ago, the University of Toronto Press Book Store has tried to be something more than a text-mart. The shelves of "non-texts", the stationery counter, the seasonal Christmas supplies, the magazine rack and the recent dispensers of food, drink and tobacco have all helped to broaden the interpretation of the Book Store's function in the University.

However, in view of its peculiar position as a University Book Store, it has to concentrate most of its energies on providing the students with necessary texts. But it is in this very respect that it has received so many complaints, and has been accused of inefficiency and a lack of concern for student needs.

In all fairness it must be said that some students and professors interviewed on the subject, although by no means the majority, have expressed their admiration of the "simply marvellous job" done by the Book Store in view of the vast number of titles it handles each year.

But the validity of most of the complaints has been recognizedby the University College Faculty Council. Realizing that "books are essential student tools in the learning enterprise, and that a ready supply of them is equally essential in keeping up with class work and in getting full advantage from lectures, and that many complaints of delays and short supply in textbooks in staff orders had been expressed," the UC Council asked a committee to look into the matter.

The committee discussed very frankly with A. G. Rankin, general manager of the University Press, the complaints and difficulties involved for the Book Store. It was made clear that the Book Store has no other wish than to serve students and staff in this respect, and that although there are many difficulties in the way, the authority would welcome any constructive criticism to this end."

The Council asked this committee to continue to operate as a medium of communication. Professor McCurdy of the Philosophy Department agreed to receive specific written complaints and suggestions.

The necessity for the existence of such a committee indicates that this problem is not one to be ignored. And it would seem that something is very wrong with the Book Store when students are still unable to obtain important texts as late as November. Book Store officials have an explanation for every instance, but in many cases the excuses seem only to indicate inefficiency.

The position is this: all staff members are asked in the spring to send in lists of the books their students will need the following year, with an estimate of the number that will be needed. The Book Store officials then estimate the size of their orders, contact the publishers, and, in theory, that's that.

But in practice there are innumerable complications. Often professors are not appointed until the fall, and thus there is a considerable delay in placing orders. It is difficult to estimate accurately the number of new texts needed. Occasionally Victoria College students complicate matters by buying books at the University Book Store instead of their own. Publishers often promise a certain number of books for a certain date and then find at the last minute that they are unable to fill the order.

The fact remains that the Book Store not only fails to allow for these contingencies, but also errs on the side of caution. Several professors complained that the Book Store had not even ordered enough copies to supply their estimates.

This seems inexcusable, but it is characteristic. The Book Store's delicate financial condition makes it unwilling to risk overstocking. And, in almost every case, it is this excess of caution that seems to be causing the delays.

Further complaints deal with the difficulty in obtaining any specific information from the Book Store employees on when a book that is not in stock can be expected. In other book stores it is common practice to phone the publisher and tell the customer when his order will be filled. This information is not always accurate, but it usually provides the customer with some indication of how long he will have to wait, so that he can make his plans accordingly.

Generally, the "Book Store Girls" have been accused of ignorance and indifference. Perhaps this is unfair, but many examples have been cited which seem to indicate that a more thorough knowledge of the stock and more interest in the problem of the textless student would be appreciated by many people an the campus.

Suggestions of ways to remedy the problems of the Book Store range from "turn it into a student union and give student business to private enterprise" to "have the students take over." Neither of these extremes is really practical. Why? The convenience of having a book store on the campus catering exclusively to student needs cannot be denied. On the other hand, there seems to be a definite need for continuity, if not outright autocracy, in the management of any book store, that could not be provided by a student organization.

It would certainly be of some benefit, however, if a student committee were formed to handle the liaison work between the Book Store officials and the campus. In this way it might be possible to estimate the probable number of used books to be sold each year, and, even more important, find out just how many student are dissatisfied with the Book Store — something that would settle once and for all the question of whether or not students are merely being hypercritical of the services provided.

If this is not done, there seems to be an indication that an increasingly large number of students will buy their texts elsewhere. The Book Store must be prepared to meet its obligations, or face desertion.

On International Education

"Mr. Attempumpher will see you now Mr. Smith." The trim secretary clacked across the marble floor of the newspaper office, erect like a black stick of licorice, horn-rimmed glasses perched on nose, exquisitely long legs, (or is it "Brown" she must be thinking).

I shifted my eyes from her stocking seams, and crumpled my little piece of paper more tightly in my hand.

"Will He?" I spattered. The glance ricocheted off her spectacles.

I was steered across the hall and through the door with the single word painted on it "Editor". Mr. Attempumpher was sitting behind a pile of torn up papers, puffing a cigar and furiously pounding a tyewriter with a fat smoke-yellowed forefinger and his thumb.

"Waal," he grunted without looking up.

"Please, sir, I'm from the UN sir and I . . ." — I'd have to start again. "We've formed a club, sir, at the University, sir, it's called the UN Club and it's holding a Model Security Council and . . ."

"So what?" breathed the hulk behind the desk.

"Please, Mr. Attempumpher, I thought that perhaps the — that it might be possible to tell the people of Toronto about it — because in Canada we really should be interested in the UN so that . . ."

Mr. Attenpumpher was typing again, prodding with considerable dexterity at the keys with the pudgy forefinger.

I got excited.

"I believe that all people are really brothers and the UN is here to prove it," I whinnied, "and the UN has lots of programmes. It helps people to get more to eat and raises their standards of living, and so we're having a Security Council at the University and . . ." I ran out of breath.

The fat man typed on. I began again.

"The UN Club has 80 members and we all believe in the UN and we think that every one should live in peace and there wouldn't be wars and in a Security Council . . ."

"Mr. Attempumpher looked at me through the brown cigar smoke. "Jeezus," he said. He must have heard me, I thought. "Look here," he said, "are there any Communists in this whatever-it-is-club of yours?"

I sat silent. I didn't dare tell him that UN believed that it didn't matter whether people were Communists or not so long as they supported the UN.

"Find out and get out," he roared, "and then come and tell me." He prodded the typewriter.

But I didn't, because it's much easier to write this sort of a piece where the Editor doesn't smoke cigars — and The Varsity doesn't care who is a Communist anyway.

CAMPUS VOTING TODAY

Here we see the people behind the election, John Fairly, Pres. of the Political Science Club, and Claire Bacchus, 4th year Pres., examining some of the ballots and the boxes to be used in today's election.

Set Up 8 Polling Booths In 1st Campus Election

Yesterday Political Science Club President John Fairly announced the final arrangements for the University of Toronto's first Mock Parliament campus election today. It will be conducted from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m., at eight polling stations.

"An attempt was made in every case," said Fairly, "To set up the polling booth in the busiest part of the buildings they are in." In detail, the campus election polling booths are located as follows:

Medical Building — near the medical office.
Skule House — main hall.
Hart House — in the rotunda.
Economics Building — inside the north door.
Victoria College — front hall.
St. Michael's College — main hall.
Trinity College — rotunda.
University College — rotunda.

Besides the deputy returning officer at each booth there will be scrutineers from each of the campus political parties able to find one with the spare time, he said.

When the student picks up his ballot today it will read: "Which of the following parties do you wish to form the government in the Mock Parliament." Then the four recognized parties are listed in alphabetical order with a space left for a cross as in any other election, said Fairly.

He went on to explain the procedure each student must follow in casting his vote. "He must first present his ATL card to the Deputy Returning Officer, who will mark it to prevent the student from going to vote at another polling station. The student will then receive a ballot which he may mark as he pleases, and deposit in the ballot box," he said.

After the election the DRO will open the box and the ballots will be counted at the polling station by the scrutineers. Then the box and the ballots will be taken to room 426 in the Economics Building where the Political Science Club will count them again. The official results of the election will be known by about 3:30 p.m. today.

Fossils, Champagne, Uranium All Traced By Skule Speaker

Canada has greater uranium deposits than even the Belgian Congo, declared one of the world's outstanding geophysicists, Hans Lundburg, at the annual School Dinner in Hart House last night. "With all its undeveloped resources, Canada has better opportunities than any country in the entire world," Mr. Lundburg added.

The speaker, head of his own explorations company, has developed a method of prospecting using electrical instruments, which detect buried ore bodies by measuring the difference in conductivity between them and the surrounding earth.

Besides discovering million-dollar deposits of ore that no one had suspected existed, this process has been used to find (among other things Mr. Lundburg mentioned) buried meteorites, the bones of a man 12,000 years old, and 40 cases of buried champagne.

The speaker also mentioned a new development his company is planning, which will result in a farm crop valued at $350-$400 per acre. He explained that he hopes to "mine" the gold which lies in fine particles in the clay of Indiana by using horse-tails, a plant which can assimilate gold in the ground into the silicon structure of its veins. By refining the plants, he can obtain the gold, which cannot be "mined" in any normal way.

"Many times the old-timers had methods of prospecting which we are just learning to use again," he said. He described how ancient miners found minerals by the taste and smell of the water and vegetation, or the color of flowers in the area. For example, he said, there is a type of flower which grows in a particularly yellow hue when over a lead-zinc deposit.

"This has given rise to a new study called Geochemistry," Mr. Lundburg explained. The new science discovers mineral bodies by analyzing the chemical structure of the soil and vegetation around them. The "horse-tail mining" is an example of the use of this new science, he said.

Mr Lundburg explained how at one time he discovered 40 cases of champagne which had been buried during Prohibition in the United States. The owner's gardener had hidden them when his master had to leave for Paris, he explained, but when the owner returned, his gardener had died of pneumonia. After repeal he had Lunburg search the grounds for them. "We got paid in champagne, too," Lundburg remarked.

The fossil man, at the time the oldest known human skeleton, was discovered in Mexico while on an archaeological trip. Anthropologists who scoffed that the discovery was just luck were convinced of the success of the electrical method when they could find no other bone traces around the discovery, Lundburg said.

In recent years Lundburg has adapted the electrical prospecting method for use by planes. In this way, he said, they can cover 300 and 400 miles a day, instead of only one or two miles. "When we get up in the air, we also lose the interference which bothered us on the

"Communist Tactic" Affects McMaster —Russ Visit Killed

Hamilton (Exchange) — By a slim majority of 23 votes McMaster students have rejected the proposal to bring Russian students to Canadian universities in the near future. A referendum vote was conducted on the McMaster campus yesterday and the results were 203 students voted in favor with 226 voting against.

The total balloting was approximately 50 percent of the student body, according to the McMaster Silhouette. The Silhouette reported that in spite of the figures, feeling on the Russian students reached a high pitch.

The Silhouette said that one of the most significant factors in determining student opinion was a handbill which was distributed to students by an off-campus group on the Saturday before the vote.

The Silhouette added that two young men and a woman, who were not students at McMaster, distributed mimeographed sheets calling on the students to vote in favor of the tour. The organization responsible for this called itself the "Youth Friendship League". Both the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the International Student Service executives at McMaster denied any knowledge of the Youth Friendship League or of its affiliations.

The consensus of opinion amongst students who received the handbill, The Silhouette reported, was that "the whole thing smacked of communist tactics". Many were reported as expressing the view that if outside intervention had not been attempted, they would probably have been more in favor of the tour.

The decision to ask student opinion in the matter was made at a meeting of the Student Council last month. The ballot was worded: "Would you be in favor of a tour of Canadian universities by a group of Russian students?"

Jackson Reviews 40 Years Painting

A. Y. Jackson, one of the "Group of Seven" painters and the founder of the Canadian Group of Painters, spoke yesterday afternoon at the Hart House Art Gallery art talks on Canadian art and western art in particular. He told the mixed audience that he had a particular interest in western art since western painters have had the hardest time. They have done a tremendous amount of work with little encouragement and a lot of determination, he added.

Jackson predicted that Alberta painters are going to put themselves on the map. The paintings presently being exhibited in the gallery are by four Calgary artists: Gregory Arnold, Roy Kiyooka, George Michalcheon, and R. J. Spicket.

The west is going to develop a real school of painting, in Jackson's opinion, which he said may not be Canadian. However, he said that he was not interested in whether or not it was Canadian art as long as the result is good painting. Jackson felt that Canada has too diverse a background for one kind of art.

About 20 years ago, he tried to paint a western town which he had deliberately chosen from the train as being practically hopeless. Jackson described the town as being two grain elevators, an ugly United Church, stores with false fronts, the land as flat as a pancake, sun-bleached and with an ochre sky.

Two miles from this town he said there was one of the most desolate cemeteries he has ever seen, with the only plants being some Russian thistles. After three days Jackson gave up trying to paint the town and left. He said that there was nothing to paint as there were no clouds, rain or storms.

Jackson stated that perhaps the western artists had found the solution to the problem in not paying too much attention to the environment.

He mentioned that the west has no tradition. Charles Russell, "a real cowboy whose works have been reproduced and which hang all over Alberta," was mentioned by Jackson, but he pointed out that the cowboy had vanished from the west and had been replaced by the tractor and the plough. He suggested that artists living in a featureless country might do abstracts.

However, Jackson added that all of the west is not "featureless." He mentioned the foothills and mountains, although he claimed that he doesn't like mountains except as backdrops.

This Group of Seven member felt that the western painters were not making an effort to please the public. Their paintings were not the kind that an oil magnate would buy, nor would "ranchers as ranchers like pretty pictures," said Jackson.

In 1910, Canada sent an exhibition to England, he recalled and the exhibition was a disappointment for the English were expecting to see what the country looked like — "pioneers, cowboys, trappers, mountains and forests," even if they were crude. Instead, Jackson noted, they saw "The Old Mill," "Sunset on the Don," cows and disappointing sentimental stuff. At that time Montreal and Toronto were the only art centers in Canada, with the rest of Canada a desert, he said.

Later, he said, the members of the "Group of Seven" thought that Tom Thomson's sketches were unbelievably beautiful although they were just bush and burnt land — "pretty awful-looking places." Jackson felt it took a great many of the critics 20 years to see beauty while it took lumberjacks 20 minutes.

The "Group of Seven" were not responsible for all that is good in art in Canada, he claimed, but they did make people realize that one can find beauty anywhere in our country. He said this was part of Canada's heritage, part of the amazing things which are being done across Canada.

At Quesnel on the Fraser River, Jackson saw a Picasso made by the local art club which was a copy of Picasso's "Demoiselle d'Avignon." He felt it was rather hard to associate Picasso and Quesnel, he added.

Warden Ignatieff of Hart House said it was good to hear a talk such as this, after the pessimistic remarks on the trends in Canadian culture, and that it was nice to hear that not all Canadians are commercial.

MASTHEAD MEETING

At five p.m. today the last masthead meeting of the year will be held in the usual place, the editorial office. All masthead members are requested to attend: the managing editor, news editor and assistant, makeup editor, feature editor, sports editor and assistant, CUP editor, photo editor and assistant, science editor, music editor, book page editor, and mortician and cartoonist.

Hendry To Succeed Cassidy As Director Of Soc. Work

Prof. Charles E. Hendry has been appointed director of the School Social Work, succeeding the late Dr. Harry Cassidy, President Sidney Smith announced yesterday.

Prof. Hendry has been professor of social work at the university since September, 1946, when he returned to his native Canada after an absence of 20 years in the United States. Immediately prior to his return to Canada he was the Director and Coordinator of Research for the Commission on Community Interrelations of the American Jewish Congress working on a nation-wide action-research programme in the field of inter-cultural relations.

At the same time, Professor Hendry taught in Teachers' College, Columbia University, and served as research associate with the late Kurt Lewin at the Research Centre for Group Dynamics at the Massachusettes Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass., now located at the University of Michigan.

Since his appointment at the University of Toronto, Professor Hendry has become actively related to a variety of important organizations and movements in Canada. He has served as a member of the National Council on Physical Fitness for a three-year term. He has been elected to the Board of Governors of the Canadian Welfare Council and made chairman of its recreation division.

He is also chairman of the Canadian committee on group relations, jointly sponsored by the French and English-speaking Adult Association in Canada. He presided at the organization meeting, and is active in the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. The Canadian Camp Training Centre, held for the first time in June, 1947, at Camp Ahmek in Algonquin Park under Mr. Hendry's direction as a joint undertaking of the Canadian Camping Association, the Canadian Red Cross, and the Canadian Welfare Council, attracted over 2000 camp leaders, representatives of every province in Canada.

In 1948 he acted as commentator on CBC's award-winning network programme "In Search of Citizens" and served in the same capacity for a second series in 1949. Since the fall of 1948, Mr. Hendry has served also as director of the Capital District Recreation Planning Survey, the report of which has now been published.

For the past two years he has directed a research project for the Defense Research Board on welfare in the armed forces.

Professor Hendry was given leave of absence from the University of Toronto for a six-months period in 1950. Working on a team led by Nobel-prize winning physicist, Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Chancellor of Washington University, he visited every country in Western Europe apart from Portugal and Spain and assisted in the development of World Brotherhood.

In this connection, he directed an institute on intergroup Education at UNESCO House in Paris. Later he spent three months studying citizen participation and social policy in Finland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark as a United Nations Fellow, the first person from Canada to receive such an appointment. Last summer he again visited Europe and served as a consultant to two conferences, one at Hattenheim, Germany, and the other at the University of Copenhagen in Denmark. While in Europe, he completed field work for a book on "The Group Factor in World Reconstruction" scheduled for spring publication.

Professor Hendry has retained a number of connections in the USA including membership on the Committee on Citizenship Participation of the Community Chests and Councils, Inc., and the Board of Publications of Association Press (National Council YMCA). For the past two years he has served as vice-president of the Association for the Study of Community Organization.

Professor Hendry, who was born and raised in Ottawa, received his B.A. degree at McMaster University in 1925, and was for years associated with Taylor Statten in Boys' Work in Alberta and in his camps in Algonquin Park. After graduate training at Columbia University (both Teachers' College and Union Theological Seminary) where he received M.A. degrees in 1928 and at the University of Chicago, he was for eight years on the faculty of George Williams College, Chicago.

He has held a variety of significant posts in the United States including that of Director of Research for the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America and Director of Program and Personnel for the Boys' Clubs of America. He has written extensively on camping, on group work, and on community organization, and is known from coast to coast throughout America as a leader in the social work field.

During the summer of 1946, in association with Dr. Margaret Mead, he was Director of the Wellesley School of Community Affairs at Wellesley College, and during the summers of 1948 and 1949 he served as visiting professor on the faculty at New York University. His major responsibility at the University of Toronto is teaching and research in the field of community organization. During two periods, one when the late Director of the School of Social Work was on U.N. duty in Egypt and again during his last illness, Professor Hendry served as acting Director of the School.

Incomplete Result To China Debate —UN Club Council

A proposal by the Russian delegate to admit Red China to the United Nations, amended by France to read: "when the People's Government of China shows its willingness to co-operate with the UN", was debated inconclusively at a Mock Security Council meeting of the UN club last night.

D. Turnbull, III SPS, as representative for Russia proposed that "Whereas a person who believes he is the representative of China does not represent China at all and has no authority from the right Chinese government, be it resolved that the delegate appointed by the People's Government of China be recognized as the Chinese representative to the UN."

The French delegate, Devid Trent, II Trinity, proposed the amendment that the Chinese Reds be admitted only when they "recognize the authority of the UN."

As a result of the amendment, India and Yugoslavia voted against the motion although they had spoken in favour of the original Russian proposal. Russia abstained because of the French amendment. China and the USA also abstained. Canada, France, Pakistan, the UK, and Norway voted in favour of the amended motion.

Egypt walked out of the meeting because the agenda was not accepted in proper procedural method.

Although none of the Big Five exercised their veto, the motion was not carried. It is necessary to have an overall majority of seven to carry a proposal in the Security Council. There were only five votes for the Russian suggestion.

Meeting in the auditorium of the Women's Union building, the Mock Security Council was the culmination of several weeks discussion by the newly formed UN club. Members have been meeting in eleven groups, representing the Big Five and six other nations chosen by the club. The opinions expressed by the delegates at last night's meeting are those developed by the members attempting to truly represent the policies of the nations concerned.

Ali Tayeb, grad, acted as chairman as well as member for Pakistan on the council. President of the UN club, Roland de Corneille, Trinity, was Secretary-General.

John Tinker, III SPS, represented the USA as being against the Russian proposal which he branded as "obstructionist tactics."

The UK delegation and member, J. Quittner, III SPS, were categorically for recognition of Red China, but felt that "since the People's Republic of China is fighting UN forces in Korea they cannot now be given a seat."

Vote To Keep Women Out Of Commerce Club

The University of Toronto Commerce Club has remained a "male stronghold" after an open meeting of its members failed yesterday to ratify an amendment which would have made all students proceeding to the degree of Bachelor of Commerce eligible for membership in the club. President Ian Baker told the members of the club who attended the luncheon in Diana Sweets that their "traditions will be retained" after a vote of 35 to 35 failed to provide the necessary two-thirds majority.

John Corkill, IV Commerce, said that there was an old axiom that to be interested in women is to be perpetually broke. Therefore he argued that the meeting was unconstitutional and was not a representative meeting since only the monied class (the luncheon cost 75 cents) could attend, and those attending were therefore not interested in women. His objection was over-ruled by MacDonald since the constitution merely called for a ten per cent turnout of members and made no mention of Corkill's objection.

The amendment had allowed for all male and all female activities and would not have spoiled activities such as the squash tournament in Hart House or, MacDonald gave as an example, a knitting circle if the club had accepted female members. He said that there had been spasmodic attempts by the coeds to join the club since its inception in 1920.

He described this year's attempt as aggressive and well organized. The amendment was presented to the general membership after being approved unanimously by the Commerce Club executive.

Paul Baker, public relations executive for the Toronto Transportation Commission, spoke to the club on Toronto's new subway and illustrated his talk with slides. Baker estimated that the subway would cost within 5 per cent of 40 million dollars, although originally both the Young and the Queen St. subways were estimated at 50 million. He attributed the increased cost to the rise in prices and wages since 1944, but also said that this would be the first subway in the world to be built without a bonus or grant from government.

Yonge St. carries more people than any other surface line in the world, Baker said, and then he showed figures to illustrate his point. Despite this, he claimed that if the street cars were not slowed down by private traffic, they would be able to run on a schedule that would provide a seat for everyone, even during rush hours.

With this method, he has discovered several large deposits of minerals in Sweden, Newfoundland, and Arizona, to name a few. One of them was under a bog; another 12 miles from a railway, in country supposed to have been carefully investigated before.

He is now using aeroplanes in search for uranium. With an instrument 80 times as efficient as a Geiger Counter, his men are able to detect from the air uranium deposits the size of wooden chips, he said.

Editor Attacks Editors

The reputation of the press will be up for discussion at the next Hart House debate, to be held Dec. 12, said Hart House debates publicity director. Subject of the debate will be "Resolved that this House regards the Press as a monument to human folly."

Guest speaker will be Ralph Allan, Editor of Maclean's Magazine. Mr. Allan is reported by Hart House officials to be supporting the motion — that is, attacking the press of which he, as head of "Canada's National Magazine" is a member.

The motion will be supported by Ken Jarvis and Vern Turner, both IV UC. They will be opposed by M. Mogan, III St. Mike's and Ian Montagnes, III UC, News Editor of The Varsity. Speaker of the House will be Elmer Sopha, II Law.

This is the third Hart House debate of the current season, and the 102nd in the House's history. It will be held in the Hart House Debates Room at 8 p.m. next Wednesday.

REDUCED RAILWAY FARE FOR CHRISTMAS VACATION

The Canadian Passenger Association has announced that reduced fare arrangements have now been authorized for the Christmas and New Year vacation period. Students and members of the teaching staff may obtain at College and Faculty offices forms which will permit them to buy a return ticket at current normal one-way fare and one-half.

These forms carry the dates of the University vacation period, December 21st to January 7th, and no member of the University staff has any authority to alter these dates.

Carols, Gifts At Xmas Tree In Hart House

The Blue and White Society is planning the second annual Christmas Tree in the Great Hall of Hart House on Dec. 13, according to Len Martin, chairman of the committee. Martin emphasized that the event will be completely informal, and that unescorted coeds were welcome to come to Hart House on this occasion. Last year the Christmas Tree was held in Convocation Hall.

There will be no lights in the Great Hall, Martin said, except for a Yule log fire in the large fireplace. The Glee Club will sing several Christmas carols, he said, but most of the evening the audience will participate in the carol singing.

Since the floor of Hart House might be cold, he suggested that those coming could bring a blanket to sit on as there will be very few chairs.

Music Saves Talk As Frosh Oriented At Trinity Dance

There was a lot of music, little talking, and no faculty members at the third Freshman Orientation Tea Dance, held in Trinity College's Buttery yesterday afternoon.

This is the third dance in the series designed to introduce freshmen of the various arts colleges to each other, and to faculty members.

The dance series is the outcome of an effort begun last spring to plan an integrated freshman reception for the fall. When the proposal was brought up at the Students' Council, it was decided to hold a pilot run of the scheme in the four Arts colleges this year, and to extend the plan to the rest of the university next fall if it proved successful.

When the college representatives met last spring, however, they could come to no decision regarding plans for the orientation scheme. A proposal made by some graduates and faculty members included lectures and discussion groups with the faculty on such subjects as the purpose of the university, and the place of the university in modern society. This would not conflict with the college receptions, it was pointed out, since the "academic" portion of the reception could be held entirely in the mornings.

In the early fall, representatives of the four colleges suggested a series of four tea dances to the SAC, each one to be held by one of the colleges, at which students and faculty could mix.

"The dances will be lots of chairs and little dancing," explained Paul Forestall, IV St. Mike's, one of the proponents of the scheme. Instead of dancing all the time, he said, freshmen could sit and talk with professors. The dance would be used only to break down formality.

The plan was adopted by the SAC, which turned it over to its Co-Ordination Committee. This committee played no part in the organization of the Trinity dance, which was planned by the Trinity first year presidents, Ruth Charlesworth and Barry Baker.

So far there have been three dances held. The first one at St. Mike's had about ten faculty members present (according to Forestall), but due to bad publicity only St. Mike's freshmen were present. The second was held at University College Nov. 23. That time publicity was good, and over 100 students turned out. But because the letters were mailed late, only one faculty member was present.

Baha'u'llah, Christ The Same; From One God Claims Baha'i

Quoting from the BAHA'I scriptures to show the relationship between Baha'u'llah, the prophet of the Baha'i Faith, and Christ the centre of the Christian religion, Don Nablo, IV Sociology said, "No distinction do we make between any of His Messengers." The topic of the meeting of the Baha'i Student Group yesterday was "Baha-u'llah equals Christ."

"These messengers of God are all sent down from the heaven of the Will of God, and as they all proclaim His irresistible Faith, they, therefore are regarded as one soul and the same person. For they all drink from the one Cup of the love of God, and all partake of the fruit of the same Tree of Oneness." Thus Baha'is believe in the Progressive Revelation of God's Will to man. Each of the Founders of the great world religions is believed to speak with the voice of God. Each lives a life which perfectly exemplifies the attributes of God. Therefore the Baha'is believe that to reject any of the Manifestations of God is to implicitly reject all of the Messengers of God of the past.

To show the parallels between the life of Baha'u'llah and the life of Christ, quotations from the writings of Abdul-Baha, and some of Baha'u'llah were cited. "Baha'u'llah was a prisoner twenty-five years. During this time He was subjected to the indignities and revilement of the people. He was persecuted, mocked and put in chains. He bore all these ordeals and calamities in order that our hearts might become enkindled and radiant, our spirits be glorified, our faults become virtues, our ignorance transformed into knowledge."

Thus according to the Baha'is the essential spiritual teachings of Baha'u'llah and Christ are the same since their source is in the same God. They are equally infallible and equally adapted to the needs of the particular people to whom they were sent by God. So it is in terms of their relationship with God and their purpose in being sent to the world of humanity that Baha'u'llah and Christ are said to be equal. Their teaching differ in that they are adapted to different peoples in different times.

French Films Shown Monthly By Cine-Club

The University College French Department implemented a plan this year to supplement the efforts of theatres like the International Cinema to show French movies. The "Cine-club" has been presenting two showings to select films at the Museum Theatre on the first Friday of each month.

The films are shown without subtitles, but with programme notes. The feature presentation, such as "Symphonie Pastorale" and "Quai des Orfevres", are accompanied by shorter, prize-winning films, "Goemon", a documentary about seaweed-gathering and its effects on the men who lived in lonely isolation on a small island, was presented at the first show.

The club has now gone into the production end of films. A film intended for distribution to high schools of one of the stories from "Cour Moyen, Part II", the textbook prepared by Principal Jean-Ceret is being prepared for use in high schools. Michael Sanouillet, its director, has his own theories on the art of film-making.

..."Cinema is the world's newest art medium, and perhaps the most versatile. At best, it can combine many of the distinctive qualities of painting, literature and drama. While it may lack the beauty of colour and depth, it has gripping life, and an unequalled vastness of scope in subject matter and treatment", he said.

"One result of cinema's coming into its own as an art, is that now no study of a national culture can be complete without some acquaintance with the country's films," he felt. "This is particularly true of French culture, because the film industry of France has reached a particularly high standard of quality. The excellence of French films has almost become a legend in places where people have little opportunity for seeing them and forming more concrete opinions."

SCM Of Toronto Will Visit Kansas

Approximately 25 Toronto students will be going to the Quadrennial Conference at the University of Kansas to discuss "Christians in a world in struggle", according to Rev. Roy DeMarsh, general secretary of the Student Christian Movement on the campus.

DeMarsh said that two groups have been meeting all this term to study a book by Dr. D. T. Niles of Ceylon, titled "That They May Have Life", and to generally study the opportunity for missionary work on the various frontiers at home and abroad. Films have been shown, he said, at the School of Missions on St. George St. to illustrate the work being done overseas.

DeMarsh said the group plans to charter a bus and would leave on Dec. 26 and return on Jan. 2. When they come back, he said that the group would give accounts and impressions to various campus groups and churches of their trip.

The conference meets every four years, he reported, and is usually an exceedingly large gathering of students (he estimated about two thousand will attend this conference).

DeMarsh estimated that in the past over 20,000 students have gone to the world mission fields after attending these conferences during the 64 years in which they have been held. The international situation is making it necessary for the Church to review the missions and to discover social and occupational frontiers at home and abroad rather than seeing only the challenges of geographical frontiers, he said.

DeMarsh explained that the international work of the UN and reconstruction plans such as the Colombo Plan suggested some of the new areas towards which Christian technicians and professional people are looking as effective areas for Christian witness missions.

FORESTRY AWARD

President Sidney Smith yesterday announced the award of the $250 Forestry Memorial Scholarship to R. D. Griffith, son of Dr. B. A. Griffiths of the Extension Department.

The award was established ten years ago by alumni and friends of the Faculty of Forestry staff in memory of deceased graduates and undergraduates. It was awarded to Griffiths on the basis of his standing in Grade XIII at North Toronto Collegiate last June.

Carol Singers Tour Campus

Christmas carol singers, complete with lanterns, will tour the campus Dec. 15, as part of the campaign to "Bring Christ back to Christmas".

The group will start at the museum at 7:15 that evening, and in the next two and a quarter hours serenade Annesley Hall, Burwash Hall, Trinity College, the University Men's Residence, St. Hilda's College, Whitney Hall and the Knox Fellowship House.

The Varsity Christian Fellowship, which is organizing the Carol Sing, explains that the emphasis at the end will be the fellowship that all those who take part can find when it is finished over a hot drink.

Fellowship Awarded

William C. Winegard, Graduate Studies, has been awarded the $1,000 T. A. Russell Memorial Fellowship for the third successive year, President Sidney Smith announced yesterday.

The fellowship, sponsored by the Canada Cycle and Motor Company and the Canadian Acme Screw and Gear Company, is offered to encourage research in physical metallurgy.

Science Notes

What's in a Name?

By BILL RAYNER

Poets and musicians have long sung of the magic incorporated in the names of far-off places. To me there is also a magic in the mysterious and sometimes unpronounceable names of the rarer chemical elements: Thulium, Dysprosium, Krypton, Praseodymium, Ytterbium, and the rest.

The lucky chemist develops at least a nodding acquaintance with these unknowns, but to those outside the fold most of them remain a pleasant sounding mystery.

Take for example Beryllium, one of the rarer alkaline-earth metals which was discovered by Vaugelin in 1798. It occurs in the mineral beryl, a silicate of alumina and beryllia. This ore is familiar to us in some of its colored forms, known as emeralds and aquamarines.

In appearance, Beryllium is a steel grey metal, extremely hard, one third lighter than aluminum, and melts at 1350 degrees Centigrade. It is seventeen times more transparent to X-rays than aluminum, and so is used in the construction of X-ray tubes. Recently its properties have been utilized in electrodes for neon signs.

Until 1923 very little was known about this metal, and investigation was begun to determine what part it could play in the rapidly developing alloy metal field. It has been combined principally with copper, aluminum, and iron. In its commercially pure state, Beryllium is extremely brittle, but when two per cent is alloyed with copper there is a resulting increase in tensile strength of 230 per cent. Beryllium in alloys produces many other desirable effects, such as improved electrical conductivity, resistance to salt water corrosion, and increased hardness. The density of castings is increased due to the elimination of gas holes.

Beryllium-copper has a very high resistance to fatigue failures caused by repeated loads. Because of this and other desirable properties it is perhaps the most common of the Beryllium alloys. Its uses include brushes for electric motors, heavy shock springs required in aircraft landing gear, and pump used in the transfer of corrosive fluids. Because of its acoustic properties, it is even suitable for use in musical instruments.

Beryllium and its compounds have been shown to be toxic under certain conditions. This fact has restricted its use commercially in recent years.

And then there is Zirconium. . . .

Computers Save Men —Dr. Ratz

"As surely as James Watt's steam engine was the vanguard of the industrial revolution, today's electronic computers herald the decline and fall of the overworked bookkeeper." So said Dr. A. G. Ratz introducing the topic of "Electronic Brains" to a joint meeting of the student members of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Institute of Radio Engineers which was held Tuesday evening in the Wallberg Building.

He was describing the model computer which has been built for the University Computation Centre and recently moved to the Mining Building. 800 vacuum tubes go to make up this modern electronic brain, which can perform ordinary arithmetical operations at a rate of 25,000 times that of a human, and can detect and correct its own errors.

This machine, nicknamed "UTEC", has an infallible memory for anything mathematical. It is only in the model stage, so far, and the prototype will cost over $300,000 when it is completed, under the direction of Doctors Gottlieb, Rose and Katz.

The soloists will be James Beer, bass, and Barbara Franklin, soprano. Keith Girard, the conductor, is well qualified for his responsible position by his training in the Faculty of Music at this university, where he received his degree of Bachelor of Music last year.

In the orchestral part of the program, the most familiar piece is Mozart's Jupiter Symphony. Regarding its interpretation, conductor Girard says: "If the composer is dead, we don't always know". (Mozart has been dead for 160 years.) He illustrates his point by citing the two different interpretations of this symphony by Toscanini and Beecham, both of them very highly regarded conductors. Toscanini tends to take the fast movements at a good clip, whereas Beecham prefers a more deliberate pace.

Gluck's melodious overture to "Alceste" is the prelude to a tragic opera, which is to be revived by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York this year for the first time in many seasons. Faure's Pavane is a more modern piece. A Pavane was originally a stately dance, imitating the peacock's walk. Faure's modern version of it is a sort of walking piece.

Faust and Devil

Mephistopheles comes to collect Faustus' soul according to the contract agreed between the two earlier. The U.C. Players Guild are presenting Marlowe's FAUSTUS on a bill of one-act plays to be presented by the UTDC on the first two days of the next term.

FAUSTUS appears on Monday, Jan. 7 with EVERYBODY'S HUSBAND. On Tuesday, Jan. 8, the Trinity, Vic and St. Mike's drama clubs are presenting scenes from VICTORIA REGINA, George Bernard Shaw's HOW SHE LIED TO HER HUSBAND, and an old morality play EVERYMAN.

These plays are acted, directed and produced by students and tickets are 50 cents each.

Marshall Concert Sunday

he second of this year's Wymil- d Concerts will be given by the l-known young Toronto soprano, s Marshall. As usual, the con- t will begin at 9:00 p.m., on day, December 9.

ince her first public appear- es in this city only about three rs ago, Miss Marshall has made remarkable career for herself. has been hailed by the press all parts of Canada as one of great artists of the coming neration, and was equally en- usiastically acclaimed by the ess in Cleveland and in Washing- n, where she has recently appear- d.

Miss Marshall first burst on To- nto audiences with her sensa- nal performance of the soprano solo part in the St. Matthew Pas- n in the 1948 performance. She s continued to sing this part in subsequent performances, and in addition has taken solo parts in Bach's B Minor Mass and in the Verdi Requiem.

Miss Marshall has also made her mark in the operatic field, taking the part of Leonora in Beethoven's "Fidelio" and Donna Anna in Mozart's "Don Giovanni" in the CBC Opera Company performances of these works.

A versatile and sensitive artist, Lois Marshall is one of those fortunate musicians who has achieved personal distinction and recognition in her own home city. Her appearance on the Wymilwood Series is her third on the campus in as many years. University students are lucky in being able to hear one of Canada's foremost singers once again.

Good Old Rawhide Back On The Air

Millions cheered as old Rawhide returned to the radio last Monday at his old time, 6:40 p.m. At least so it seemed to that venerable philosopher. After a little trouble over going on the air the old fellow dozed off and dreamt that he was making a Royal Tour of Canada. Millions were on hand to welcome him to his old stamping-ground, Halifax.

Naturally, all the boys were there to report this event for the CBC, Marvin, the director of the company, was on the roof of Pier 21 and though he never actually saw the precession he described the glee of the spectators as they bashed in the doors of cars left on the parade route.

The city hall commentator got on the air without knowing it and almost disgraced the CBC but fortunately someone had a recording of an old German folk-song to cover up for him. Peter Lorre reported the proceedings from under the steps of the city hall. The whole broadcast came to an abrupt end when the city hall commentator smiled at Rawhide and was cut down by the body-guard of Mounties. Rawhide woke up at this point in time to take the program off the air.

All of which goes to prove that there is no keeping the old fellow off the air. The CBC tried and failed, so we can hear his pungent comments about life, literature and music. The program is on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings—twenty to seven on CBL.

Drama Club 3-Act Play In January

The Victoria College Dramatic Society has completed casting for its next major production, J. B. Priestley's "An Inspector Calls." Rehearsals have begun and three performances will be given in Hart House theatre on January 10, 11 and 12.

An Inspector Calls has been widely rated as one of the finest products of Priestley's pen. The setting is a dinner party given by a wealthy family in the year 1912. The engagement of the daughter has just been announced when the Inspector interrupts the party with the news that a girl has just killed herself.

He proceeds to illustrate the manner in which each member of the family has aided in driving the girl to suicide. As the action proceeds the action seems to resolve itself in a straightforward manner, though with considerable suspense, until the sudden denouement with its stunning O'Henry twist.

The play is directed by Don Glen, who starred in "The Guardsman" two years ago. Since then Glen has appeared in stage productions on the Continent and in the United States, where last year he played opposite Claudette Colbert.

The difficult title role has been assigned to George McGowan, who is perhaps the best-known undergrad theatrical figure on the campus, and an actor noted for his uniformly good performances.

Others in the cast include Barbara Walker, Douglas Quirk, Gloria Gillies, Kenneth Green, Jack Rutherford, and Ann Bradley.

Ticket sales start Monday, Dec. 10 in Alumni Hall, Victoria College. Students 85c, others $1.25.

Winter Concert

Thursday, December 13 is the day of the UC Music Club's Winter Concert. Bill Kotcheff, president of the Music Club has announced that it will be an outstanding musical evening.

Pianist Naomi Socol will perform selections from Mozart's and Chopin's works. Miss Socol, a pupil of Mona Bates, is a Kiwanis prize winner. Another talented soloist on the program will be Walter Babiak, who will play the violin and viola.

Coloratura soprano June Rowat has taken part in UC Music Club productions in the past, including "The Red Mill", and "Naughty Marietta", in which she sang the title role. Miss Rowan will sing selections from "The Messiah", several arias, as well as the popular Solveig Song by Grieg.

The UC Singers are a versatile group of thirty mixed voices. For the Winter Concert these singers have chosen well-known favorites of the season, including "Winter Wonderland", and "The Sleigh." They are also including among their selections "Jesu Bambino" and many foreign carols. A Bach chorale is also to be sung on the program.

"Choral singing is in slow retrogression on the campus", said Kotcheff, "and this selection should then be a double enjoyment both for its rarity and for its excellence." The US Singers will be conducted by Graham Jackson, vice-president of the club, and accompanied by Bill Robinson.

Hart House Film Showing

Another in the regular Thursday noon hour showings of films in the East Common Room of Hart House will be held today. This time the films are sponsored by the Hart House Art Committee. Two films in color will be shown — "Color in Clay", an eleven minute film on ceramics, and "Painters of Quebec", an eighteen minute film on seven French-Canadian artists, Suzor-Cote, Gagnon, Masson and Bieler.

All members of Hart House are welcome to attend these showings. Two performances will be given, one at 12:30 and the other at 1:30.

Lacrosse Finals

The first game of the Intramural lacrosse finals will be played at 1 p.m. in the main gym, Hart House. Meds I, last year's champions will meet the UC squad in the series to decide this season's title holder. The second tilt, of the two out of three series, will be held next Monday, with the third game, if necessary, on Wednesday. The Medsmen won the title last year by trouncing Victoria in two straight.

UC Soccerites Edge Out Trinity 2-1 In Exciting Contest Gives Redmen Title

Penalty Shot

UC takes a penalty shot on the Trinity goal in the Interfaculty soccer final yesterday. The ball, in case you haven't got microscopic vision, lies between two Trinity men, Doug Andison(facing camera) and one other.

By FRED FISCHEL

UC defeated Trinity in the soccer finals yesterday, in very exciting game, by a score of 2-1. This is the first t UC has won the Intramural soccer championship sin 1901. The Red and White got their winning margin goal by hockey star Jack McKenzie, scored after a nift of passing in front of the Trinity goalmouth, mid through the second half.

The game was almost of inter-collegiate calibre featuring good passes and fancy footwork, and the outcome hung in suspense right up to the final whistle. Though Trinity had a more experienced team, UC made up for it by pressing hard all through the game and checking the Trinity forwards very closely.

The action was a bit slow at the beginning with very ragged passing, and far too much bodily contact. Trinity took a 1-0 lead early in the first half, when Tim Clarkson scored on a pass from Doug Andison. It was a rather weak shot that got past UC's goalie, bounced off the post, and rolled into the net. Seconds later Clarkson and Jackson of Trinity almost scored again but Brauer made spectacular saves in the UC goal. After this the play was carried to the Trinity end of the field and Russell came close to tying it up.

At this point the tide changed and except for one rush by Hugh Rowan, the Trinity captain, UC dominated the play. They were in scoring position several times but couldn't find the range, over-shooting the goal on several occasions until Trelving finally pushed the ball in during a scramble in the Trinity goalmouth. Achim Doering, playing fullback for UC made a lot of difference to his team by breaking up most of Trinity's rushes and accurately passing out to his forwards.

Both teams had good scoring chances during the rest of the game but neither could gain the lead though some shots went wide by inches. Both goalies played a great game featuring spectacular saves and the half ended with the score still tied at 1-1.

Trinity pressed hard right from the beginning of the second half carrying the ball deep into UC territory on some fancy passing but the UC fullbacks cleared the ball time after time without allowing them a chance to shoot. After a few minutes the UC forwards found themselves again and the game was confined to the middle of the field with the teams breaking up each other's rushes.

Finally Dan Lyznyk of UC broke through and after unsuccessfully trying to shoot, he passed to Stan Dalnoki who in turn passed to Jack McKenzie, McKenzie made no mistake, and drove it right into the net for what proved to be the winning goal. Though the score was now 2-1 in their favor, UC played as though the result of the game hung in balance, and only minor miracles performed by the Trinity goalie kept the ball out of the net.

In the dying minutes of the game Trinity caught fire, but with Lady Luck's help UC stayed ahead. Rowan and Cater just missed by inches, and Clarkson hit the top of the goal with a hard drive. The game ended with the ball at the UC goal with about four Trinity men trying desperately to boot it in. It was as close as that.

Interfac Boxing, Wrestling Underway

WRESTLING

Five matches in the Junior Interfaculty Wrestling Tournament were run off yesterday. These were preliminaries in the finals which will be held in Hart House as a part of Saturday's Athletic Night. The eliminations will continue today.

There was a turnout of about 40 or so fans, about all the wrestling room will hold, who were rewarded by five peppy bouts.

The first contest was in the 167 pound class and brought together MacKenzie of Meds and Irv Salsberg of PHE. MacKenzie pinned his opponent at 2:13 of the first round. At 157 pounds, Pete Nichols, PHE, hooked up with Scales, Forestry, in a fast bout that Nichols won by flattening Scales with one second to go in the first round. Also at 157, Danny Cucin of Phe and Morison of Forestry went the limit, Cucin getting the nod on points, 3-2.

There were two matches in the 147-pound class. Taylor from SPS beat Toy of Vic, taking a fall at the 40 second mark of the second round. Phelan of Skule and Deck of Meds fought in the same division with Phelan taking the win by a fall at 1:18 of the first.

BOXING

The first four matches of the Novice Interfaculty Boxing Tournament were held last night at five p.m. in the boxing room in Hart House. All four of them were preliminary bouts. The bouts were in the 130 lb., 140 lb., 155 lb., and heavyweight class.

The 130 lb. fight was between D. Hill from Vic and B. Blanchard from SPS, Blanchard winning by unanimous decision. The bout started off pretty evenly, and though Hill had an advantage in reach over Blanchard the latter was more aggressive. From the second round on the scrappy little Skuleman started crowding his opponent and finished with a definite advantage.

In the 140 lb. match, J. Fedder from Dents earned a split decision against E. C. Lett from UC, though he also had to overcome his opponent's advantage of reach. It was an exciting bout, for apart from the difference in size both contestants were very evenly matched.

The 155 lb. semi-final between H. Tilson from U.C. and S. Herzog from Architecture, which Tilson won by a split decision, featured some very good boxing, though it was slightly onesided during the first two rounds, with Tilson being the aggressor and Herzog limiting himself to counterpunching. Towards the end though, Herzog started to mix it up and if he hadn't run out of steam he might have taken the decision.

In the heavyweight bout R. Stevenson from SPS earned a unanimous decision over J. Butler from Meds. Stevenson was much faster than his opponent and displayed a style of boxing seldom seen in the heavyweight class. Butler's shuffling flatfooted style of boxing wasn't as effective as it might have been had he taken full advantage of his superior weight in counterpunching.

The other semifinals will be fought today at 5 p.m. in the boxing gym. The three judges yesterday were Bob Dnieper, Norm Green and Pete Petcoff, and the third man in the ring was Tony Canzano.

Interfaculty Swim Meet

The Junior Interfaculty Swim Meet will take place in the Hart House pool at 7 p.m. tonight. This meet was won by Pre-Meds last year, who compiled more points than all the opposition put together. McIlroy and Langer were the big guns for the Medsmen last year, taking two first apiece and breaking three records.

Forestry B hockey team won a decisive victory over Meds IV yesterday by a score of 11-1. The Woodsmen took a 3-1 first period lead and never loked back. Tomlin scored five times for Forestry with Gregory, Earle, Shannon, Waddell, Briggs and Halliday each getting one goal. Claman scored the lone Meds tally.

In another hockey game Dents blanked SPS VII by an impressive 5-0 score. Nelson and Murdock got all the scoring for Dents, getting three and two goals respectively with Glenny, Meek and Kincaid being credited with assists.

"The time has come, the coaches said,
To talk of sportive skills . . .
Of trains and trips and referees,
Of basketball and its thrills."
—(With apologies to L. Carroll)

And thus it is that with the coming of the winter season the minds of sports-minded femmes turn lightly thoughts of basketball . . . in inter-collegiate terms that is. Practices for the girl's Varsity Basketball team begin today Dec. 6 at 5:30 p.m. in the Ryerson gym on Gould St., and coach Micki Barnett is looking for a goodly number of potential all-stars to turn out.

The Varsity girls have been Inter-collegiate champs for the last 3 consecutive years and high hopes are held for another stellar team this season. A week-end tournament in which Western, McGill, Toronto and Queen's will battle it out for the coveted championship, has been planned for early in the new year (late Jan. or early Feb.). The meet is to be held at Queen's and the Blue and White will have some tough competition on their hands from rivals determined to break their winning-streak.

A few exhibition games will be played at McMaster, but the dates of these tilts have not as yet been decided upon. The coming season promises to be an exciting one, so come on out gals, everybody is welcome, this is your chance to show sportive tendencies in what any meds student would recommend as healthful recreation. And remember, Freshies are especially welcome.

ould the Peace Council and U.N. Club amalgamate? This ion should be answered by student on the campus who erested in peace in the world the spirit of democracy in ubs on their campus. Beend of this letter it the be clear that this question mportance to more than the bers of the two clubs in-essential difference between these two clubs is that one rimarily interested in doing thing about the U.N. and other in doing something peace. The U.N. Club dis- topics currently debated U.N. Assembly and Lake ss. In times like these such are related to the questioin peace. The Peace Council on other hand not only or- discussions on some of questions arising from U.N. e, but other subjects, for in- his year's final meeting was "World Federalism", year much of the discussion bout the "Five Power Peace However the Peace Coun- was organized in the begin- distinct from the U.N. so actions might be taken, so the discussions might pro- a larger effort than print in Varsity.

illustrate this point we can are how the two clubs ap- h the question of the recog- n of China. The U.N. Club year discusses admission of to the Security Council. year the Peace Council col- nearly 100 signatures to a ition sent to our government ing recognition of the Chinese ple's Republic. Both activities worthwhile, both work for —but the U.N. Club can't everything the Peace Council do—and the Peace Council ot present the U.N. to the ous in the formal way that U.N. does, without a change s character of work.

ecognizing this, why does e Council Chairman Dennis ep and his executive want malgamation with the U.N. ? Why does Bishop try to r the former executive in an mpt to prove the Peace Coun- has a bad name? He insinu- it was a secret organization he did not receive a min- book—(he was told frankly there wasn't one but he ld look up Peace Council ac- ty in The Varsity if he was ly keen) nor a list of past mbers (which was withheld for obvious reasons). Why does shop have to get a whole new herd of stampeding fifty-cent engineers, every time he needs the vote? Why does he get fewer "new" members out to a serious discussion on World Federalism than "old" members?

Why? Because he really isn't at all interested in promoting discussion on action for Peace; on the contrary he wants to impede such discussion! Because he and his executive are phoney from the top down—they know it—the campus knows it and he wants to get out before he gets shamed out. It is reported that Bishop recently complained to the Engineering Society that they got him into this; now—would they please get him out! Over the phone he admitted to the writer that the executive were hard put to find speakers for open meetings. It turned out they were hard put even to plan a meeting —the best they could dream up was "amalgamation". No wonder the Globe and Mail backed this guy. He's one of Hiram's boys!

The initial responsibility for permitting such machined democracy to exist on the campus rests on the Caput. It is ruled by the letter of the law of constitutional democracy rather than by its spirit. Result: one big lemon.

The immediate responsibility for the continued existence of the lemon rests with the students. If we want a straight forward Peace Council on the campus, both for its clubs, we have to join the Peace Council at a rapid rate. We have to dispose of the present executive and elect a new one which will set out to produce a program that will contribute to studies of and action on Peace. This must be done at the next business meeting of the Council. It is up to the students to decide whether the U. of T. is to have a Peace Council or not.

Don N. Anderson,
IV Meds.

Varsity Symphony

All these pieces are written for a small standard symphony orchestra, such as the University of Toronto Symphony. The orchestra consists of 35 musicians, distributed among string and doubled wood-wind and brass sections. Some musicologists maintain that double wind is desirable in the performance of eighteenth-century orchestral music, such as the Mozart and Gluck on Sunday's program.

Sunday's concert is to be held in Convocation Hall, beginning at 8:30 p.m. Admission is free to all comers.

ELECTION LETTERS

Giles Report

Editor, The Varsity:

I think some explanation is in order for the so-called Giles Report on the liquor situation. As a non-party man I was pleased when the MacDonald-Cartier Club adopted my report. Unfortunately, owing to the circumstances of its presentation, the philosophy behind this report has not been given, so perhaps I may waste a little of your space in putting forward my personal defence of the report.

I have a most basic belief in the freedom of the individual and in the sanctity of the family relationship, but I realize that there are occasions when the state must limit the individual's freedom for the common good. But the justified control by the state, is justified only by its necessity and by the fact that it limits itself to the material. Thought control I find unjustified and personally repulsive. How is this connected with the liquor situation? In this way. The state limitation of drinking is, to my mind, far beyond the regime of necessity. It is in the realm of downright infringement upon the basic freedom of the individual by a group of persons who wish to inflict their own views on a minority (perhaps even a majority). The present laws, in practice, serve only to force up the price of drink and to make drinking something daring. I can think of no non-dogmatic reason why it should not be easy to have a drink with one's meals or at any other time without food.

The law prohibiting those under 21 to drink, I feel, is an infringement upon the rights of the family — a child should be taught by his parents how to drink (or not to). What right has the state to interfere with a branch of education which can be managed quite easily by other and older institutions?

The CCF policy of nationalization of all drink producers is not justified by their usual claim of cutting prices by reducing capitalist inefficiency or by eliminating monopoly profit. They are going to nationalize distilleries to prevent advertising and will use the profits to educate the public in such a manner as to eliminate eventually all drinking. Coming from a long line of total abstainers I appreciate their disapproval of liquor. But to force one's own ideas on others is not democracy. It is totalitarianism. To depart from an attempt at objective education by using the schools and other educational media to foster the views of a faction, be it even a majority faction, is illiberal. It is a rank attempt at thought control. Liquor in itself is not important. But the idea of freedom of thought and opinion being undermined by insidious state propaganda in the schools is serious. And I am thankful that this mock election has justified its existence by showing me just how careful I must be when voting that I don't vote unwittingly for a party which is liberal on the surface but whose beliefs are basically totalitarian.

Peter A. K. Giles,
IV Pol. Sci.

Independents

Editor, The Varsity:

With regard to the forthcoming elections to the Mock Parliament, we feel that the campus political parties have overlooked one important segment of the student body in their bid for support. There are many of us at the University who have neither any party affiliation nor are particularly attracted by any of the platforms presented. Nevertheless such students merit a decent representation in the Parliament.

Therefore, we the undersigned, politically independent and determined to see jusice done, believe wholeheartedly that the great mass of students who are of a similar independent mind deserve spokesmen in the House, or this reason and in the cause of free democratic expression we humbly submit ourselves as INDEPENDENT CANDIDATES.

Here is a challenge! If you have a mind of your own and are dissatisfied with the political fare presently being offered on the campus vote INDEPENDENT. The INDEPENDENTS are agreed in only one principle, that the non-partisan and intellectually honest individual should have a voice.

Voting INDEPENDENT is simple. Leave the spaces opposite the party names blank and write in INDEPENDENT at the bottom of the ballot.

Think, vote, vote INDEPENDENT.

Sincerely,
V. G. Turner, IV UC.
G. W. Brigden, IV UC,
C. H. Smith, IV SPS.

Correction Re Museum

The illustrated public lecture on the Seven Wonders of the World which was previously reported in The Varsity as to be held this Sunday at the Museum Theatre, will be held on December 6. The time and place (4:30 p.m. in the Museum Theatre) are the same.

Dr. Dorothy Thomson, lecturer in the Department of Art and Archaeology at the University of Toronto will give the lecture. It is to be one in a series given under the auspices of the Archaeological Institute of America.

Mrs. Thomson was among the team excavating the Agora, city-centre of ancient Athens, with the staff from the American School of Classical Studies in Athens.

Chinese Opinion

...or, The Varsity:

The following is a reply to ... Tinker's letter issued on ...ember 30. We feel obliged ...larify a few wrong impres... which Mr. Tinker might ... made on your readers.

...r disagreement with Dean ...tt is not "simply because ...happened to be a pastor of a ...g church", but because of his ...radiction of real facts and ... misrepresentation of our ...ple's feeling towards our ...rnment. "The People's ...rnment of China can speak ... the entire population of 450 ...ion." (official report of Mr. ...nikkar, India's ambassador ... China. New York Times, Oct. 29/51)) Mr. Panikkar continues that "all classes of people cooperating with the government will continue to receive a share in political power and administrative machinery and their interests will continue to be cared for within the terms of the Common Programme." Obviously, The Dean has done his best to arouse misunderstanding and hence hatred between the peoples of Canada and China by abusing our Peoples' Government which the people wholly support.

...deed, we are not convinced ... the Dean's "Christian Spirit" ...r should a true Christian misinterpret and not rejoice in the ...eniable benefits which have ... brought to our people by ... new government? Dean ...tt has taken advantage of ... fact that most of his audi... had never been to China ... that unbiased reports on ... are seldom printed in To... newspapers. We have no ...ntion of attacking Dean ...tt's personal character, ... we cannot ignore his insult to our government by falsely stating that the apparent remarkable achievements are not in the interests of the people. What would our 450 million people feel towards the Dean if they were aware of his remarks while they are doing their best to uphold a government of their own?

May we ask from whom did the Dean obtain his "direct knowledge" and "first hand evidence"? How can he represent the opinion of our people since he admits he cannot speak or read our language, in spite of having stayed in Crina for 31 years? What contact could he have with our people? The opinions which he arbitrarily stated those of the Chinese people are merely those of a few individuals whom he knew, but surely, not of the entire population.

We wonder too, on what basis could Mr. Tinker so capriciously charge that Mr. Cheng's remarks on the land reform are "completely wrong"? Mr. Tinker himself shows little knowledge of the land reform in China which has created new lives, happiness and better living conditions for the long oppressed peasants who are the majority of our population. (See I. Earl Wilmott's 'Diary of a Missionary in China'—Kosmon Pioneer, July, 1951) Mr. Tinker only lamented that a few rich farmers have their 'surplus' land divided.

The distribution of land has brought better harvests and this results in the increasing purchasing power of the peasant. "The improved economic status of the people is reflected in increased consumption of goods. In 1948, 1,200,000 bolts of cloth were sold in Manchuria. Last year the figures grew to 3,200,000 bolts. This year it is estimated that 9,000,000 bolts of cloth will be sold." (report by Lin Fen, Vice Chairman of the North-east Peoples' Government—China Monthly Review, July, 1951.) Has not the increased production gone back to the same people that produced it? There is absolutely no sign of the "cloud of starvation hanging over the country". We quote Ambassador Panikkar again: "Within two years," he said, "the Chinese have solved the food problem to a considerable extent and are now in a position to export large quantities of food grains."

We Chinese people have found friends among Westerners for many years. We see now that those who are truly our friends recognize the benefits that have come to our country and are not deceived by rumors and gossip.

The Democratic Way

Symbolic Revolution

They are using The Varsity in the "Remedial English" classes in University College! At first that was a shock, then we felt a little humble, and now we are concerned.

Some other things have happened recently which contributed to this concern. Down in Massachusetts yesterday some ass got up in the state legislature and suggested that they start teaching "American" in the schools. He felt it would be more patriotic than "English". (Put that in your Milton and smoke it.)

Mr. Robert Gill, being quoted by Miss Pearl Parnes, said something about "spoken drama" (oh unhappy contradictory phrase), in these columns recently.

And have you read a book by Prof. M. McLuhan (from St. Mike's) called The Mechanical Bride, in which he claims that the printed word is losing its grip on society?

It gives, as the man says, one to think.

These things may seem unrelated to the casual reader, but they strike us as very much threads of the same fabric. It all adds up to what you might call the symbolic revolution.

It's a revolution that's been going on for a long time. It has to do with things like the radio, and high speed presses, and the camera, and the films, and that brawling brat of a newcomer, television. The world is changing the ways in which it expresses itself, and language, once the queen of the hive, is suffering from the change.

It has been noticeable for a long time. The mass media have ridden down on society like a horde, and they have changed the way in which we live, and the ways in which we express ourselves. It is no wonder that the use of the language, once an absolute essential to the educated man, has suffered.

It's surprising there isn't more confusion than there is. You listen to the radio before you can read. And then you read comic books before you can read. And then you go to the movies before you can read. And then you read Life, before you can read, and then it isn't really necessary to be able to read at all.

It doesn't surprise us in the least that the average young man or woman who comes to university is having trouble with the rules of English. You can get along in most situations before you reach university without being able to handle your language adequately. And all the time you are being trained in the use of the visual symbols, through advertising, the films, the billboards, and lately, television.

Even your reading matter is against you. The modern newspaper, which most of us at least glance at once a day, is tuned to fast, entertaining reading, to getting the facts to you in the easiest, shortest possible way. It is simple, clear, concise, but it is seldom "literary" English. Even the UC instructor who assigned The Varsity as an exercise recognized that: he made it clear that "journalistic style is not commended."

It seems probable that the present low rate of appreciation of the English language which has led to the institution of "Remedial English" classes in the University is the result of many factors. It is also probable that "Remedial English" is not the solution. The English Department of this University might do the society a great service if it set itself to look a little more deeply into the problem. Entirely apart from being a fascinating study which would lead into devious and unusual fields, it would probably lead to more useful approaches to the problem of teaching our young how to use a tool which they seem to appreciate less and less.

The Varsity has known about this business of poor English for a long time now, and has done more than its fair share of suffering. But we have a feeling that the solutions to the problem will come, not from "Remedial English" classes, but rather from new methods of teaching the language which will take account of the changing uses of symbolic expression in the society.

Not Entirely Blameless

Book Store Story

The Following is the Final Article in a Series on the University Of Toronto Press Book Store and Deals with the Non-Texual Functions of the Book Store.

By DENISE RICHARDS

There is no doubt that the University of Toronto Book Store is trying to be more than just a text store. The question is whether or not it is succeeding in catering to the needs of a supposedly intellectual community. For, unless students and professors alike feel that they can rely on the Book Store to provide the books and periodicals they consider necessary to their mental stimulation, this facet of the enterprise might just as well be discontinued.

It might be said here, that some of the complaints directed against the Book Store on this score have been hypercritical; others, uninformed. Some students seem to expect the Book Store to supply them instantly with any obscure title, regardless of how restricted the general demand for it may be, or of whether or not they have indicated their interest in, for example, the theory of linear operations. Other students criticize the Book Store more or less by hearsay, or after a cursory examination of the shelves, and blast the officials for failing to provide a publication such as The New York Times Weekend Edition which is regularly in stock.

Miss MacMurray, the manager of the Book Store, selects the non-texual supplies personally. Perhaps her job could be made easier if a student committee were formed to make suggestions. Miss MacMurray said that she felt that she was supplying the students with the books they want. In view of the complaints that have been expressed, this seems to indicate that people on the campus are not even attempting to give constructive criticism to the proper parties.

There are, of course, financial problems involved in satisfying everyone. To meet the demands for as complete as possible selections of Everyman, Home University Library, Signet, Mentor; and Pelican publications, to name a few, would involve stocking a large number of books with no guarantee that the majority of them would ever be sold.

But a little judicious publicity directed at staff, graduates, and undergraduates, possibly combined with a mail order department, should be able to make potential customers aware of the fact that it is worth their while to patronize the Book Store. And surely, with the group of people most likely to buy good books only waiting to be convinced that the Book Store is the best place to get them, the Book Store need only prove itself, and it will be in clover.

As far as periodicals are concerned, the situation is much the same. Students and professors are demanding quarterlies from other universities and magazines like The Reporter and the New political magazine. They criticize the inclusion of "popular" magazines such as the Saturday Evening Post.

The requests for more meaty matter should undoubtedly be met; but distributors will not continue long to supply magazines that don't sell. It will be the responsibility of the Book Store to see the students know what publications are in stock and the responsibility of the students to back their criticisms by buying these magazines while they are in stock.

But in many cases, the criticism of including the popular magazines seems to be sheer intellectual snobbery. "Pogo" is permissible; the Saturday Evening Post is not. Some students seem to want to ignore the fact that many of their colleagues enjoy frivolous literature by preventing them from buying it on university grounds. The excuse is that such material can be bought anywhere.

But why should the Book Store put itself to provide comparatively difficult-to-sell material and at the same time be asked to do away with a sure source of income because it offends the highly developed aesthetic sense of a few? That seems a most unreasonable demand.

The complaints against the vending machine, the seasonal supplies, and such things as pennants and paints seem to be similarly selfish. Their purpose is to provide a little extra income and to attract students to the Book Store so that they may be tempted to buy a book while satisfying their bodily needs. If the space were urgently needed for book displays, they could easily be abolished. But, until such time, they could be tolerated as an effort by the Book Store to hoist itself up by its own boot straps.

In conclusion then, let it be said that if the Book Store is to provide a service to the students and be more than a mere financial enterprise, it must receive the support, financial and otherwise, that such a luxury requires.

Viewpoint from a Remedial Balcon

Well, like everybody else whom I know, I am experiencing a perfectly awful time with my classes in Remedial English, especially with all the punctuation and so just to prove to my professors, who I secretly despise (please not correct usage of "whom") that I at least for one don't need to take remedial classes in my Remedial Classes as well, I decided to go to see a play which was at once intellectual and provided much scope for punctuation and besides I read Lank Mortiscoocoo's article on The Brave Bulls and I thought that if I went to see this play at Hart House it might run for more than a week. And so off I went to the telegraph office to send some telegrams to Osbert Dill and his cast wishing them all sorts of luck (they always pin them up in the dressing rooms and all the girls read them and say to each other—Darling' wasn't he sweet to send us all sorts of luck and then they all say yes wasn't it and everybody walks around in tights and lipstick and false eyelashes—its very theatrical).

There I was in the audience ready to take down everything the actor said punctuating it as I went along. Well the first man came on the stage and at first I thought it was Mario Lanzo or Allan Lampblack, but I guess it wasn't after all and so I started to take down his dictation and punctuate it.

I was doing rather splendidly when along comes a stupid little kid who lost his sheep and then along comes two freshies dressed like old ladies to tell the kid that his father was dead. Well if anybody needed remedial classes in English it was that kid because the two freshies kept telling him Sonny, your dad's dead but he couldn't understand them at all.

All he had to do was listen, here was me punctuating it all as they went along but all he could say was I built a circle around the sheep so the two ladies went away and the neighbours took up a collection to buy the kid a wagon. So the kid put his mother in the wagon and pretended he was a horse.

Well, when the kid let his mother fall, I thought for sure she was going to swear but luckily she remembered where she was and she from Vic to take the place of smiled sweetly instead and I thought for a minute that it was Dean Ferguson but I recalled that she was on phone duty at Whitney Hall, so I guess it wasn't she (use she not he for subjective completions) Well the kid and his mother played for hours on the stage up and down the ramp and then I thought this was very nice of Mr. Dill.

You know how everybody wants to act and there are just so many parts well Mr. Dill had four people come on stage and they all talked at once and said the things and they all got their name on the program. And then the man who looked like Allan Lampblack came back on to say something and then instead of getting off stage he just stood there looking at the kid and his wagon. If he wanted to see the play that badly he could have sat in front of me, cause there was no one there but he just stood there and every once in a while he went out to see how things were going in the elections but he always came back and stood in the way.

Well then it started to get silly. At the last minute, I guess the Board of Syndics told Mr. Dill that he couldn have oxen on stage and Mr. Dill had to get two janitors oxen. They didn't even have time change their clothes. They just their old hats blue jeans and down on the stage and it looked silly to see them. The found out something which I understand until after the but all the time that Allan black was talking he kept using ious gestures which made like he was acting but really was using sign language and his henchmen (the cue was Zag in a paper bag") who were guised as ushers throw out all ballots for the other two guys it was so dark one of them the whole bagful down a trap-d mistake and all the ballots the stage. Nearly all the thought that the audience throwing things and they ran Well finally I discovered why stupid kid doesnt have to remedial English I saw him pla anything cross himself. He sa down there in the second row ing down all this dictation and started him thinking about and so he crossed himself and ed Catholic and transferred Mike's where they dont have these damn remedial classes.

Les Carabins Sont Là Anglais Prenez Garde

By RALPH WINTROB

Don't be surprised if you suddenly hear bursts of French, and rollicking Gallic songs today. For this is the Carabin Weekend, when forty students from the University of Montreal visit our home campus.

The Montrealers rolled into Union Station last night on the crest of a "BOUM-A-LACKA" cheer, to be rushed up to a reception in Trinity College. For the next three days they will be entertained with parties, banquets, and square dances at Caledon Lodge. They will also take part in a discussion today on education.

Over the weekend forty Toronto students will play host to the same number of French-Canadians. The guests will live at the home or residence of his host. The two will spend most of their time together, in order to establish a personal relationship.

The Toronto students have been picked from 150 applications turned in to the Students' Council, which subsidizes the weekend. The group includes people from most of the faculties on the campus.

Most of the activities will be restricted to this group, because of space and financial limitations. However, the discussion this afternoon, and a tea Sunday are open to everyone, the Carabin committee announced.

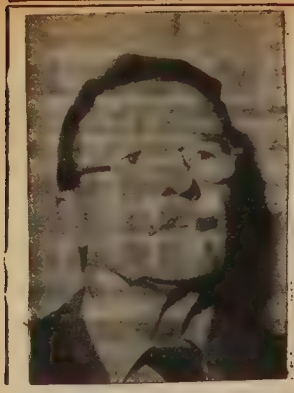
The most singular feature of these weekends is the unrestrained bursts of French song which are apt to appear at any time. To meet any need, a special songbook has been prepared, which includes both French and English favorites. Last year's group struggled with the unfamiliar French songs on the way down on the train, but by the time they returned they were singing them readily.

The original idea behind these annual weekend exchanges is to promote a gerater degree of friendship and understanding between the two groups. As the emphasis on an exchange of ideas has grown, more importance has been placed on discussion groups, both formal and informal.

Subject of the discussion today will be "A comparison between the aims and methods of the French and English-speaking Educational Systems." Warden Ignatieff of Hart House will lead off for the University of Toronto. Following some subsequent remarks by a Montreal representative, the discussion will continue in smaller, more informal groups.

Included in the program is a banquet on Friday evening at the Newman Club, where Professor Northrop Frye will speak on Education. On Saturday the group will spend the day at Caledon.

CARABIN NOTICE



The Carabin Committee has invited all Toronto students to take part in a discussion on "A Comparison Between the French and English-speaking Educational Systems", to be held at 3 p.m. today in Alumni Hall, Victoria College. All students are also invited to a tea at Wymilwood at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Registrar Hicks.

By PEARL PARNES

"Students are being more and more affected by a rapidly-growing American influence," is the opinion of Professor R. K. Hicks, registrar of Trinity College.

"Twenty years ago the mere idea of a pep rally would have been ridiculous. However, this type of activity is harmless," he feels, "and does give someone with leadership qualities a chance to exercise them."

A tall, humorous man with a great moustache, Dean Hicks was born in London, England. He was the latest offspring of generations of Londoners. "The family goes way back. We have been respectable for quite a few generations. Beyond that we don't know."

He was brought up in the Victoria-Kipling generation. "The Victorian era was more comfortable for the bourgeoisie and pretty grim for labour. There was none of the terrible unrest and anxiety of today."

He remembers seeing Queen Victoria. "I would have been at her funeral, but was laid up with a soccer knee." He remembers, too, seeing the first big Dock Strike, with gangs of unemployed men going along with a slow, swinging march, chanting, "We've got no work to do."

Prof. Hicks graduated from Cambridge in mathematics and taught in English schools for six years. Then, in 1907, he came to Canada.

"Canada looked like a better opportunity for the schoolmaster profession." He taught at Upper Canada College for four years. "It was rough going for the first few months. A new master, especially an Englishman, was fair game. Soon, however, I learned how to deal with Canadian youth, and my school experience has been a great help in university teaching."

One of his favourite squelches was given to a very sloppy, yawning young lady. "You have very nice tonsils," he complimented her, "but if you can't conceal them, you'd better go away." She did.

Dean Hicks has been at the University of Toronto for a long time. He came to Trinity in 1927, as head of the French Department, after ten years at Queen's. He became registrar and then Dean of Arts. His main interest outside Trinity has been in the theatre. Now a syndic of Hart House Theatre, he has been an actor in many productions. He played in the old Hart House theatre group, before it adopted its present policy and director. His longest part was in "The Doctor's Dilemma" 25 years ago.

"I never got another lead," he ruefully remembers. "I liked bit parts, particularly Shakespearian rustics." In a production of "Anthony and Cleopatra" he delivered the poisonous asp as the delightful, mildly philosophical clown. And at the same time, he played the Soothsayer earlier in the play. His last appearance was as the messenger in Ernest Dale's "Antigone".

The former actor has been honorary president of the Trinity Dramatic Society almost since he came. "They wisely leave my warnings unheeded. I like them to take risks. But they do follow my advice sometimes."

Fifteen years at Trinity have given Registrar Hicks experience of all sorts of situations and students. He applauds the period of the veterans.

"They were a very steadying influence, and raised the social and academic level and results. More students get American fellowships now. Further, they tended to repress certain juvenilia," were his comments. Depression years brought greater numbers to the university because there were no jobs.

As Investigator for the Canadian Committee on Modern Languages in 1926, Prof. Hicks made some interesting discoveries. "The English school system goes much higher at the top than ours. There seems to be more scope in England for the really good brain. Here, the student often enters university on memory-work. Then he has to think —and sometimes sink."

As registrar, he meets all sorts of students with troubles, and spends much of his time in reducing 400-word petitions to 50 words.

"I hear all sorts of problems and excuses, ranging all the way from influenza to failure in finding rooms as reasons for not writing examinations. One young man," he remembers, "told me his favourite aunt had died, and even had a photo of himself at the grave to prove it!"

With Professor H. E. Ford of Victoria College, he has published several school texts in French, and has contributed occasional articles to magazines. He is now collecting data on the history of Trinity College, and is quite proud of the fact that, in ten years, Trinity walked off with seven Rhodes scholarships.

"I like to observe life going on," said Mr. Hicks. "The Trinity Buttery in particular amuses me. I shan't like to be retired."

Brewer's Blurb Brings Blast

At the bottom of page three, in yesterday's edition of Toronto's other morning newspaper, there appeared an advertisement showing a picture of Hart House and at the side a description of the U of T's rank among the educational institutions in the British Commonwealth. The ad was placed by O'Keefe's Brewing Company.

The headline of the advertisement read, "It's the extra that counts . . . "

Earlier this year the University college Literary and Athletic Society proposed a resolution to change the name of the Brading Debating Trophy on the grounds that it commercialized the University.

"The foot is in the door. My suspicions about the disinterested nature of the relations of the breweries towards the University have been confirmed," said the University College Literary Director, Al Strauss (IV UC). "We are now being made analogous to that 'extra something' in the product of these philanthropic manufacturers."

Commenting on a recent editorial in The Varsity, Strauss said, "as the editor of The Varsity feels that money is money, I hope they paid real dough for this privilege."

Inquiries at Simcoe Hall failed to uncover any record of permission granted to O'Keefe's. Officials at Hart House stated that the photograph used in the ad was not obtained from Hart House and that no permission was given nor asked for by O'Keefe's.

"It should be obvious now that the gay, cynical 'Georges' of [illegible] were not prompted by 'prudish exhibitionist motives' when they objected to the publicity given to Canadian brewers from McGill University with the support of the untainted Students' Administrative Council," said John Robson, last year's president of the Literary Society. Robson was referring to the naming of the Brading Trophy.

Robson pointed out that the issue at stake was not that brewery money is not good money, but prompted by true generosity the brewing corporation decided to donate a Student's Union or a similar useful edifice, it would be discovered that the UC Lit would put aside its prudish tendencies and agree with the University in accepting the gift," he added.

"I am now anxiously waiting," said strauss, "to see in the newspapers a picture of the Brading Trophy—a true monument to the donor's boundless generosity—the real extra that counts'."

Judging by the pained expression on the face of the student (above), climbing the fence around the front campus requires more effort than the short-cut through our private quagmire is worth. The early erection of the fence this year has done more good than to protect the field, however; it is an obvious reminder that term tests are on the way and may yet prove the salvation of less ambitious students.

Mock Elections

PC'S ARE IN BY PLURALITY

DRO'S Get Ballot-Box Blues

The Mock Parliament elections held yesterday on the campus provided an interesting side-light on the campus voter. Votes were cast for a variety of parties in addition to the four listed on the ballot. Some voters marked their ballots "independent", possibly in response to a letter to the editor in yesterday's Varsity.

The deputy returning officer in Hart House was particularly obliging. With his hand on the ballot box, he opened it for students to cast their vote.

In their campaign the Liberal party unwittingly backed the LPP. The latter's poster, in Murray's, was on the back of a Liberal poster.

Several of the students did not seem to be familiar with the process of an election. One student dropped a penny in the ballot box. He afterwards explained that he thought the Deputy Returning Officer was receiving contributions for SHARE. Another student, when his ATL card was marked by the DRO tried to stuff the card in the ballot box.

The ATL card was marked with an X through the U of University of Toronto to identify those who voted. Already marked with various other symbols, including an X, an O and an occasional dash, many students complained that it would soon be impossible to identify their ATL card.

In addition to the ballots marked "independent," several other unusual ballots were discovered. There was one vote for the Bloc Populaires, one for the Dixiecrats, and one for Joe Stalin.

At one time when the vote at the polling station in the Skule building was particularly heavy students were a few minutes late for their classes. When they reached the lecture they found the lecture had been cancelled because they were late.

KNOX NOEL SHARED AS GIFT TO ASIA

The Student Help for Asian Relief and Education Executive Committee got a surprise contribution from the Kox College Carol Service, where the members collected about $50 on Wednesday.

According to Doug Gordon, president of Knox College Association, this move was initiated by the Worship Committee. At last year's annual Carol Service a similar donation was made to the All-Varsity Aid.

Commented Pete Turner, member of the SHARE Executive Committee, "It was a most welcome surprise, and the Committee is hoping and willing to accept further contributions other than those received through canvassing."

Liberal Opposition CCF Close Behind 9 Seats To LPP

The Government in the Mock Parliament will be Progressive Conservative. The MacDonald-Cartier Club won 36 seats in the legislature of the Mock Parliament in yesterday's election. The Liberals and the CCF fought a close race for the official opposition, the Liberals winning with 23 seats to the CCF 22. The Labor Progressive party got 9.

About 18 per cent of the student body voted in the election. The popular vote ran: Progressive Conservative, 809; Liberal, 513; CCF, 503; and LPP, 203. 48 ballots were spoiled, for a total of 2,077 votes cast.

The Mock Parliament Committee announced last night that all ballots marked for parties other than those printed on the ballot would be considered spoiled. Some of the unusual parties indicated on the ballot included, "Independent", "Bloc Populaire", and "Dixiecrat."

All ballots marked unmistakably for a particular party were acceptable the committee decided. This means that ballots marked with an X, a plus sign, the name of the party, OK, hammer and sickle, or a check mark were accepted.

There were no closed booths at the eight polling stations. Students marked their ballots on a wall or on their notebooks. Most of the ballot boxes were not padlocked. One was locked with a pencil. In some cases the campus political parties did not provide scrutineers.

Speaking of the "independent" vote, John Fairley, IV UC, President of the Political Science Club, said last night, "We would have welcomed them had they come to us as an organized party. But the day before the election is hardly the time to come and expect to be included on the ballot."

None of the executive of the MacDonald-Cartier Club was available for any comment last night.

The President of the University of Toronto Liberal Club, John Medcof, IV UC, last night thanked those who voted for the Liberal Party. "Our thanks to those who voted for us, and to The Varsity for its fair coverage," he said.

"Students voted for the LPP for two reasons," said Shirley Endicott, president of the campus LPP Club, last night. "First because they supported the basic program of the LPP, especially peace, and second, in order to ensure that a party with a fighting spirit would be represented in the Mock Parliament."

Speaking for the CCF, Orvia Millet, IV SPS, stated that although the Liberals would constitute the Opposition by 11 votes or one seat, the CCF will present a true opposition to the old party government as they do in Ottawa and Toronto.

DEUXIEME ETAGE

Mais Oui!

By JIM KNIGHT

There has been a lot of talk around here lately about us English-speaking Canadians not being able to get along as well as our French-speaking compatriots because they can speak English and we can't speak French. This thing has been a problem to me only incidentally and now and then.

Having lived all my life, practically, in Toronto where it is possible to get along nicely on English alone, I have never had to go right down to the pluperfect subjunctive, and I doubt that I could even if I had to.

But the point is this. In good old Toronto pluperfect subjunctives are few and far between, and it is more than easy to get along without them at all. This is a situation of which it is possible to take advantage, and which, if handled carefully, can be used to raise one's stock in the eyes of the vulgar, as Tim Roebuck used to say.

There are, of course, lots of ways to go about it, but I am not prepared to go into them all just now. My way is this and although it appears simple, it's deceptively so. One picks a French phrase like "c'est la guerre", or "honi soit qui maly y pense" and works on it, until the pronounciation is perfect. This is probably the most difficult part of the whole plan, and if handled badly can ruin it entirely. So be careful.

The phrase which I personally have found most useful after several weeks of careful selection and testing is "deuxieme etage" with the accents in the right places. My typewriter hasn't got accents so you'll have to imagine where they go. This phrase is particularly useful for a couple of reasons not the least of which is that even the French are not quite sure what they mean when they use it.

For example a rough English translation is "second floor", but because of a peculiar linguistic impediment, most French people mean the third floor when they say it. No decent explanation for this peculiar phenomenon has even been offered, although it is rumoured the French peasants used it to confuse the aristocrats during the Revolution. However, I picked it up because its peculiar phonetic relationships make it applicable in practically any situation.

If, for instance, one has escorted one's date to her door and has been repeatedly repulsed in one's attempts to plant an amorous buss on her physog, one can not only save face but gain an air of debonair nonchalance by simply shrugging one's shoulders after the Gallic manner and tossing off a careless "Eh bien, deuxieme etage" as one quits her stoop. In this simple way her snob instinct has been aroused and her curiosity piqued. She'll not repulse such a man on his second try.

Or in a restaurant with a girl you dearly want to impress. As is usual in these cases, the first thing the waiter does after bringing the water to your table is spill it in your lap, making you look like a fool. Your first impulse is to curse the clumsy oaf with the most bloodcurdling oath you can mutter. If however, you simply stand slowly erect, fix the offensive clod with a malevolent glare and spit "deuxieme etage" at him through clenched teeth, your meaning comes clearly through and you stand revealed as a man with the rarest of social graces, the mixed company curse. You also run the risk of getting punched in the nose by the waiter, whether he understands you or not.

So you can see it is quite simple, with a minimum of imagination and a not unreasonable amount of practice, to build up a reputation for bi-lingualism in this part of the country which is founded firmly on the sand.

Ten to one the bi-lingual Quebecois built their reputation the same way.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

A tidy British picture, THE FRANCHISE AFFAIR, has moved in at the Towne Cinema after THE BRAVE BULLS was hounded out. The new entry is a quiet little piece about small-town narrow-mindedness.

On this side of the water, it is a common opinion that British films are either very, very good or very, very horrid. We don't see the whole British output, of course. But THE FRANCHISE AFFAIR is neither very, very good nor very, very horrid. Yet THE FRANCHISE AFFAIR is a very entertaining film.

The bad part of this small-budget British movie is technical; the script and film both need judicious cutting, and the camera work can stand much more imagination. But the good part comes from the story and a strong performance by Marjorie Fielding (formerly seen in TRIO and THE CHILTERN HUNDREDS), an elderly character actress who can bite out a line as if she'd honed the edges herself.

Crux of the story is the small town's willingness to convict without fair trial. The whole affair is very quiet, and yet we are reminded of the more blatant horror of the lynchers in Faulkner's INTRUDER IN THE DUST and of the Ku Klux Klan in the melodramatic STORM WARNING. Two women, mother (Miss Fielding) and daughter (Dulcie Gray), are accused of kidnapping and mistreating a young girl (Ann Stephens). The story the people believe is the girl's, "because she has such a nice face, poor dear." And besides, these women are newcomers who have kept to themselves since their arrival in Melford, two years before.

Of course, we all think we know, like the lawyer (Michael Denison) who takes the part of the two embattled women, that they could not have been guilty. But we are not told what happened, if anything, or why the girl's story has so much convincing detail.

Fanned by newspaper stories, the townspeople react against the women with anonymous phone calls and letters, nasty and threatening. The two women (the mother says she has just gotten off her broomstick for a hot cup of blood) are refused service in a tearoom, while the villagers watch. And with nightfall, a sign is painted on the wall of the women's house, and stones break the windows of the house as an anonymous gang of men vandalize under cover of darkness.

The story moves slowly to the final settlement of the mystery of did they or didn't they. And in the final trial, the truth comes out. Again fault direction makes the trial move more slowly than necessary, but there are neat comedy touches that make the going palatable.

With the end, the two women leave Melford to go to Montreal to live. This is in itself a neat comment. But I felt it rather unnecessary to have the lawyer-hero catch the Canada-bound plane too, so that he and his new love, the daughter, are not separated after all. It may be blasphemous to say so, but with this ending this British film went Hollywood.

Dulcie Gray and Michael Denison are the BROTHER JONATHAN team, and except for one embarrassing bit of hamming by Miss Gray in what her mother (Fielding) calls an unnecessary tantrum, they are both adequate. Denison proves to be a very ineffectual type, and it isn't really his doing that makes things aright. But he seems to be a rather nice chap, if quite university lecture-ish, so we really don't mind.

Completely different in camera work and direction is the accompanying short, OPERA SCHOOL. This is a magnum opus of the National Film Board, its forty minutes being twice as long as its usual commercial product. The Royal Conservatory was the setting, and its teachers and students make up the capable and natural cast.

Camera work is the key here, tying in with a satisfactory Louis Appelbaum musical score. The fictional trials and tribulations of Marie Burton (Marguerite Gignac) from budding hopeful having a Conservatory audition until she makes good in Mozart's Figaro at the Royal Alex make up the story. Gignac, of course, was the perfect one to pick for the main role — her expressiveness and talent of mime fits in as well with the intimate camera eye as it does in the Hart House Great Hall or the barn-stage of the Royal Alexandra. This short is a superb advertisement for The National Film Board, and this seems to be a direction in which the NFB should take further steps.

The only slight quibble is with the ending of the story, which left me rather flat. Since it all began with the nervous Gignac at the outset, it would have been more complete, if Gignac was spotlighted (at least in a closeup) acknowledging curtain calls, rather than in a group with her confreres. The big shots of the Royal Conservatory, Mazzoleni, Goldschmidt, Geiger-Tourel, etc., are all evident and prove very satisfying muggers.

To Be A Carabin!

The University of Montreal is a prominent, yellow brick structure at the very top of Mount Royal, and commands a view of a good portion of the city.

But it is all one building and there is no campus except for the halls and corridors within it. All the faculties are contained in it also except for engineering (Ecole Polytechnique) as well as art and architecture (Ecole des Beaux Arts), which are both downtown.

Opened shortly before the Second World War, the University of Montreal now is the largest of French-speaking student institutions in the country — about 4000 to be exact.

Like its counterparts in France and other countries of Europe, it still adheres to the traditional system of education. In effect it is a graduate college, where all that students can receive is a master's or doctor's degree in some specific profession or subject in the humanities.

Students who enter have behind them what is called a baccalaureat degree. It is comparable to a high school and junior college course combined. However, in Quebec they are called classical colleges and provide a solid grounding in the classics, sciences, mathematics and philosophy. This is, in effect, a general background course prior to specialization in university.

For this reason, students entering a French-Canadian university are usually two or three years older than freshmen in English-speaking universities.

Two faculties have a particularly wide reputation. One is dentistry, the largest single professional faculty in the college. The other is a research department in endocrynology headed by Dr. Selyea.

He is revered almost as a demi-god, and many are the stories that are told about his accomplishments and abilities. A whole section of the university is given over to his work and a large staff does nothing but test animals and work on the research projects which he supervises.

One of the prize projects of the students' council at the University of Montreal is their store. It sells — besides books — clothes, crests, jewellery and other items that students may want. Not only is the sales staff made up of students, but all the profits are, of course, turned back to the student council.

As are all French-Canadian schools, at whatever level, Montreal is a clerical college run by prelates of the Catholic Church. Religion plays a large part in the students' lives.

Up to the present the University of Montreal has been a "streetcar college." All the students, both men and women, live at home or rent rooms. However, in the past year, the administration has succeeded in raising $14,000,000 to build a residence. When this is completed the students will be able to look at the university as a community of students more than is now possible.

Dr. Van Wyck Emphasizes Unity, Research, Tradition

"The purpose of a university is to fit men of the world for the world," Dr. H. B. Van Wyck, professor emeritus of the University of Toronto said last night. Last night's lecture, entitled "the Meaning of a University," was one of a series given by the University Health Service.

In his lecture, Dr. Van Wyck laid particular stress on three points: the "totality of vision" a university should provide; the vital role played by research, and the importance of tradition in an institution of higher learning.

The literal derivation of "university" is "turned into one" Dr. Van Wyck explained. This desire for unity, which leads to intellectual and spiritual harmony, he said, was the core of Greek monism, Stoicism, the Roman theory of the rights of peoples, and the United Nations.

A university should be a lighthouse and a powerhouse rather than an ivory tower, he said. It should, moreover, become the centre of intellectual life for the people, and a vital force throughout their lives. A university may truly be called a university only when it integrates thinking and doing, theory and practice. Dr. Van Wyck continued.

If the professional schools were separated from the universities, he pointed out, the gap already existing between the academic and the "practical" would be further widened. The demands of life are the business of the savage as well as of the professional man, he said: the university provides a wider horizon. It investigates knowledge of life at its highest levels and places it before the community.

Stressing the totality of vision a university should provide, he said that this provides some protection from a blind reliance on the abstractions of science. Dr. Van Wyck gave as an example the ramifications raised by the proposal of sending wheat to India. This would raise problems in the field of politics, ethics, religion, economics and anthropology, he added.

Research is an integral function of the university he said. It serves to keep knowledge abreast of life. Without research universities would merely hand on tradition, he said. Dr. Van Wyck also pointed out that teaching young people provides a stimulus to those engaged in research. Academic activity is therefore desirable for men engaged in research.

Dr. Van Wyck pointed out that the universities also served a useful function by preserving tradition and authority. Scientific discoveries build on the tradition of past acheivements, he said; the wisdom of the past is kept alive, but is subject to the criticism of successive generations.

Music Review

TSO Concert

A large, enthusiastic audience greeted the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and its guest artist, tenor Jan Peerce in Massey Hall Wednesday evening. Sir Ernest MacMillan chose Haydn's Overture to "Armida" with which to begin the program. Written in 1783, the opera Armida appeared in that period of Haydn's life which he himself called his period of supreme originality — and fertility, we might add. The overture begins military and ends on the same martial note, with an intervening melody of gentler nature interspersed. Perhaps this piece came too soon in the program for it seemed that the orchestra was not ready to do it justice. While attacks were good, the releases of both brass and woodwinds often lagged noticeably, spoiling the blend, and the result was a rather woolly production of tone.

Mr. Peerce's rendition of his three selections was well worth all the plaudits that a critic could offer. He sang Bach's Only Be Still (Cantata No. 93) with all due religious fervour and dignity, but his performance of the recitative and aria If with all your hearts from Mendelssohn's Elijah was full of such passionate intensity and profound sincerity that one could not possibly have expected more of a human soul laid bare. Still in the classical vein, the Say to Irene from Handel's Atalanta presented deep pathos and tender sympathy side by side. Especially well received was Mr. Peerce's interpretation of La Fleur que tu m'avais jetee from Georges Bizet's beloved opera classic, Carmen, and Lamento de Federico of Cilea made the audience demand its encore.

There is little to be said that has not been said before concerning the near-flawless technique of Jan Peerce. While quantity may have been lacking in many places, the quality never was. The fine tenor timbre which characterizes this famous voice is ever ready to pour forth in any mood or style, and contains every active potential from dynamic emotion to stolid depression. What a pity the orchestral accompaniment proved too overpowering, for the audience seemed frequently to be straining to hear all these qualities, but Mr. Peerce would never strain to keep above his accompaniment, wisely preferring his own maintenance of true quality to any form of raucosity whatever. His was a splendid performance, and he left behind him an audience that knows the world will never hear the last of Jan Peerce.

The principal orchestral work was the Pastoral Symphony of Vaughan Williams. (Any similarity to Beethoven's Sixth is purely coincidental.) Here the orchestra deserves the highest honours for its demonstration of range in pitch and volume. Never has an orchestral triple pianissimo been used to effectively as here in this English setting of hillsides and pastures, with Jan Peerce doing an offstage version of a wordless shepherd song. This symphony is primed with a set of infirmite contrasts and a notable lack of any rhythm or feasible themes. Its sheer richness alone gives it all the impetus it needs in the modern world of music.

The Crystal Lake by Elinor Warren is very like Karg-Elert's set of seven "Pastels" of Lake Constance in Switzerland (for the organ). Generous harp and celesta obligatos give this piece its mark of distinction. The closing orchestral selection was Tchaikovsky's poignantly romantic overture-fantasy, Romeo and Juliet, which is also nostalgic enough to make any audience sigh for more. It was a very inspiring evening of music for which the orchestra and Jan Peerce deserve all the esteem which they won, and won well.

Kenneth Davis.

Hillel Recital

Last Wednesday night, at Wymilwood, Elie Spivak, violinist, and Leo Barkin, pianist, gave a joint concert sponsored by Hillel Music Club. There was nothing much one could either harshly condemn or lavishly praise in Mr. Spivak's violin playing; it was a consistently adequate performance, never rising to any great heights nor, on the other hand, ever sinking to any depths. His interpretations were sound, but never extraordinary or inspiring. His tone was sufficiently warm, but never vibrant or fiery. Throughout, Mr. Spivak was competent; and competence, after all, possesses some degree of merit.

Perhaps what was chiefly wrong was, first, Mr. Spivak's failure to make use of effective slides and secondly, and more important, his general lack of intensity. For example, in the Beethoven C Minor Violin Sonata, I felt that Mr. Spivak sensed its nuances and great spiritual qualities; but they were given small and dry expression, especially in the melodic Andante Cantabile and the emotional Finale. Its greatness was diminished in the Procrustean bed of understatement.

Mr. Spivak's most successful performance was that of the Handel D Major Sonata. The Allegro movements were played with the correct sprightly spirit. However, the first movement, Largo, was carried at too brisk a tempo and its broad, expansive melodic line tended to be stifled by the speed. The rest of the program consisted of slighter works, the only one of interest being Jacques Ibert's Dans La Maison Triste which was given its Canadian premiere by Mr. Spivak last Wednesday. It was mood music, heavily, heavily impressionistic and one wondered, knowing Ibert, if it was not a piece of pungent parody of the impressionist style.

Mr. Leo Barkin, in accompaniment and in his solo piano works, Chopin's C Minor Nocturne and Albanlz' Sevilla revealed the lucidity, the finesse and polish for which he is noted.

William Kotcheff.

Engineers Enlightened On Ethics

The first of a series of meetings sponsored by the Engineering chapter of the Varsity Christian Fellowship began yesterday. Dr D. Wade from Knox College was the guest speaker and discussed the growing problem of morality in industry which engineers are faced with.

Dr. Wade began his talk by laying the framework of moral standards as based on Jesus Christ. He stated that Christianity believes in God, that He is vitally and dynamically involved in the set up and in the link between people and their environment. He maintained that a final illuminatioin of problems is not granted to the Christian unless he moves into the problem with a knowledge of Jesus Christ. There is a partial blindness and inability to approach the situation unless we have faith, he said.

After this introduction, Dr. Wade proceeded to tie in the relevancy of the Christian belief and its application in industry. He refused to entertain the problems of morality in industry unless they were based on Jesus Christ.

Dr. Wade said that each problem that arises is unique and must be approached at the time it arises, no blueprint for such problems being possible. He further stated that the world is filled with the unexpected and God can not be just grasped and used when the person thinks He will fill the particular situation

Before concluding Dr. Wade stated that unless Christians can grapple with the problems that are thrown up to them from the community they will fall apart. Faith, he stated is dynamic and Christ is integral to all situations.

The last twenty minutes was thrown open to a discussion period wherein Dr. Wade attempted to answer various questions relevant to morality in industry and daily living. The meeting was closed in prayer led by Cal Chambers.

Egbert says . . . "Guess I must have had it all the time"

Too bad Egbert didn't think of looking in his pocket sooner . . . he's sure to miss that home-town special now.

But it's a cinch Egbert will be on that old gravy train this summer. He knows he's on the right track to fewer money worries next winter if he puts his summer savings in a B of M savings account. There are more than 500 branches of the B of M from coast to coast — any one of which you will find useful for saving, cashing cheques or sending money home.

Pictured above is Jack Ross, who will be sharing goaling duties with Doug Orr on the hockey Blues' weekend trip to McGill and Laval. Jack played Junior B in Stratford before entering Varsity, and last season he guarded the nets for the champion Baby Blues.

Blues Will Play At McGill, Laval

Tonight the Hockey Blues open their Intercollegiate Schedule against McGill Redmen at the Montreal Forum. The fact that the Blues were soundly beaten last week 10-2 in an exhibition game, coupled with the fact that McGill won their opener against Laval last weekend 3-2, all means that the locals will have their hands full at tonight's encounter.

In spite of the fact that Coach Robillard has mostly a green group to work with, nevertheless the Redmen appear to have plenty of spirit and the ability to win hockey games. They have lost two of last year's stars, Gord Knutson and Bob Marchessault due to academic pressures. However, defensively they should be the best in the league with veteran Bob MacLellan in goal and Don Robertson heading up a strong rearguard. Robertson made first string all star defence last season.

The most important news from the Blues camp is that their stalwart defenceman Joe Kane did not make the trip due to shoulder and knee injuries. Fifteen Blues left last night on the eleven o'clock train including two goalies, Doug Orr and Jack Ross. Which netminder will play tonight was not known at press time. Coach Bill Wade will likely not make the decision until a few hours before the game.

With the loss of Kane, the Blues will only have one of last year's regulars, Gerry Fitzhenry, back at the blueline. However ex-Marlboro star Jack MacKenzie will line up on defence along with Paul Prendergast and Al Fasan.

The Blues' No. 1 forward line will consist of Don Rope at centre flanked by Jack Weldrake and Johnny Adams. Red Stevens will take Rich Howson's former spot between high scoring wingers Ernie Frey and Phil Arrowsmith. Three other veterans, Norm Fox, Al Conboy and Pete Vernon will compose the third forward trio. Wally Westlake, Jerry Henderson and Gord Bennett did not make this trip.

Tomorrow night Varsity will take on Laval at Quebec's new 14,000 seat arena. Again they will have their hands full. The Blues only beat the Flying Frenchmen 4-3 last year in the Quebec encounter.

Mural Swimming Will Form Part Of Athletic Night

One of the features of tomorrow's Athletic night will be the finals of the Intramural swim meet. The preliminaries were held in some of the events in the pool last night, and the Meds team came first with 40.5 points. Trinity was second with 29 while Victoria was a close third, two points behind.

The meet tomorrow night will begin at 8 p.m., and seven events will be run. There will be competition in 50 yard breast, free style, and back stroke, 100 yard free, 150 yard medley relay and 200 yard sprint relay. There will also be a diving competition.

Although the Medsmen captured the most points last night, this will not count in the finals as the meet will be decided on the basis of tomorrow night's performance.

Pitching Sportshoes

The only non-playoff action in the intramural scene yesterday was on the hockey front where there were 3 games played.

In the opener, Trinity B took SPS IV in an action packed contest. Andison and Woolcoombe led the winners as each tallied twice. For the losing Engineers, McTavish and Elorana scored once apiece.

In another encounter, Forestry A trounced UC III by an 8-0 count. The Woodsmen outplayed the Redmen all the way, and goalie Cunningham had little trouble registering the shutout. Ross was the big gun for the winners as he scored four goals. Teammates Lindsay and Fingland shot for two more tallies apiece past the luckless UC netminder.

In the final contest of the afternoon, Vic IV edged Trinity C 3-2. The game was close all the way, but the Buttery Boys couldn't quite make it. The scoring was evenly divided all around, as Passe, Pegay and Miller were the marksmen for the winning Vicsters, while Spencer and Ryley tallied for Trinity.

B-Ball Blues Face Albion At Athletic Nite Tomorrow

The Basketball Blues open their home season tomorrow night, when they meet Albion College in the second half of the basketball doubleheader at Hart House. The basketball games are to be the feature attraction of the first of this year's series of Athletic Nights, Saturday night entertainment programs put on by the Athletic Association and consisting of basketball games, boxing, wrestling, aquatics, and other sports, followed by dancing.

In the first part of the basketball twin bill, the Intermediates play Ryerson Tech, beginning at 7:00 p.m. The Techmen tried to get into the Intermediate Intercollegiate loop this year, but were turned down.

The Blues beat Albion last year 56-51 in last year's home opener. Albion's star was Charlie Allen, who scored 14 points. Allen is fairly tall, 6'4", but on the whole the US team did not compare with the Blues in height. The Senior game is scheduled to start at 8:45.

Both the Blues and the Intermediates lost games to Niagara U. Wednesday night. The Blues lost to the starry Niagara team 72-47. None of the Blues had a particularly good day, no one scoring over ten points. Ed Maynerick netted 10, and Bud Natanson was kept pretty well in check, getting only 8 points. Top man for Niagara was Don Cramer, with 14 points.

The Intermediates lost to The Niagara Junior Varsity 72-57. Medden and Russell, the Toronto team's two American stars, were top scorers for the Ints. The score was only 20-19 at the end of the first quarter, but a disastrous second period threw that.

Other sports on view at the A-Nite will be a swim meet, boxing and wrestling. The Junior Intercollegiate faculty Wrestling tournament has been going on for two days now with seven semi-finals to be run off today. The finals will be held in the upper gym after the boxing at the A-Nite.

The eliminations in the Junior Interfaculty Boxing have been finished, with the exception of one bout which is scheduled for today.

The finals in the boxing tourney will be held in the upper gym Saturday Night. Most of the contestants got in after the eliminations on Thursday. Three bouts were held yesterday — Kissick of SPS

Skule Become Mural Champs In Volleyball

The volleyball season ended yesterday with SPS III becoming interfaculty champions as they won the final from Meds III, three games to one. It was a best of five set for the championship.

The doctors managed a win in the first game, 15-13. The Skulemen roared back to take the next by a lopsided 15-3 count. The last games were closer but enough to win for SPS. The scores were 15-8 and 15-7.

Skule garnered most of their points on a type of shot they seemed to have patented for that game at least. The man playing close to the net got point after point by whacking the ball almost straight down. The Engineers were a bit more elert and got some more steam behind their shots and after the first loss, had things well in hand.

Jr. Blues Lose In Water Polo To Central Y

The University of Toronto Junior water polo team were handed their first defeat of the season Wednesday night, as the Central Y A team downed the Blues 12-9. The Varsity squad now has a record of two wins and one loss while the Y team has three victories. The final tilt of the season will be held in the Hart House pool next Thursday, and the Blues must win to stay in contention for the league title.

In Wednesday's contest, the Blues found themselves up against a new style of play, as their opponents played a rugged type of game. Before they could get used to this the Varsity squad found that they were on the wrong end of a 7-1 score. The Blues fought back for the rest of the game but were unable to overcome the big lead. They pulled up to within three tallies at the half, the score being 8-5, but couldn't gain any more in the second half.

Al Roger was top sharpshooter for the Blues as he potted five tallies. Teammate Bernie Langner

UC Beats Meds In Boxla Playoff

By JIM PROUDFOOT

A last-minute goal by the veteran of the lacrosse wars, Dutch Young was enough to give UC an 11-10 win over Meds in the second overtime period of yesterday's opener of the boxla finals. The Redmen will go into the second game of the best of three series sporting a one-game lead. It was a thriller with the verdict in doubt all the way. Young led his UC team to victory, his payoff marker being the last of four. Gear sparked the doctors with a fine five-goal display.

UC took the lead on several occasions but the Meds team came from behind every time except after Young's clincher when there wasn't enough time. It would be difficult to find two teams more evenly matched.

UC started with a flourish getting three goals in the first couple of minutes. Eagleson snapped in a shot at close range, Kopsky fired a blooper from centre that escaped Perkin and Watson grabbed a pass and went in alone for the third. Gear of Meds took an offside penalty, when he returned the Meds team came to life. McMelon sandwiched one between a pair by Gear, one on a breakaway and the other on a nifty close-in effort. The score was tied. Although UC was strong early in the period, in the latter half there were Medsmen all over the court. As the stanza ended, the referee was warning the boys about their over-exuberance.

The pace was the same in the second frame. Both teams got away for some great rushes but Perkin and Smela in the goals were very stady. In the middle of the period UC broke out with four unanswered goals. Eagleson and Watson counted and Young got a pair, both the result of deadly shooting. Bad luck, bad shooting and bad passing in the goal area were all that were keeping Meds off the scoresheet. Gear finally did register, leaving the halftime score at 7-4.

After the five-minute breather, the teams came out fighting. Sims and Watson went off in the first minute when Sims returned Watson's cross check with interest. While they were off, Gear went from end to end to pull one closer. Sims returned only to be banished again for holding. Vince tied the score for Meds with a brace of tallies that brought the crowd to its feet. For both, he went through the whole UC team, closely checked all the way. In the dying moments of the period, Young gave UC a short-lived lead that was erased when Gear got one on a pretty rush.

They were a little cosy in the fourth with so much riding on every play. While Eagleson was off for tripping, Kilty of Meds missed two chances that took the breath away. Sims was penalized again for interference on nothing happened while he was gone. Morton gave the doctors the lead for the first time, taking a pass from his own defence Watson tied it up and they went into overtime.

They played it close to the vest in the extra periods. Kopsky put UC ahead in the first on Vince got it back on a long shot that may have been screened. Going into the final two minutes both teams had chances galore to win but Young saved it for UC last minute to fire the clincher.

It was anybody's game and anybody's series. Young and Watson were the big guns for UC and it was Gear for Meds, leading rush after rush. Perkin and Smela looked good in goals. The next game is Monday at noon. The two teams play a good brand of lacrosse and they play it with plenty of gusto. The next ones will be games to see.

Jr. Wrestlers Continue Mee

Eliminations continued in the Junior Wrestling Tournament yesterday. Seven matches were held and the semi-finals wind up tomorrow.

In the first bout, Cross, Forestry beat Finkelstein, UC, at 1:05 of the third round. That was in the 107 pound division. In the same class Chewpa, Forestry, downed Montgomery, UC-PHE, at the 1:06 mark of the third. Again at 167, Aurthur of UC got the nod when Starkey Dents, failed to appear for the match.

A bout between Al Haig, UC-PHE and Bowers of Architecture, in the 177-pound section, provided the high spot of the card when Bowers took the fall at one minute of the second round. It was a hard-fought and speedy encounter.

Also at 177, Henderson of PHE felled Perstupa of the faculty at 2:11 in the first round. Phelan, SPS, won out over Tait also of Skule, in the 147 class. The end came at 1:10 in the first round.

The last bout of the day saw Cross of Forestry fight his second match within an hour when he opposed Beattie of Vic. Cross fought gamely for the full time but Beattie won on points, 6-5.

Added Weekend Attractions Dance, Singers, Speaker

Tonight and tomorrow evening, the Victoria College Music Club will present their annual Glee Club Concert in Emmanuel College Lecture Hall.

The Vic Glee Club was formed at the end of the war to accommodate those members of the Music Club who preferred choral work to the usual Gilbert and Sullivan operetta. Since that time, the Glee Club has annually presented a Christmas Concert, and last year represented Varsity at the Spring Festival of University Glee Clubs at Guelph.

This year's program is designed to appeal to a wide variety of tastes, for it includes everything from a sixteenth-century madrigal to Fred Waring's arrangement of "'Twas the Night Before Christmas." Since the emphasis is on Christmas music, the contralto soloist, Margaret Carmichael, will sing a group of four seasonal numbers. The piano soloist is to be Gloria Trimble, a first-year student at Victoria College.

INTERNATIONAL BALL

Hart House this evening will be the setting for a colorful display to be put on by the various national groups on the campus. There will be an entertainment program, featuring square and folk dancing, the latter in national costumes.

There will be dancing in the Debates Room, the Music Room, and the East Common Room from 9:00 to 1:00. Tickets are available at the four Arts Colleges, at the SAC office and at the Observatory from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m.

Some tickets are still available in Alumni Hall, Victoria College, every day from 10 till 2. Price is 75c each.

The Deputy High Commissioner from the United Kingdom, Mr. J. Thomson, O.B.E., will address the International Relations Club on "Whither Britain Now", a general discussion on the impact of Britain's international policies on the future of the country. The meeting will take place on Friday, December 7, at 4:10 p.m. in the University College Women's Union at 79 St. George St.

Mr. Thomson, a newcomer in Ottawa's diplomatic circles, is particularly qualified to speak on his country's future, having spent many years before this appointment in the Foreign Service Department.

Andy Watson, President of the International Relations Club, also announced that the Club's programme for the Spring term will be outlined at this meeting. A question and answer period will follow the address.

Hart House Insurance Suggested

Bobbie Rosenfeld, women's sports editor for The Evening Telegram, suggested in a column several weeks ago that the Athletic Directorate should investigate the possibility of insuring lockers in the Athletic Wing of Hart House against theft. She mentioned that a player on a team from the City League had lost some money when he left his locker open while playing in Hart House.

Athletic Association financial secretary J. P. Loosemore said that the YMHA team had its own locker room and that the attendants checked to see that the door of the room was locked when the team left.

On the question of insurance, Loosemore said that all they could do would be to take out a general policy which most likely would have to include a deductible clause which would rule out any small losses.

Whenever anything is lost, Loosemore said that the first thing that is checked is whether the locker was left open. He said that in practically every case when questioned closely, those robbed admitted leaving a key in a lock or leaving the door open.

There has been no case of a locker being broken into so far this year, according to Loosemore.

Crimson Attacks Anti-Red Rule

Cambridge, Mass. (Exchange) — Five Harvard University professors here have attacked the state anti-subversive bill which Massachusetts Governor Dever signed recently.

The act includes sections which outlaw the Communist party and penalizes any organization which rents an auditorium to a subversive organization.

Samuel H. Beer, Associate Professor of Government at Harvard, told the Harvard Crimson, "I think it is very possibly unconstitutional and I think in general that it is a great pity. I'm disgusted and indignant that the Governor should have signed it."

Zechariah Chafee Jr., a Harvard professor said that "all sedition bills are dangerous. No one can tell how far they will be carried. Eventually, they will be used against innocent people, not the ones meant by the original drafters of such bills."

Kirtley Mather, geology professor, said that "It is a very sad thing for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts when the legislature passes a measure which was not available for the individual legislators to examine carefully."

The 10 best bowlers in the Bowling Club will be chosen for the competition — so get bowling, girls, to improve your scores.

Math Professor Named To ISS

A Toronto man, Professor John Coleman, of the Mathematics Department, has been appointed chairman of the Administrative Committee of the Canadian ISS, International Student Service announced recently.

Prof. Coleman, a 1939 graduate of University College, has been associated with ISS since its organization in 1940. From then until 1943, while he was secretary of the Students' Christian Movement, he was acting treasurer of the National Committee of the ISS.

For the next two years, he helped with the ISS campaigns at Queen's University, where he was teaching mathematics. In 1945, he went to Geneva as a member of Assembly of World Student Relief, which is responsible for relief funds. He was back in Toronto in 1949 as a professor in Applied Mathematics and still working for ISS.

For the past year Coleman has been a member of the National Committee of ISS and was named chairman of the Administrative Committee on November 2 of this year. This committee carries out the policy laid down by the Canadian ISS conference which is attended by representatives of all Canadian Universities and this year held at Hamilton in October.

Prof. Coleman says he has worked in ISS and similar organizations since his student days for three reasons. One is the humanitarian appeal to help those in distress, the second a desire for Canadian students to get some understanding of the world and its views of Canada and of the third, he says, "Working to make ISS a strong reality is the best that any person can do to contribute to peace."

This year the Committee is concerned with two things particularly, he said. The first is the problem of displaced persons who are working in Canada and who want to go to University. The second is the next ISS seminar. There have been four seminars in the past, three in Europe and the last in Canada. ISS hopes to have the next one in South East Asia. However, the problem here is how to finance it.

It's the extra that counts...

in TORONTO

The University of Toronto ranks among the foremost educational institutions in the British Commonwealth. University of Toronto graduates have attained high distinction in the professions, politics and industry. Within the University walls scholars and scientists have done important research and made notable scientific discoveries.

Be proud of your University of Toronto. It's an extra that counts for a lot.

O'Keefe's BREWING COMPANY LIMITED FOR OVER 100 YEARS

T-12

A Subtle Brew

Subtlety has always been a trade mark of Canadian brewers' advertising. Not because they have any natural inclination for this sort of approach, but because provincial laws prevent them from being anything else. But this time we feel that O'Keefe's have made something of an all-time record in subtlety. In fact, they are so subtle that they are downright tantalizing.

Their finger plunged in Hart House's belly they say "It's the extra that counts." Extra what? Do they mean to say that University of Toronto students need a shot in the arm and Hart House patrons a beer in the hand.

O'Keefe's speak of the University of Toronto as ranking "among the foremost educational institutions in the British Commonwealth." And yet they end on the disquietening note, "It's an extra that counts for a lot." Almost a warning, it would seem, almost a challenge to our ability to maintain the traditions with which we have been so liberally blessed. And, as everyone knows, Tradition Counts—particularly in Canada Unlimited.

But tradition is a hard thing to maintain and keeping up to the past is a bit of a race, even for University of Toronto students. Somehow, we are expected to move forward while looking backward. It's a problem, advancing through a maze of tradition; but we must solve it.

However, O'Keefe's may have inadvertently stumbled on a solution, on a new road to the future. By putting a beer sign on Hart House, they may not only help themselves make a 100-year-old tradition pay, but contribute to our future as well.

There is supposed to be room to grow in Canada Unlimited, but the University of Toronto is continually faced with the problem of expansion. We need money to grow physically and room to grow mentally.

Two years ago, Varsity Sports Editor Bob Dnieper evolved an economic theory whereby the university would be able to increase its athletic facilities. As its basic ideas would seem to be valid today we would like to quote certain passages from it. Speaking of those using Hart House facilities he estimated that:

> "Ninety per cent admit they drink, and nine more per cent lie about it. The remainder have stomach ulcers. At a conservative estimate, if beer were sold at Hart House at least 10,000 glasses or bottles would be sold every day. From our hotel-owner friends we find that the clear profit after overhead and depreciation on each dollar taken in from the sale of the brew is fifty cents.
> With the concessions as to rent and taxes, the profit would be about 60 per cent with the result that each and every day $500 would be realized and if the summer months (with the summer sessions, etc.) are included, this take could be increased to $150,000 smackers per annum."

Maybe this is just a whisky dream; maybe an alcoholic daze surrounds us just like a scotch mist envelops the campus. Maybe we are just caught up in the subtle symbolism of an alcoholic advertisement.

(Jan. 13, 1947)
TRANSLATED FROM FRENCH IN A HURRY

At the rise of the curtain the scene which discloses itself strikes by the luxury of the decoration. At the beautiful middle of the stage, a piano finds itself in front of which is seated a tall Mister between two ages weary at the fact. He plays a piece of Debussy. All at a stroke, one sounds.

The mister: enter.

(The door opens itself, and a young girl of 18 years enters. She is dressed of tender green silk, and has the eyes black and the hair of the same. She carries a hat, and has the umbrella at the hand.)

The girl: Are you waiting since long?

The mister: Lifting the eyes at her face). There is an hour since I am seating myself at the front of this piano.

The girl: I am desolated of it, but the car of my uncle could not put itself in march during a 15 of minutes. And then the circulation in the city was formidable.

The Mister: Do not torment yourself more of it. That it is gentle to have you here, at the end! I die of envy of seeing you, there are two days, see you! Sit yourself at side of me.

(The young girl renders herself to the piano but does not profit of offer to seat herself. She has the air distracted.)

The Mister: What have you?

The girl: It is nothing. That will pass of itself. I have bad at the head a little, of marching in the car.

The Mister: Eh well, of the least you are here. I was so much deceived when the clock marked two hours and I was resting all alone.

Ou Est La Plume De Ma Tante?

Tragi-Comedie

(To the unknowing of the two the door has opened itself of new. A young man at the aspect very determined enters, a large revolver received at the hand. When he sees the two, he arrests himself, all dazed.)

The young man: By blue! This is too strong!

The Mister: Hold, Hold! What is it that passes itself here? Who are you making in my apartment?

The young man: It is well a case to say so. What arrives among you and her?

The young girl: That makes nothing to you. Go away. You turns herself of new to the mister. And now, let us return to our mutons.

The young man: Ah, traitress! Where is the pen of my aunt?

The young girl: I have not a to do with the pen that you come from mentioning!

The young man: Do not debit me with that! (He lifts the revolver and puts the mister in check.)

(Three gendarmes precipitate themselves into the chamber of the haste. The tall mister pushes a great cry of solace. The young girl puts herself to weep. Precisely at that moment there an old dame very aged flies into the scene.)

The old dame: Name of name, what are you making yonder my son? A such thing cannot itself! (She shows with the finger.) Here is the pen you seek.

The Pen: I was on the table of the gardener always!

(They retire themselves all the laughing of the pleasant mistake which has arrived, serving themselves of the main door. The music bursts in the Marseillaise, followed by pieces of execumstance.)

OUR READERS WRITE

India Needs Time

Editor, The Varsity

The theory expounded about India's current "crisis" (problems) by Mr. Dicken Durand is one-sided and mostly reveals his personal beliefs and prejudice. Indeed, his explanation of what he calls crisis should not be dignified by the word "theory". I am afraid, he possesses more misinformation than knowledge about that country and therefore he should check the findings of four generations of his family—army officers and autocrats, who saw India and interpreted her culture through their western eyes.

There was no nationalist spirit in India, so tells us Mr. Durand. This ririculous; he should not forget so soon the sane nationalism of Mr. Gandhi. Then he tells us that Canadians achieved Dominion status because they were Europeans.

This argument of his is irrelevent when discussing Indian self-government. Indians have ruled themselves for thousands and thousands of years producing a great civilization which some day Mr. Durand will be acquainted with. Naturally early Canadians achieved self-government because as Anglo-Saxons they had inherited government machinery which worked in the land of their ancertors. Now why should Indians worry about a form of government which does not come to them through historical and cultural process. Furthermore his assertion does not cover European affairs, for there are countries in Europe that are not democratically governed (in the North American sense) and have social structures that are feudal and dictatorial. One does not have to be a non-European to understand Anglo-Saxon democracy.

Mr. Durand wants India to be a democratic country when he realizes the Asiatics are different from the Westerners (I mean culturally). Precisely, it is for this reason that they should develop their own democracy, whatever that means, befitting their historical and cultural level.

India is a continent says Mr. Durand. Well, so what? So is North America with its different nationalities and races. It will not be impossible for India to assimilate its different elements by adopting a common language. This is being done and in fact one of the main languages will render the same service that English is doing to the heterogeneous elements of North America.

As to the inequality of wealth distribution in India it can be said about any other country. It is only a matter of degree. What did British rule do to correct such a condition? However, in Britain from the days of Lloyd George's government the rich were being hammered with heavy taxation in order to bring a redistribution of wealth and the process is still going on. India will do the same, given time, will you?

Yours sincerely,
Araya Ogbu
Grad Stud.

P.S.: I am not an Indian.

Boum-a-lacka

Welcome, Carabins! We are happy to have you here today at the beginning of your weekend in Toronto.

On other pages of this issue of The Varsity we have tried to demonstrate our skill at bi-lingualism. We hope you are amused. Some of us have been brushing up on your Boum-a-lacka, and our French songs also, and that may amuse you too.

Your Carabin weekend hosts have all kinds of things social planned for you, and we hope your stay in our city is a warm and cosy one. But we hope too that you will manage to find time to see what our university is like in the daytime, and that you will experience some of the good men and women who teach and direct us. With this too, we hope you will see something of the noon-hour rush at Hart House, and perhaps the Friday afternoon crush at the libraries. These too make up our university.

You may think on looking over the campus that this is a big mill of a place. And you will be quite right. Except that in this mill, we are not a vague unconscious mass, we are Varsity students who are glad that you are in our midst.

We hope altogether that you will take back to Montreal some of the flavor of Toronto Varsitee. And if we can we will also try to show you that we know at least the first line of "Auprès de Ma Blonde."

Debate at Caledon

There were many discussions on topics ranging from education to euthanasia on the Carabin weekend this year. Saturday night, Dwight Fulford, III Trinity, attempted to explain the federated college system of the University of Toronto. Fulford, second from the left, is an experienced debator and was a leader in this discussion. On Saturday there were over 90 students at the Hart House Caledon Hills farm and at a nearby lodge where this picture was taken. Later in the evening the Carabins and their hosts square-danced to tunes such as "Aupres de ma Blonde" and "Chopsticks."

Puck Blues Split Games Overwhelm McGill 5-1, Lose Second To Laval 6-3

The Hockey Blues returned home yesterday sporting a record of one win and one loss after playing their first two intercollegiate games in the province of Quebec. Friday night they decisively trimmed the McGill Redmen 5-1 but were set down 6-3 on Saturday by Laval University in Quebec City.

With all the intercollegiate teams suffering at least one loss so far in the young season, the race for the championship shapes up as being one of the best in recent years.

On Friday night the Blues began the new season against McGill in the same fashion that they left off last spring. The locals racked up five goals in the first two periods without an answer from the Montrealers. Only the stellar work of veteran goalie Bob MacLellan in the McGill nets kept the Blues' goal-getters from fattening their averages.

Paced by reliable Phil Arrowsmith who notched two goals, the Blues skated the Redmen into the ice. Don Rope, who scored one of the Blues' goals and assisted on another, dazzled the 1,000 spectators with his rushes while back at the blueline veteran Jack MacKenzie led a strong Toronto rearguard.

Doug Orr only let one of 24 shots get by him and made several saves to keep the McGill forwards off

Santa Claus And Divorce Take Up Carabins' Time

By IAN MONTAGNES

Carabin weekends have always been noted for their parties. This year's week-end wasn't very wild. The big parties broke up early, to be replaced by smaller group meetings. Most of the time at them was spent singing, or in discussion ranging from mercy killings to divorce. On Saturday, the group went to Caledon Hills for square dancing.

Not all the time was taken up by song and dance, although the French-Canadian rhythms were liable to break out at any time. The visitors from the University of Montreal also took time out to visit the subway, and (with much enthusiasm) Santa Clause, and to compare the educational systems of their province and Ontario.

This was the fourth year the Carabins had visited the Toronto campus. But this year the tour of Hart House brought a blush to the proud hosts' faces. On the walls of Great Hall, where the crests of all Commonwealth Universities are displayed, the blue and gold arms of Montreal could not be found. Hart House hasn't explained the absence, but someone suggested it was because the U. de M had been built after Hart House, and the addition was never made.

Friday morning the Carabins toured the subway construction. After that the hosts suggested the view from the Bank of Commerce, but they received a polite demurral from the French-Canadians.

"We would much rather go to see Santa Claus," they said. And see him they did, including a ride on the merry-go-round in a downtown's store's Toytown. That afternoon they were still showing the toys they had received as "prizes."

The most impressive thing about the visitors was their command of the English language. This seemed to reach a high peak when one of them imitated Jimmy Durante—in a way that made both Toronto and Montreal students cheer.

The English - Canadians were also impressed when they found out that in Quebec students get their BA when they're 18 — and then have to continue on for extra years to get a professional degree.

And some faces were red when a visitor commented that the third-year lecture she had attended that morning on "Hamlet" would have been given in Grade 11 or 12 in Quebec.

Thursday night the Carabins arrived in Toronto, and were rushed up to a reception at Trinity College, where they were greeted by officials of the University. Here some of the ice was broken—and the French-Canadians met the Torontonians at whose house they would be spending the coming nights.

Reserve soon broke down — so much so that when the Carabin group arrived at St. Mike's Carnival that night, they broke it up with their songs.

Toronto residence procedure meant an uncomfortable Friday night for two French-Canadian girls. They managed to get past the double locks of their residence —only to find the door of their room locked. The result: a night's sleep on the sofa.

Saturday afternoon and evening were spent in the seclusion of Hart House's Caledon Hills Farm. There they square-danced to "Chopsticks" and "Aupres de ma Blonde", after the PA system and records failed to show up.

Even there the discussions did not break up. One group was so determined to talk about divorce that they drove over five miles of hilly country to find a quiet spot.

Three of the Toronto boys made up parodies of English songs. The chorus of one, patterned after

Campus Profile

Susanne Morrow

Suzanne Morrow, I Vic, will represent Canada in the Olympics this year. Her list of Canadian skating titles includes: Junior Pair, Junior Ladies Champion, Senior Pairs, Fours and Dancing, and three times Canadian Senior Ladies Champ. Outside Canada, she won the North American Pairs in 1947, and was runner-up in the North American Ladies Championships, fourth in the World's in 1951, and placed third in pairs at the last Olympics.

Which is quite a list for a pert, blond, twenty-year old miss. Suzanne's day starts at six a.m. (except on weekends when she sleeps until seven). She exercizes two dogs, and then skates until her first class. As soon as classes are over, she is again out practising.

Suzanne graduated from Lawrence Park Collegiate in 1950, and stayed out of school for a year to devote her time to skating.

"I wanted to have something to think about besides skating, and to widen my circle of friends." So she entered Vic this year. "Here I hope to get away from skating a little, but it's very difficult."

She began skating when she was nine years old, just for the sport. But after winning her first competition in 1945, she began to skate seriously. She specialized in pairs until her Olympic partner turned professional; then she concentrated on singles. "I prefer doubles, but there are so very few men in Canada who figure skate."

She's seen some rather unique sights in her trips around Europe. "One day at a dance we were greeted by the Marquis of Milford-Haven, swinging gaily from the crystal chandeliers with a girl hanging from his feet!" Her most thrilling experience was the Olympic year, especially the opening, with pomp and royalty everywhere. She met King Michael of Roumania, Princess Anne of Bourbon, and ate at the next table to ex-King Peter of Yugoslavia.

"We kept getting mixed up with language." Suzanne speaks French "well enough to make myself understood", and even interpreted in French, for an Italian boy.

Missing trains, finding rats in one hotel, sending her baggage from Italy to Switzerland and then, because of language difficulties, getting on a train going in the opposite direction, are a few of the scrapes the young skater has been in. Last year she was taken into Vienna under military escort to skate in an exhibition. She learned something about the attitude of the Viennese toward the occupation forces.

"They're better towards the Russians, with the other occupying forces well-liked. They're striving hard to keep up a cheerful front." Switzerland, she said, was thriving, but the others were very poor.

"The Olympic Games are the lift they seem to need. There is a great deal of enthusiasm towards having the festivals in their countries. And the people of Europe certainly know how to entertain and make an outsider feel at home," she said. Before the competitions, she goes to bed early, but there is always a party afterwards. "The tours are full of life and fun", she sums up.

Although she has been in Europe three times, she's actually had very little time to see much of the countries. "This time", she vows, "I'll make time." She leaves Dec. 16 to skate exhibitions in Germany. Switzerland has invited her to do her pre-Olympic training there, and after the world's competitions, she's been invited to Copenhagen and Vienna. She returns the end of March and hopes to be able to write her examinations.

She likes her life at Victoria College; and wears a Vic ring which her father had made for her mother when they went to college. She's been a cheerleader for Vic, and was in the Bob Revue. Her friends are usually drawn from high school and university circles, that is, those outside skating circles. "I don't consider myself any different—I've had the opportunity to do something, and am extremely grateful for it." But she has fun in whatever she does. She participates in all kinds of sports; her pet hobby is breeding cats and dogs. She has three dogs, and until two weeks ago, had nine cats.

"I've always wanted to be a doctor, and will probably become a veterinary. She has no interest in participating in music, basket etc, "I started them all but gave them up." However, skating has taught her an appreciation of art in all forms, so that she says "I can recognize something good." As far as marriage is concerned she will make no plans until she stops skating. She does not intend to turn professional. "I want to get an education."

The young celebrity often attends functions such as the opening of building and rinks and has spoken to YMCA and at civic functions.

"The only time I feel nervous is when I get up to speak in a classroom." She pdefers to ad lib getting mixed up if she prepared a speech. "I never feel nervous when I skate. Nervousness is usually attached to something you're not sure about." The only time she worries is in presenting a new program before an unknown audience.

And at international functions her predominant feeling is "the over-all effect to know that I'm representing my country."

U of T Wins Debate Trials

The University of Toronto te of Neville Taylor, I UC, and Jo Barton, IV Trinity, won the Br ing Trophy trials held at Br nan Hall on Saturday and will re resent the four competing Ca dian universities in the Canadi Scottish Debating Championsh in January.

Debates Commissioner Charl Hanley, IV UC, said that it was very close debate. Each team awarded one first place by of the four judges. However, H ley said that Toronto was a two seconds and this gave th the championship.

McGill, Queen's, Western Toronto each sent one judge the trials. Hanley explained Judges from Western, Quee and McGill judged the Tor team. Both Taylor and Bar opposed the motion, which wa "Resolved that the Iranian go ernment was justified in nat alizing the Iranian oil industry."

One member of the McGill te debated on each side of the qu tion.

Each debater was judged o his individual merits and t points were then added togethe for the team total.

Freedom's Only Sources · Religion, University-Frye

English is now (in the 20th century) what Latin was in the 16th — the language which a small educated class uses to communicate thoughts, according to Professor Northrop Frye in his speech to the Carabins and their hosts at the Newman Club on Saturday.

Speaking on the "Ideals of a University Education", Prof. Frye said that apart from religion and the university there is no freedom. Ordinary life is divided into work and distraction, he said, and it is to religion and the University that one must look for freedom. By the university he meant "the University in a broader sense than the institution by that name which is often devoted to the social processes." He defined the open forum of free discussion as constituting the University in the larger sense.

Prof. Frye wondered whether the challenge to the pioneer has not shifted from the physical to the cultural realm within the last 25 years. He commented on the hardiness needed by the mental and cultural pioneer who now has a greater task than his grandfather, who may have walked five miles to school. The modern pioneer has to withstand lies and bombardment in his pursuit of Beauty and Truth. The person who can read comic books and still have an interest in painting is in Prof. Frye's opinion a monument of athletic endurance and mental hardiness.

The more insidious insults are represented in advertising he said. "Advertising in all its forms is an ironic art which says what it does not mean." He thought that the individual has to build up a kind of athletic ability to resist advertising.

Students today are more tightly insulated, he thought, and are no longer as articulate nor as willing to talk to other people. Prof. Frye said that students are subjected to a tremendous strain from being surrounded by emotional irony and "things which are not what they mean". He felt that it was no wonder that so many collapse to reading Time, the Reader's Digest and "other forms of Adult thought".

In his opinion a student has done something pretty impressive if he can still believe in democracy after reading what the newspapers call it. He said the person who can speak English represents a triumph for education and a resistance to many things, including educational processes. Prof. Frye felt that the people who are interested in such things as the pursuit of Beauty and Truth are bound to feel isolated, like "a lighthousekeeper who has lost his lighthouse".

Prof. Frye said that it is here that the University becomes important. It is very difficult, he felt, to make the University prostitute itself to promote the cause of discord.

On the subject of students, he commented that it is an error to imagine that any "goon" is a student, even though he may represent student opinion. Frye said that one is not a student until he has accepted what the University stands for.

Meeting With West Postponed By IUS

The Intramural Union of Students (IUS) has definitely postponed until next year a proposed meeting between that Communist-dominated body and the western national student unions which have, in the past, found it difficult or impossible to co-operate with it.

A letter received recently from IUS has said the unity meeting can definitely not be held this month, Syd Wax, Chairman of the International Activities Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, (NFCUS) said late last night.

The Canadian student body, which requested the meeting, had hoped it could be held before the Edinburgh conference at the end of this month, when the western student unions will meet to make plans for co-operation. This will be the second such meeting; the first was in Stockholm last December.

The letter from Prague said the IUS was "happy" that NFCUS was urging that such a unity meeting be held, since they were "convinced that it will be a great step forward in the cause of international student co-operation."

However, they said, the meeting could not be held in the third week of December, as proposed, because of "technical difficulties." They also said they hoped, by postponing the meeting, to obtain the widest possible participation in it.

Wax expressed great surprise at the second reason, since NFCUS sent the proposal to them at the beginning of the school year. "It is surprising that they have taken no initiative in the meeting, especially after NFCUS has sent letters to other national student unions asking them to participate in it," he said.

"I wonder if the IUS hasn't deliberately postponed the meeting in order to leave a question mark hanging over our heads at Edinburgh", Wax commented.

Without the unity meeting, he said, there is no way of knowing what its effects will be. The Western unions would not know whether or not the IUS was willing to co-operate when they decided on policy at Edinburgh, he pointed out.

The letter also expressed IUS willingness to meet with NFCUS representatives in Europe before the Edinburgh meeting. This meeting would be to discuss preliminary arrangements for a unity meeting, Wax said.. He is requesting permission from the NFCUS executive to attend the meeting, he said.

With the proposal of the meeting NFCUS sent IUS a list of points which had to be met by IUS if Canadian students were to continue working with it. They include more respect for rights of minorities, a decentralization of activity, and the banning of political affairs from IUS activity.

The letter from Prague said that IUS secretariat was in agreement with many of the points, and was willing to discuss all of them. It also suggested a number of other points of co-operation between the two bodies, including disarmament, the Five-Power Peace Pact, and the fight against colonization.

Blames Rearmament For U.K.'s Troubles

Had Korea and the subsequent rearmament program not come, "Britain would now be on its feet," Mr. J. Thomson, Deputy High Commissioner from the United Kingdom, claimed last Friday afternoon. Despite domestic austerity and troubles in Malaya, Iran and Egypt, Thomson felt that the British people had the will and spirit to eventually stabilize themselves.

The Deputy High Commissioner was speaking on "Whither Britain now?" at an open meeting of the International Relations Club in the Women's Union. In the view of the United Kingdom, he said, the Marshall Plan saved Europe, and the British Isles, by providing the necessary materials and hope.

Thomson pointed out that while Britain depended to a great extent on exports, her rearmament commitments were demanding an ever-increasing cut in exportable production. The government in the U.K. is faced with the job of teaching the workman to accept austerity, he stated. In the question period that followed the speaker declared that about 25 percent of Britain's engineering exports, such as tractors and locomotives, which are in heavy demand, have had to be reconverted to arms production.

Referring to the international political sphere, Thomson said that "giving India her independence was one of the wisest things Britain had done. It avoided what might have been a running sore for many years." He did not elaborate on the "spot of trouble" in Malaya, but only commented that one "would not voluntarily choose a Malayan's life."

As for Iran and Egypt, Thomson maintained that they have openly rejected the "rule of law." Legally, he said, Britain had the right to the oil and the Suez. "Do we enforce respect for international law?" he asked. "Egypt has the answer."

Talking of Britain's future, Thomson said that she had learned "to cut her suit to fit the cloth." In spite of the Colombo Plan commitments, the $13,000,000,000 rearmament program, the military training of young men for Eisenhower, and the diminished incomes from overseas investment, Thomson felt that Britain would go ahead in the spirit of Napoleon's officers who had said: "If difficult, then it is done; if impissible, then it will take a little time."

Respect Minorities, Religious Freedom In P.Q. — Carabins

The outstanding characteristic of the province of Quebec is freedom of religion and respect for minorities, according to Alfred Dubuc who represented the University of Montreal in the discussion on Ontario and Quebec educational systems which was held Friday. The discussion was part of the program planned for the visit of 40 Carabins to the University of Toronto. Dubuc, Warden Ignatieff, and Margaret Fleming, IV UC, spoke in Alumni Hall, Victoria College following which the Carabins and their hosts continued the discussion in smaller groups.

Dubuc said that in Quebec education is the responsibility of the parents and of religion rather than the state, although the technical schools, which were started fairly recently, are directly controlled by the province and thus are removed from this tradition.

The technical schools profess absolute religious neutrality, he said, but in reality they are not absolutely neutral. Dubuc said that a Freemason controlled the studies of the technical schools, as well as being Dean of the Shawinigan school, and that the fanaticism of the Freemasons as well as the alliance between them and the communists was well-known.

Both the Protestants and the Jews in Quebec have the choice of forming their own school boards, Dubuc said, although the Jews have decided to remain under the Protestant committees as long as their children do not take religious instruction. He explained that the larger religious group in the community elects commissioners while the minority elects a separate committee of trustees, both committees taxing their own people separately and governing their own affairs. Because of their respect for the religious rights of minorities, Dubuc said that the people of Quebec are grieved when minorities suffer in other provinces.

Dubuc added that the establishment of a neutral university is a subject of speculation among French-Canadian students. Because all French-Canadians must study in one of two catholic universities, he felt that as a result the universities are not as Christian as they might be. A neutral university, it was hoped, would mean more personal and intense religion in the two existing universities.

Some of the problems facing the universities in Quebec, he said, were lack of scholarships, need of state aid and the problem of federal intervention in education.

The University of Toronto is developing towards liberal or "neutral" education, according to Warden Nicholas Ignatieff. He said that by this he meant that the university does not build on any set of philosophical pre-conditions. The fact that there is no definite philosophy of life, the Warden said, is both an accusation and a defence.

Some people at the University say that Toronto has a Christian tradition, but Ignatieff quoted the Student Christian Mission as saying that the problem is that the university is not based on a Christian tradition.

He defined the purpose of the university as being to examine the background, not to build on it. This enables the university to offer many courses and to have professors of every type and view. However this raises the question of a professor propagandizing. Warden Ignatieff said that a professor could be rejected from the university of he claimed that his personal opinion was the truth.

Toronto has gradually broken away from the classical tradition, with a resulting increase in the difficulty of relations between the different faculties. He quoted Ortega y Gasset as stating that much of Europe was now suffering from the man learned in one thing and ignorant in others. Specialization must be allowed, the Warden felt, in spite of the resulting worries.

Peace Club By-Elects SPS Men

The results of the University of Toronto Peace Council by-elections as announced on Friday by an official of the Council are: vice-president, K. Gradwell, SPS, and Publicity Director, D. Thompson, SPS.

According to President, Dennis Bishop, the fact that the Executive Committee is now complete will permit the Peace Council to discuss further possible amalgamation with the United Nations Club. The vice-president was to have been elected in the fall, and this being December it happened at the right time, he said.

The previous holder of the Publicity Director's post failed his year, and so this position was left vacant, necessitating the other entry in the by-election.

Debate Tonite

An open debate is being held tomorrow night in St. Joseph's College common room at eight o'clock. The visitors will be Brescia Hall from London. Anne McGinn and Alice McGovern are to support the resolution, "Resolved that the Liberal Party should have won the last provincial election". Their opponents will be Margaret Flannery and Julianne Roach. In the chair will be Leo Cavasen, I Osgoode Hall, the former chairman of the UTDU.

By DAVID PEDDIE

Never have there been so few plays in Toronto as this past fall and two of the best ones were performed at the Royal Alex before we had a chance to review them. We refer to DEATH OF A SALESMAN and MR. ROBERTS. The only really first class professional show reviewed in this column was the Drama Quartette's DON JUAN IN HELL.

Naturally, after feeling cheated of seeing the usual number of good plays, we have spent the last five weeks since the Royal Alex closed, waiting for the Jupiter Theatre production of GALILEO, hoping that perhaps here would be another professional show. But it seems that the review must wait until January, for we doubt if this play will be exceptional.

Of all the local groups, the Jupiter Theatre certainly has the best experienced actors in its cast. The advertising lists John Draine, Lorne Greene, and Margo Christie, who have all done fine stage work here even though radio is their main interest, and there are other good people who are perhaps not quite as well known. Besides being better than average these actors are all getting paid — a fact that is as unusual as it is encouraging. If the management can made some money this year perhaps the actors will all make a living-wage. However, we are inclined to doubt if anyone will ever make a decent salary from acting alone in this town. The theatre business just doesn't pay unless you live in London or New York, and by all accounts it doesn't pay too many people in either of those fabled cities. Still people insist on going on the stage, so let us hope that Toronto doesn't completely fail them.

We think that it will be in keeping here to mention that the Jupiter Theatre is trying to avoid the adjective "amateur". There was a noticeable dash of amateurism in the dear departed New Play Society and in the presentation and reception of TI-COQ. It is what one usually expects of local talent.

Compared with the "Support us and keep us in Canada" theme, the Jupiter Theatre has shown great restraint. They are offering tickets at a reduced rate to students, and they have both a good play and good actors. Bertolt Brecht is a German who spent some of the last war in America. He writes well and seriously and his GALILEO should be of some interest to people interested in the theatre.

The director, Herbert Whittaker, used the phrase "epic style" in describing GALILEO. By "epic style" is meant an objectivity in presentation more like the narrating of a play than the acting of it. The play does not try to fool the audience into feeling everything along with the characters, but it tries to tell a story and give the audience the point of view of the author. The story of GALILEO is told in modern terms so that all can fully understand both GALILEO and the fact that modern things are not always new things.

Philosopher's Stone

By BARBARA SCREATON

"Long did I journey, and to those whom I believed to have knowledge of anything did I make my way. From one I had the universal Green Lion of God and the Blood of the Lion — that is, Gold — not the gold of the vulgar, but the Gold of the Philosophers. I saw it with my own eyes; I touched it with my own hands; I tasted it with my own tongue; I smelt it with my own nostrils!"

Khunrath the Alchemist.

Very unlike the scientific language of the present day was the mysterious cabalism of the alchemists' working formulae. A true alchemist, operating with the help of dusty old manuscripts, secret symbols, and the ancient wisdom of the Adept, was very scornful of the gold-hungry "Puffers" who attacked the problem of transmuting base metals into gold through methods of practical chemical research. These last were the men who accidently founded modern science, but they were not the true initiates of the great Alchemic Science.

"The symbolic iconography of the Great Work indicates a luminous, unvarying, and very sure method, thanks to which the adept cannot go astray if he follows it exactly." The true Method, unlike the complicated bungilings of the Puffers, is beautifully simple, if you know how to go about it right.

To start with, it is necessary to "pray theosophically and work physico-chemically." The goal is the attainment of the Philosophers' Stone, which "is a Stone of great virtue, and while is called a Stone, is not a stone." The primitive material of alchemy is mercury, but purified and quickened into the "Mercury of the Philosophers, which is the true Mercury; common mercury is only its bastard brother." This must then be changed by the conjunction of salt and sulphur into "a Water which shall not wet the hands." This in turn goes through seven operations which convert it into the White Elixir: to wit, Purgation, Sublimation, Calcination, Exuberation, Fixation, Separation and Conjunction. The next five processes (Distillation, Assation, Reverberation, Dissolution and Coagulation) are even easier, since they "are no more than one sole and single operation performed in one and the same vase."

To check the correctness of one's procedure, it is only necessary to watch the colours of the various phases. These are Black (blacker than black itself), White (the Elixir), Green (symbolically the Green Lion), and Red (the Ruby Stone of Redness, Duenegh viride Adrop, the Quinessence!).

"The Great Work is completed with fire, not common fire, which is brutal and fratricidal fire, but the Fire of the Sages, which does not burn at all, but vivifies." All this must be done in a Philosophic Egg, which must be "of good Lorraine glass, oval in shape or round, clear, and thick; with a neck nine inches long, made to hold four ounces of distilled water, and hermetically sealed." The heating by the Fire of the Sages is of course accomplished in a properly constructed Cosmic Furnace. (See Annibal Barlet, "Le Vray Cours de Physique.)

The work must be commenced, according to the best authorities, when the Sun is in the Archer and the Moon in the Ram, and completed during the conjunction of the Sun and Moon under the sign of the Lion.

Observe diligently, and heed ye theosophically, O mine apprentice, lest in the performing of this Work ye should lay a Philosophic Egg.

Flee Fluttering Bat At McGill Library

(Reprinted from the McGill Daily)

Montreal (CUP)—Though innovations are constantly being introduced at McGill, the newest came yesterday when an intellectual bat was seen flying around Redpath Library. This studious bat, upon hearing of the high standards of education at McGill decided to leave its usual Varsity habitat and journey to Montreal's pride and joy.

Shrieks of horror and sudden bursts of laughter resounded as the bat swooped hither and yon. Some students of stouter heart stayed to take part in the hilarious proceedings—or die in the attempt. Others who were not so heroic formed part of the mass evacuation from Redpath.

Those who remained at the scene were treated to a breathtaking spectacle. For, as students fled through the tunnel and all possible exits, one brave librarian decided to take matters into her own hands. Courageously she charged the intellectual monster as it descended towards her. However, the evasive bat was not to be denied as it continued to hold the spotlight.

Order was finally restored when the bat, having obtained the information which it had set out to find, subsided to a dark corner.

The poems Death Scene and Duet, written by Charles Rea, II Vic, won first prize in the Serious Verse contribution to last year's Literary Issue of The Varsity. The first prize for Light Verse was awarded to R. W. Shepherd, II Medicine for the selections Lament and Collected Poems.

death scene

Shooting twin arcs of silvery spray to the wind
A motor boat, its prow raised in defiant salute
To the elements, planks heavily upon the wind-curdled surface. . . .
It roars past the point where
Whitewashed by an indifferent sun, a summer cottage
Sits like a sprawling skeleton, surrounded
By sky-seeking pines, on an ageless rock
That lifts its brutish weatherbeaten head

duet

Soft-blown, a leaf fluttered quietly
Across an early evening sky in autumn.
"I feel like these trees," said the youth
With the hair prematurely white.
And the shadows under his bright shiny eyes
Deepened with the dusk.
"Perception is the mere toy of Time,"
Said the slim spectre walking beside him.
"Have you not felt your soul balloon
Upward, softly, softly,
Till buoyant in suspension
Against the pale pink wash of another sky?
Thus you have told me."
"Yes—that was true
Of a glittering moment."
"Then," said he, "you must tell wizened faces
Struggling in chaos under a great dome of glass
That the time is now
For remembrance of swirling dust and dreams."

lament

wherefore this titration, this test tube, this beaker?
this monotonous lecture by an ill-fitting speaker?
this high school exam patrolled by a peeker?
whereto all these years each day getting bleaker,
the staff making sure we get meeker and meeker,
our wives all insisting we make them a squeaker while our timetables plot to make us all weaker and our wallets the while get sleeker and sleeker?
Ah profitless life as a techniquer seeker
I think I will drown in a mug of paprika.
Quite later. Hic pardon. This is it. Yes. Eureka!

BLUES BEAT BRITONS

the scoresheet. Three of the Varsity goals were scored when their opponents were shorthanded, which indicates the effectiveness of the Blues' attack when they had the odd man advantage. Besides Rope and Arrowsmith, Johnny Adams and Al Conboy were the other Varsity marksmen.

Saturday night at Laval it was a different story. There the Blues faced a win hungry aggregation that showed plenty of hustle in outplaying the Blues in two of the three periods. The fact that the Blues won the intercollegiate silverware last year meant little to the Laval entry who doubled the score on the Friday night winners. Claude Roy led the Quebeckers with a neat hat trick while the Fox-Conboy-Vernon line provided the spark from Varsity's side. The Blues held the lead only once, briefly, in the first period on the strength of Al Conboy's goal at the 3:43 mark. However, Roy came back with two early goals for Laval and after that the Frenchmen were never headed.

Jack Ross who played goal for the Blues made several exceptional saves, especially in the second period and prevented further embarrassment for the visitors. Defensively, Varsity was hampered when Gerry Fitzhenry received a three-stitch cut near the end of the second period and didn't return till midway through the last frame. That left Varsity's defence in bad shape all around, since besides that fact that Joe Kane didn't make the trip, it was further hampered when Jack McKenzie got one of his skates bent and couldn't get it changed.

The game, which was played before approximately 2,700 rabid home-town fans, provided its share of thrills. Twice Blues' centre, Don Rope, went right in on Laval's goalie, Vezina, only to be outlucked by the stocky netminder. Along with Conboy, Norm Fox and Jack Weldrake provided the other Toronto goals.

Mikemen Win Skunk Skule

In the inter-faculty hockey scramble on Friday, St. Mike's A's whitewashed the Sr. Engineers' squad to the tune of 7-0, to give goal-tender Grossi his first shutout of the Interfaculty season.

St. Mike's scored four times in the first period, seemingly at will, with Tom Kane being the big gun, notching two of his three goals in this frame. Hunt and McDonald got the other two tallies.

The second period was still St. Mike's all the way, with goals by Kane, Hunt and McDonald, who seemed to be the only men on the double-blue squad who could score, although Arrigo and Jerome missed several close chances.

Harwich received a misconduct but served only part of it before the bell rang.

Best for Skule were Burley, Hookings and Smith, Burley especially threw two or three crushing body-checks. For the winners, Kane, Hunt, McDonald and Cole shone.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Basketball Blues' win over Albion in their first home game of the season Saturday night was somewhat of a surprise to many, in view of the series of four consecutive losses at the hands of American Colleges on their recent road trips. Although the Blues before the season were generally expected to be better than last year with nearly the whole team returning, their first two weeks' work did not compare very well with last year's team's fine record of six wins over American colleges, including two that beat the Blues in their first two games this year.

Albion, of course, was definitely below par for the course —the Blues outclassed them in every department. We would have to see what the team can do against opposition that can jump, pass, shoot, and check a lot better than Albion did Saturday, in order to say whether the Blues are better than last year or not. We would also have to see them on a full-size floor; Albion, with a small team and a quick-break style of play, was definitely handicapped playing in the Hart House hat box. Wednesday's game at Buffalo U., who beat Toronto by two points last year, should make for a better basis of comparison.

Bud Natanson, back at centre, is a wee bit taller (6'7") and heavier this year according to the publicity releases, and while he was not shooting as well Saturday as he did sometimes last year, his rebound work was almost faultless. He has a capable sub this year in spindly 6'6" Ray Monott.

Art Binnington and Lou Lukenda share the forward post that plays under the hoop on the offensive, just as last year. Ed Maynerick in the "out" forward position is not as good as Jack Gray last year in our opinion, although he has a lovely set shot and is probably a little better in a passing game than Gray.

Bill Huycke, back at guard, is vastly improved. In addition to his floor play, he can now put the ball in the basket, an asset which we dare say never hurt any basketball player. Garry Glover and Don Fawcett share the other guard spot. While Glover is no Eddie Brennan, he can still score (10 Saturday) it seems, and Fawcett is improving, especially in passing and dribbling.

Add it all up and it comes out just about the same as last year.

Arrowsmith

Phil Arrowsmith, veteran winger with the Senior Hockey Blues notched two goals in Intercollegiat games over the weekend as Varsity won one and lost one on the puck scene.

Varsity Cagers Win Albion Lose 63-51

The Blues outshot, out-passed, out-jumped, and outchecked Albion College Britons in the basketball season opener which was the feature attraction of the Athletic Night Saturday night, to put the first mark in their win column, 63-51. Except for a lapse midway through the third period which they snapped out of just in time in the last quarter, Varsity was a vastly superior team.

They took the score to 45-25 in the middle of the third period. From then until five minutes into the last quarter the Blues scored only two points up to 47-40, four hoops away from a winning margin. The Blues looked very tired and became pretty disorganized in this part of the game, throwing the ball away, fouling (Albion scored a large number of their points then on foul shots) missing shots, and failing to check. The Blues were using a zone defence, which while it requires less running, demands very aggressive checking. Being 20 points ahead, the team let up a little, but when they recovered they scored 16 more points to make the win certain.

The zone defence and the small gym handicapped Albion, since with only three men over 6' tall and no one over 6'2", they depended on quick breaking. The Blues stopped the quick break, which beat Buffalo State in Albion's game with State Friday night, and Albion didn't seem to have anything else. They weren't tall enough to get rebounds — Natanson, Lukenda, and Binnington played exceptionally well in this department. They couldn't shoot when kept away from the hoop, and their passing was wild. Their sharpest looking player was a slight bespectacled negro named John Porter, who scored 10 hoops against Buffalo but was kept in check by Toronto.

Line-Ups

TORONTO — Centre, Natanson 11; forwards, Maynerick 6, Lukenda 9; guards, Huycke 15, Glover 10; Fawcett 4, Binnington 6, Monnot 2, Oneschuk.

ALBION — Centre, Mohl 5; forwards, Frost 4, Little 9; guards, Porter 9, Dempsey 7; Flanagan 10, Betz 5, Sheathelm 2, Pinkney, Fowler.

Decisions Feature Interfac Boxing

One of the events that took place in Hart House on Saturday night were the Final bouts of the Junior T Intramural Boxing Tournament. The seven matches were very even for four of the contests ended in split decisions.

In the 130 lb. contest between B. Blanshard and T. Nakamichi, both of SPS, Blanshard was awarded a split decision. He displayed fast, hardswing attack against his opponent's advantage in reach and style, and succeeded in partially closing Nakamichi's left eye by the end of the bout.

The 135 lb. bout between R. Reilly of St. Mike's and H. Solway of UC ended in a split decision going to Reilly. The decision should have been unanimous, for Reilly displayed a lot of boxing knowhow and a very punch for the 135 lb. class and only Solway's greater height and poor gumption saved him from absorbing a greater punishment.

The 140 lb. contest between C. Solomon of UC and D. Kissick of SPS was called off at the last moment when Solomon reported an injury received in Friday's semi-final.

The 147 lb. final between M. Miller and V. Prendergast, both of SPS, culminated in a very fast exchange, with Miller earning a split decision. The smaller Miller outfought his opponent in the first round, just managed to hang on in the second and came back in the third to win the officials' nod.

H. Tilson of UC won a split decision over H. Smith also of UC in the 155 lb. class, the best contest of the evening. It was a very keen contest, with both fighters displaying good boxing style and being in topnotch condition, and only Tilson's aggressiveness gave him the edge needed for the win.

In the 165 lb. contest L. Wade of SPS defeated P. Fisher also from SPS by a unanimous decision in a rather one-sided fight. All that may be said for Fisher, is that he covered himself very well and blocked a good number of Wade's punches.

The 175 lb. bout between A. M. Acton of SPS and H. Frame UC-PHE was a prolonged slaughter and should have been stopped much sooner than it was. Acton was awarded a TKO at 55 seconds of the third round, after he had proceeded to batter Frame's face to a bloody mess.

In the last fight on the card, two heavyweights from SPS, R. Stevenson and Stoyan fought for almost two rounds, before Stevenson was declared winner by a TKO, after scoring two consecutive knockdowns on Stoyan on hard punches to the head. Stevenson was the superior boxer while Stoyan kept forcing the fight with wild haymakers.

The fights were late in starting, which was unfair to the first two fighters who were sitting in the ring sweating it out while officials stood around wasting time.

Jr. Mat Champs Decided At A-Nite

During the Athletic Night held at Hart House on Saturday, five bouts were fought for the Junior Intramural Wrestling Championships.

The first bout of the evening was in the 137 lb. weight class. G. Stewart from Vic pinned W. Russell, UC-PHE, halfway through the second round.

K. Kopera, UC-PHE, won the 147-lb. match from P. Phelan, SPS, by a score of 2-0. Kopera got his points in the second round on a reversal.

In the best wrestling display of the evening P. Nichols, PHE, defeated D. Cucin, also PHE, by 5 points to 2. Nichols threw Cucin in the first for two points, then Cucin reversed to even the score and Nichols scored two more on another reverse.

The 167 - lb. match between I. Salsberg, UC-PHE, and D. Beatty from Vic ended early, when Salsberg downed Beatty for two points and went on to pin him at 1.45 of the first round.

The 177 - lb. match between T. Bowers from Architecture and P. Henderson, UC-PHE, was won by Henderson on a score of 8-4. Henderson downed Bowers for two in the first round and reversed for two points in the third round.

The 191-lb. crown was awarded to D. Hamilton, SPS, by default.

Intermeds Win Down Ryerson For 56-38 Win

The Varsity Seconds came from behind in the second half at Hart House Saturday night to cop their third win in three starts. Ryerson Tech combined a lot of luck with a lot of spirit to build up a 21-20 lead at half-time, but the second half was no contest as the Baby Blues ran away to their 56-38 victory.

Jim Russel took over from George Stulac, who was away at a swimming meet, as high scorer for the game with 16 points. Al Dancy was second high with 11 points. Al Brown played his best game so far for Varsity and defensively, he was the best man on the floor.

Ted Toogood, Argo footballer and coach of Ryerson, had his boys keyed up for this game and they took advantage of the breaks in the first half, capitalizing mainly on some inept shooting by the Intermediates.

Ryerson didn't score during the first five minutes of the last period and had only two shots at the well-guarded Blue basket during that time. Varsity took advantage of this lapse to pour in 12 points to lead 47-30. Dave Primeau, whose shooting was sometimes phenomenal, scored 4 of those points hooping one long shot from Ryerson's side of the center line.

Bill Didich and Izzie Sharp were the best for Ryerson scoring 10 and 7 points respectively, but neither they nor their team could stop the Blues in that last half as Varsity completely outchecked and outran them.

Dawson For Two As Meds Win 3-1

John Dawson scored once in each period to lead Sr. Meds to a 3-1 decision over Sr. UC. His first goal came after a scramble in front of the UC net; his second, which was the clincher, was scored on a smooth passing play. The only one to beat Walker, Med's goalie, was Billy Bewley who scored seconds after the faceoff which started the second period. A pushing match between Tillson and Varga which resulted in a double penalty was the only show of vitality during the poor exhibition of hockey. Jim McGillivray, who is captain of the Med's team scored the final goal late in the third period on a beautiful solo effort.

Peace Council

Hiram Scarum!

Editor, The Varsity:

With reference to Mr. Anderson's letter in Thursday's Varsity, there is a point requiring a little clarification.

The expression "one of Hiram's boys" is capable of a number of interpretations. My father's name is Robert and the only Hiram I know is the present Mayor of Toronto. Now, if Mr. Anderson means that my tenure of office is to be as shortlived as that of the present Mayor, that may be true. If he means that my views are similar to those of the Mayor, I am afraid that I have never engaged the Mayor in conversation and cannot therefore say if this is so or not; maybe Mr. Anderson is more familiar with the Mayor. A predilection for travel in the British Isles might be a point of contact between the Mayor and I, but this is an interest shared very widely.

One other interpretation of this expression might be made, but it would have to be in camera with reporters excluded, and I hardly think Mr. Anderson would go that far. Besides I am very happily married and the charge would hardly stand up to investigation.

I would like to echo Mr. Anderson's charge to the student body, however, to decide whether they want a Peace Council or not, a Peace Council which in the past has for reasons which are obvious only to Mr. Anderson, witheld a list of past members.

The Son(s)

Of God

Editor, The Varsity:

A report in Thursday's Varsity contained a statement that according to the Baha'is, the essential teachings of Baha'u'llah and Christ are the same. It is not the case that this is so. The report claims that it is in terms of their relationship with God and their purpose in being sent to the world of humanity that Baha'u'llah and Christ are said to be equal, since an objective investigation of the Scriptures of the Baha'is and of the Christians gives different purposes for the parallels in their life sufferings on this earth. The report claims that "He (Baha'u'llah) bore all these ordeals and calamities in order that our hearts might become enkindled and radiant, our spirits glorified, our faults become virtues, our ignorance transformed into knowledge". The central doctrine in Christianity is that God made Him sin, Who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Christ claimed that He came to be the reconciliation for our sins, and that by trusting Him for this we should have a new life. After, and only after, this step of faith in the atoning death of Christ do our lives become transformed. In view of this, it cannot be held that the essential spiritual teachings of Baha'u'llah and Christ are the same.

Brewers Et Al

EnDOWments

Editor, The Varsity:

The recurrence of a deplorable editorial attitude last Friday stirs me to take up my pen. I should like to reassure the brewers, vintners and distillers of this country, even the bad ones, that they have some friends in this university.

In parts of the campus (though of course not in Emmanuel or Knox) there are people who consider that the choice of beer over water as a beverage is as natural, as justifiable, and as righteous as the choice of filet mignon over pork and beans as a main course. There are also in some of the same quarters people who consider that the businesses of brewers, vintners and distillers are as normal as the businesses of jewellers, furriers and Cadillac-makers.

The products of brewers et al are luxury items. But so is a filet mignon. Many find these luxury beverages enjoyable to drink; some do not. Many find caviar pleasant to eat; some do not. Beer has many of the nutritional values, e.g. calories, found in milk, and caviar has many of the nutritional values found in jelly. Some people are so constituted that the drinking of alcohol leads them to a condition of illness which makes their body demand more alcohol — alcoholism. Some people are so constituted that the eating of sugar leads to a condition of illness which makes their body demand more sugar — diabetes. Alcoholic beverages are sometimes used to induce relaxation socially. Aspirin is sometimes used to induce sleep. The use of filet mignon, caviar, sugar and aspirin in due conditions is not bad, nor is it condemned. Some people are confirmed in their judgment that the use of the products of brewers et al falls properly into the same class. That is to say, there is no qualitative difference in beer that warrants a peculiar attitude towards its producer.

Some ascetics might suggest that whisky is bad because it is a luxury. Now whiskey may be bad because there is a dead mouse in the bottle, but it is not bad because it is a luxury. "Luxury" comes from the Latin luxus" meaning "abundance". Some people, and I am one of them, are not afraid of an abundance — abundance of food, abundance of inspiration — provided of course that it is in an ultimately creative way.

I hear objections that "luxuries" are things above and beyond what is absolutely necessary (I agree), and that not everybody has, as yet, what is absolutely necessary (I agree). But with the implication drawn from this, that until all the necessities are filled we should not indulge in luxuries, I do not agree. I will not condemn the man who, dying of starvation, spends his last nickel on the merry-go-round. It is good for us to burst out a little occasionally. Besides, who, even among the nutritionists, will dare to say a man must have so many ounces of meat in order to lead a good, full and happy life?

However, I readily grant that sherry, Cadillacs and wedding rings are luxuries for us. Also, because the buyers at least believe they have some superfluous cash, I grant that these items should be subject to extra taxation. But the object here is not to prohibit the sale or indulgence in luxuries, but merely to tax the source of some money.

Our province, indeed our country, is subject to an unfortunate tendency to act as though it was desirable to eliminate the luxury of beer by taxation. The administrators of the finance of the province, knowing human nature better, are inclined to agree with the United Church observer for other reasons. Yet I would assure the brewers et al that on this campus there are some who think that to facilitate the indulgence in beer et al is a good project. To that end the reduction of the liquor tax is a good thing.

Madame Editor, it distresses some number of people to see that the brewing industries have been singled out by a distinguished Toronto journal to be publicly pursued for gifts and endowments. There is a definite belief that these industries should not be treated as special cases. Some companies in the brewing industry have been generous in the past, and no doubt will be again in the future. A tea company has been very generous to one of the colleges on this campus; tea is a luxury; and there is no crusade to make all Canadian tea companies cough up. If companies manufacturing any product are pursued by someone swinging that product around as a moral stick to stir up prejudice, those companies will probably give money — but to one of the many other worthwhile enterprises in this country.

It would be well, if there were some journal that still believed in ideals, that there should be a crusade by it to make Canadian companies more conscious of their social responsibilities beyond the paid-for goods they render. But no company in any industry has a greater obligation to society, as a company, than any other.

And finally, Madame Editor, I should like to deplore, again in behalf of some number on this campus, the prevalent notion that, because brewers are restricted in the advertising they may do, any public service they render is done to advertise themselves. It may be incredible to journalistic cynicism, but it is possible that a brewer might render a public service simply because of its truth. And even if this were not so, and the brewer really was trying to advertise, we might credit him even if he only selected a real service that was popular over a pseudo-sefvice that was popular. The attitude, "It's only advertising," is not just.

If O'Keefe's convinces a single subway worker that this University, although a luxury, is valuable, then we owe to O'Keefe's a vote of thanks.

I submit these thoughts to your consideration, Madame.

Personally, I like Molson's.

P. R. H. Alley,
IV Trinity.

December 25

Or Christmas

Editor, The Varsity:

We wish ever[illegible] merry Christmas, and w[illegible]greeting early because we [illegible] you to share our hope for a true one. We have seen Christmas emptied of meaning. It has become a holiday without Christ. Without Him, the commemoration of His Nativity becomes a secular festival without foundation in the supreme joy of realizing afresh that the world's Redeemer i[illegible]me.

May we urge greater thoughtfulness on the part of our fellow Christian students. The Christian, as well as the holiday, must enthrone Christ. Let each begin now to put into his praying and preparing a lively expectancy. Let everyone keep Christmas with Christ and go to church on Christmas Day. Worship Him ascended with the same confident joy and hope of his first worshippers.

When choosing your Christmas cards, consider that the average greeting card shows sentimentality or mere formality rather than faith. Christmas is Christ's birthday. Make it clear in your cards.

Some people celebrate "December 25th" with meaningless festivities; others celebrate Christmas with Christ in the centre, which is the only true way for all Christians. God gave his son for us; let us, in our giving, commemorate the loving generosity of God. Do not make a false Yule but a true Christmas. Bring back Christ into the way you will be keeping Christmas.

Rhodes for Macdonald And Watts

The University of Toronto produced both Ontario Rhodes Scholars for 1952, one from University College, the other from Trinity College. A. B. Harvey, chairman of the Ontario selection committee for the Rhodes Scholarship Trust, announced last night that Hugh Ian Macdonald and Ronald Lampman Watts, both of Toronto, were the 1952 scholarship winners from the province, subject to confirmation by the Rhodes Trustees.

Ian Macdonald, 22, is a fourth-year commerce and finance student at University College. He will read philosophy, politics and economics under his scholarship, which entitles him to two years' studies at Oxford, a third optional year, and $500 per annum. His hopes then, either to continue in academic life, or enter the law.

He captained the UC interfaculty hockey squad in 1950 and 1951. He also played tennis and volleyball for his college. He received his first athletic letter from UC and his second from the university.

President and a former treasurer of the Commerce Club, he spent his summers with the statistical and actuarial departments of a company and as a travelling auditor. He was a member of the UC Athletic Board and active in debating.

For two summers a teacher in Frontier College, Ron Watts, 22, is a fourth year student in philosophy, English or history option at Trinity College.

Watts will read history at Oxford, then expects to teach at a university. He was born in Japan, where his father was a missionary.

He was player-manager of the Trinity College basketball team. Watts was vice-president of the Trinity Dramatic Society in 1950 and is now a member of the university drama committee.

Election Notes

Last week's elections to the mock parliament proved one point, which from time to time has been violently debated. The University of Toronto is definitely not a hotbed of radicalism. Indeed, it does not even seem to be the happy home of mild reform.

Judging from the nature of the results, the university is rather apolitical. Each party received a respectable amount of support, without any one sweeping the boards. As a result, the composition of the parliament presents an interesting opportunity for political combinations.

The Liberals and the CCF by combining their strength (23 and 22 seats respectively) could defeat the Conservative chances for leadership of the House. On the other hand, the Conservatives, could scotch the success of such a scheme by joining forces with the LPP's (36 and 9 seats respectively). The result: deadlock.

Either of these measures would require a certain redefinition of party lines which would be rather entertaining. The Liberals would have to admit that they had always been turtle-type socialists, while the CCF would be irrevocably mixed with capitalistic interest. What price puritanism! On the other hand, an LPP and Conservative connection would require such fast talking that even politicians would be confused. Something to the effect that extremes meet might do the trick. Even so, we suspect that George Drew would be silenced for life on the subject of Communist sympathies and that the LPP would never get a chance to go to Russia.

The delightful prospects of a deadlock would undoubtedly have been enhanced had the Independents formed a party. Even if only one representative had been elected he would have been the toast of the House. We rather regret the fact that Independent ballots have been counted as spoiled ballots. Undoubtedly they should have organized earlier, but organizing independents must be almost as difficult as forming anarchists clubs. The terms are incompatible; Independents exist, but not usually in political groups.

The campus vote, while certainly not a heavy one, was surprisingly great — in view of the tame issues being presented. An 18 per cent vote falls short of the usual municipal vote cast in Toronto, but not distressingly far.

One of the greatest flaws in the whole election proceedings was the complete and total lack of privacy in voting. There were no polling booths and secret balloting under these conditions was something of a farce. It was almost impossible to get away from the milling crowd and the sensitive voter must have had the Orwellian sensation that Big Brother was Watching.

But this was a first attempt at a campus wide vote to determine the composition of the Mock Parliament. All in all, it was a success — as far as student interest was concerned. It remains for the political parties to show whether they can present issues which will justify student support as well as stimulate further interest.

The Varsity Bias

One Man's Story

The following is the complete text of the speech delivered by Bud Trivett, II Law, at the last meeting of the Students Administrative Council.

In Monday's issue of The Varsity, the Editor obviously dissastisfied, among other things, with the existing state of the English language, coined a new word, a new phrase, and a new ism. Included in this editorial there was a statement to the effect that the students' Council has been failing to take any action. This statement is not only an insult but a falsehood. Where opinions are related to specific facts, they can be rebutted; where they are suspended lifeless in the air, their originator is spared the trouble of thought and the possibility of a rebuttal.

In the Tuesday issue of The Varsity, in an article by Mr. William Glenesk, entitled "The Prostitute," he quotes English Daily Herald as stating that "the chief function of a newspaper is to report current events and interpret them to its readers." He warns the readers to "be aware that the event is mediated and recreated in black and white." He continues, "if the press must have almost unlimited freedom, then it is time the publishers wielded a little responsibility with that freedom." As the publishers of The Varsity, it appears strange that we should so condemn ourselves apropos of exactly nothing at all before the student body. It would appear then, that we have given an unusually free reign to the Editor and the staff of this paper, but if they are unwilling to accept that "responsibility" of which Mr. Glenesk speaks, perhaps such trust in our Editor and staff is wholly and entirely unwarranted. Mr. Glenesk continues, "the public's patience has reached the sticking place and it sprinkles the news and the Editor's views with salt. The press has lost its grip on the mass mind and apathy is the result. We need a Billy Sunday of the press. A prophet to sweep the cobwebs of distortion and prostitution is the answer to the rampant failure of the papers to communicate the truth" We cannot agree too strongly with Mr. Glenesk, but The Varsity is diligently and untiringly attempting to shift the blame to others. They are only the champions of the people, they damn liberally what others do but suggest nothing, absolutely nothing. Their criticisms are not constructive. They claim great influence and little if any responsibility. Such a state of affairs would appear to be intolerable.

In case my refutation is also let hanging in air, I shall quote a few items which this year's Council has put through in addition to the heavy load of business which is incumbent in the operation of a Student Government for 11,000 students. The Council, through its executive, took strong action to show disapproval by the students of acts of vandalism on this campus. There was strong reaction to this self-disciplining ending in the motion to the effect that the committee should not take any future action which would reverse a decision of the Council.

Another item on which there has been considerable disagreement is the original setting up and later reorganizing of the radio committee to ensure full participation by the students on the campus. Again strong disagreement and lengthy discussion both in committee and in Council. Again another first for this year's Council is the setting up of a bureau for translating to facilitate the work of students in new fields of research. Again another first for this year's Council is the recommendation for establishing of a student union fund so that money may be obtained for the student union. In the past we have only had air. This too entailed considerable discussion and some disagreement and a decision not to move for immediate temporary quarters for the S.A.C., Varsity, etc. The decision to set up SHARE entailed considerable disagreement and discussion re timing, distribution, construction of commitee, name, etc. Perhaps first and foremost amongst contribution to student life though little recognized on the campus and particularly by The Varsity, is the fact that the U of T through IAC of EAC has taken the lead with a definite Canadian policy in organizing democracies countries internationally. I could go on to mention the fact that the U.T.D.A. debating program has been undertaken by the Council this year in which reps. from this University will tour a dozen different universities in U.S. and Canada and play host to probably as many more. I could enlarge upon the fact this this year the All Varsity Review will be held as it was not last year. I could point out that the SAC has operated a book exchange for students, turning over in excess of Ten Thous. worth of sales. I could go on at considerable length noting accomplishments of this year's SAC in Blue and White activities, etc., and pointing out the reaction of certain members to the recommendations of others, but The Varsity already has these facts. They choose to choose their news. They prefer to obstruct rather than construct.

They have even sunk to condemning charitable relief campaigns, a thing which no "commercial" newspaper would think of doing. Much valuable space is devoted to sponsoring a campaign to bring Russian students to Canadian Campi though they themselves admit that the tour will probably accomplish little if any good. Is objectivity their object? It would almost seem that responsibility is not for the ivory tower journalists.

Perhaps we should find out if The Varsity is reaching more people than the 5 or 10 per cent which they manage to get out to vote on their pet issues. Is it not time that we took a poll of more than 29 students to find out just what the student body thinks of news coverage in The Varsity,

OUR READERS WRITE

Our Apathy

Editor, The Varsity:

In Friday's Dec. 1st Varsity several statements were quoted as having been made at last Wednesday's Student Administrative Council which your editorial stated "indicates a misconception of the role of The Varsity in University life". These statements which I presume are supposed to have been made by myself are incorrectly quoted. Not only are they incorrectly quoted, but they are taken out of context. The first statement to which I refer is "as publishers of The Varsity it seems strange we (the council) should be condemned by our own paper". My statement was made with reference to a charge in last Monday's issue of The Varsity where it was stated by you "where there is no action, there can be no reaction". This statement I took to infer as indeed did most reasonable people who read it, that the SAC had done nothing this year. My statement was "as publishers of The Varsity, it appears strange that we should so condemn ourselves, apropos of exactly nothing at all, before the student body". The criticism as will be seen from this statement is not that The Varsity has seen fit to criticize our actions, but that they should be specific in their critcism in order that their readers may be able to judge the extent to which the criticism is warranted.

The editorial continues to misquote "we are giving the editors of The Varsity too much rein", when in fact what was said was, "it would appear then, that we have given an unusually free rein to the Editor and staff of this paper, but if they are unwilling to accept that 'responsibility' of which Mr. Glenesk speaks, perhaps such trust in our Editor and staff is wholly and entirely unwarranted." This statement was made with reference to the blame for apathy which The Varsity was attempting to lay at the door of the SAC where Mr. Glenesk had been pointing out that such blame is attributable to the publishers of newspapers who usually dictate editorial and news policy. I was pointing out that since The Varsity is given a completely free rein, they should take the responsibility for the apathy which ensues if they are unable to raise the interest of the student body. I at no time intimated that The Varsity should not be free in this respect. Indeed, I feel it is most essential that they should be; however, it is also essential that they accept the responsibility for what they say and do not attempt to shift this responsibility to the SAC. If The Varsity refuse to accept responsibility, then the problem of whether or not the trust is unwarranted arises. Surely though, this cannot be the case. Surely The Varsity is willing to take responsibility for the "apathy" which their approach induces, if in fact such apathy does exist.

Finally, The Varsity quoted me as saying "The Varsity considers itself the only champion of the people". What I did say is, "The Varsity is diligently and untiringly attempting to shift the blame (for apathy) to others. They are only the champions of the people, they damn liberally what others do, but suggest nothing. Their criticisms are not constructive. They claim great influence and little if any responsibility". Obviously my criticism was not of The Varsity's being the students' champion as it was not of their criticizing the SAC

How can the student judge whether or not he is being champioined unless reference is made to specific circumstances. The broad statement which The Varsity made that "where there is no action, there can be no reaction", referred to no specific action which they felt the SAC should have taken. The Varsity has carried reports of the many worthwhile activities of the SAC, the student Union fund, the translation bureau, the SHARE campaign, the UTDA debating program, the book exchange, the employment bureau and many many others.

No one has "implied that the publishers (SAC) of this paper are above criticism." They are not. Neither is The Varsity. We like the SAC meeting, were merely criticizing their approach. We were pointing out, first, that The Varsity must take its share of responsibility for any apathy which may exist; secondly, that to be valid, criticism of the SAC must be specific; and thirdly, that we have any value, criticism might better be constructive.

I believe this to be the aim of the Editor and staff, but like any other human beings, it is possible that on occasion they may have erred.

Yours truly,

Bud Trivett
II Law

VCU QUORUM WAVERS

Drafting seems to be easy for Joan Pierden. She is the only girl this year in 1st year electrical engineering. Here she is laughing over the intricacies of a drafting board. Four years from now she'll know what to do when a fuse blows out.

Discuss Card Sale Lack of Hockey Rink

At least four times during the course of yesterday evening's Victoria College Union meeting members had to be reminded that they were within one member of a quorum.

John Devereux, IV Vic, read the section of the constitution that dealt with attendance.

The Constitution provides that members of the VCU Assembly, absent for two consecutive meetings who cannot give an acceptable good reason will be expelled from the Assembly, and will be prevented from holding office on the VCU in the succeeding calendar year.

John Devereux suggested that members give an adequate reason if they leave during the course of the meeting.

The Chairman of the Vic SHARE Committee will be John Lewis, 1st year rep. He was appointed at an executive meeting of the VCU. He appealed for support for the SHARE campaign from the Assembly.

Publicity Director of SHARE Fraser Mustard, III Meds, spoke to the Assembly. He said that SHARE is more than aid to Asian students. The money collected would be spent to six selected universities ($4,000), to ISS headquarters in Geneva ($4,000), to provide scholarships for exchange students ($1,500), to the Canadian branch of ISS ($1,500), and to cover campaign expenses ($600). SHARE officials plan to give basic tools to the Asian students he added, giving mimeograph machines as an example.

Ken Cork, II Vic asked the assembly members to each accept the responsibility of selling 3 dozen Victoria Christmas Cards. They have been moving poorly, he said. To date $220 worth have been sold. It will be necessary to sell $520 worth to cover costs.

The Christmas cards are sold in competition with the Vic Book Store. Since they are not dated, Cork pointed out that they will eventually be sold.

Vic's SHARE Committee will be in charge of all further sale of Vic Christmas cards.

VCU President John Devereux announced that a letter had been sent from the financial committee to all affiliated organizations asking them to evaluate their contribution to Victoria College. The financial committee will then, he continued, submit a comprehensive brief to the VCU. The committee will, he said, in effect, look at the VCU to see if it is worth while."

Phelps Bell, III Vic, was appointed the Producer of the 1951-52 Vic Bob. Bell was musical director of this year's Bob. He was the only applicant for the position.

There will be no hockey rink at Little Vic Field this winter, Bill Argus, III Vic reported. He explained that Mr. Parkes who has been in charge of the ring in previous years would be able to look after it this winter. He added that Vic has secured the use of Trinity rink for 22 hours this winter in exchange for their use of Little Vic Gym. Greame Ferguson, SAC Rep, regreted that the traditional Vic rink was passing from the scene.

Final Issues

Tomorrow's issue of The Varsity will be the last regular one for this term. Two special issues are to follow. On Friday the annual Christmas edition will appear and on the following Monday, there will be a Theme Issue on education. The Christmas paper will contain news and coming events. There will be no paper Thursday.

Film Dean Gives Talk At Varsity

Gordon Sparling of Associated Screen News, Montreal, who has been producing Canadian films for twenty years will speak on "The Problems of Film Production in Canada" at an open lecture. This lecture is the ninth of the University of Toronto Extension Course series called "The Film and Society". Campus co-ordinator, Al Shay extended an invitation to all undergrads interested in Canadian Film Making. Sparling will talk in the Botany Building at eight o'clock.

Shay described Sparling, who is a graduate of Trinity, as the Dean of Canadian movies, for he has been concerned with films for twenty years. Sparling has worked with federal and provincial film bureaus, as well as for Paramount in New York. He is also producer of the Canadian Cameo series, and will illustrate his talk with pictures.

Shay described this course as a pioneering one on the campus, as it is the first one of its kind on the campus. He commented that it was a serious effort to study different aspects of the film.

On the other hand, Murray Mogan said, "While elements of human folly obviously appear in the press, as in all other human activities, if our press is a monument to human folly then we, the readers, are all idiots."

Montagnes, when asked to comment, said, "The press, as represented by such editors as Steve Wilson and Barbara Browne, is a potent crusading force, ferreting out evil wherever it may be. Surely such an institution cannot be a monument but only an enemy to human folly."

Ten Campi Favor Russ Student Visit

Montreal (CUP) — Two more Canadian universities have declared their support of the proposed exchange of student visits between Canada and the Soviet Union.

This brings to ten (one-half the NFCUS membership) the number of universities approving the visits. Two others have voted against the scheme, and eight have not decided as yet.

The two universities which approved the proposal last week were Loyola College and Sir George Williams College, both in Montreal.

In a noon meeting Wednesday, the Sir George Williams College undergraduate society called upon the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) to reconsider its decision not to participate in any such exchange. This in effect reversed the vote of the Sir George delegate to the NFCUS conference, who had opposed the exchange.

The vote at the conference in London, where it was decided to withdraw an invitation extended to the Russian students, was 12-6.

Meanwhile, student officials are still waiting for an answer from the NFCUS executive to the McGill Student Society's request that the nationay body take a country-wide referendum on the question. The matter is now being decided by the regional executives.

However, The McGill Daily reports it is felt on that campus that since ten of the Federation's members have announced their support of the exchange, a new vote will probably have to be taken.

The Universities which have approved the exchange scheme are McGill, Montreal, Alberta, McDonald College, Bishop's, Toronto, Dalhousie, Loyola and Sir George Williams. The University of British Columbia has extended a formal invitation on its own to the Soviet Ministry of Education to send Soviet students to study there.

Universities which have expressed official student opposition are Saskatchewan and McMaster.

Pins In Particular

Gadgets. A fascinating subject. Without them where would we be?

First there is that little piece of twisted metal, the safety pin. We first come in sharp contact with it in our very early days — the baby stage. It keeps us safely in our diapers and in our cribs. It is also an educator. It teaches us to say our first coherent word: "Ouch."

It is invaluable to us later in life, too. Especially to the ladies. There may come embarrassing moments when they (the ladies) fall apart. The safety pin comes to the rescue and pulls them back together.

Then there is another piece of twisted metal. It stands one stage further on in the evolution of the machine, for this piece of metal has also been flattened. This is the bobby pin. Its social importance cannot be ignored. No lady can look refined when her hair flows over her face. In the movies they can manage to make the flowing effect a very alluring one, but movies are fictitious. In real life, the lady without a bobby pin looks hideous.

The bobby pin is precious to all ladies who wish to acquire the studious air as well. The hair must be pulled back severely from the face. Pure sexlessness cannot be achieved in this feat without the assistance of the bobby pin.

The Casanova who rues the day he was born because heredity gave him straight hair can help the situation out by a little judicious use of the pin-curl. Once more the inconspicuous little bobby pin has saved the day.

And then, finally, there is the king of gadgets, the clothespin. Effective in keeping spaniels' ears out of the eating trough, it also has other uses.

Photographers find it especially valuable in the realm of cheesecake. Ladies, they find, lean alarmingly toward the looser-fitting garments. This may be very nice and modest of them, but the photographers feels that somehow it just isn't cricket. With a few kind words, or perhaps a small bribe, the rebellious ladies can often be induced to undergo the clothespin treatment. The results are admirable.

Clothespins are also used for attaching clothes to clotheslines.

VARSITY GRADS

Go Civil

The Federal Civil Service is now accepting applications from 1952 graduates in Engineering, Arts and the Sciences for full time employment. Undergraduates desiring full time or summer employment may also apply by filling out a special undergraduate application. All application forms and pamphlets for those wishing permanent employment may be obtained at the Placement Service, 67 St. George Street.

Before appointment to the Civil Service, an examination which may be written, oral or only a demonstration of skill, or a rating on education and experience must be successfully passed. These examinations are specially designed to assess the candidates against a standard set up for each type of position. The type of competition for the various positions is stated through a formal announcement issued by the Civil Service Commission.

All applications for summer employment with the Civil Service for students are handled through the SAC Employment Offices for men and for women and all enquiries must be made at these offices.

The Civil Service offers as many as 1,800 jobs to graduates and undergraduates over a three or four month period. Most of the positions go to students with specialized training — in the fields of engineering, physics, forestry, geology and agriculture. The student must be in full time attendance in the academic year preceding the appointment.

Salaries for undergraduates, known as Student Assistants, for the summer, range from $100 to $185 depending on the field of specialization, related experience and academic status. Postgraduate students, usually assigned as Technical Officers, may get as much as $300.

The purpose of offering summer employment to students enables the federal government to carry out seasonal work, such as surveys, that must be undertaken during the summer months. While he is helping to clear up work backlogs which may arise in certain sections of the public service, the student has a chance to gain valuable experience related to his course of studies.

Manitoba Opposes Athletic Ban

Winnipeg (CUP) — Attempts to keep University of Manitoba students from outside sports participation were squelched by the U of Manitoba students' union council recently. The regulation against playing for non-varsity teams came from the university athletic directorate.

Opposition from the council centered on moral grounds. "The regulation seems to violate some inherent right of the student," said Sterling Lyon of Law. "We do not want this university to become a fleshpot."

The ruling had worked well in the east and was readily accepted there, said Neil Wood of Commerce, speaking in favor of the ruling.

Council vice-president Harold Buchwald also said the regulation challenged the right of the student to do what he wants to do. "Is Manitoba to become a western annex of McGill?"

The Manitoban, the university newspaper, editorially granted that the athletic directorate had instituted the ruling ti improve university athletics. But, it said, "it is extremely doubtful that an athlete would play his best game under any form of coercion."

Hart House Rooms Are Strictly Private

Seven rooms on the third floor of Hart House are effectively blocked from student inspection by an imposing sign stating "PRIVATE — These Rooms Are Not At Any Time Open For Inspection".

Hart House upon occasion provides accommodation for professors and others while visiting at the University for short periods of time. There is a group of seven "Guest Rooms" which are available to Grads and guests of graduate-members of the House.

All seven of the rooms open off a brightly-lit, thickly-carpeted corridor, and except for numbers 1 and 3, they are uniform in size appointments. The rooms are decorated in pastel colors, carpeted with dark green or blue broadcloth, and have dark woodwork. Each contains a comfortable double bed, a writing desk, a bureau or dressing table, book cases, and one or more easy chairs. All have large double windows opening north and overlooking the quadrangle.

The most unusual of the rooms is the Bickerstaff Memorial Room or "The French-Canadian Room". Decorated entirely on a French-Canadian theme, it contains authentic pieces of early Canadian furniture, woodcarvings and handicrafts. The bed-spread and cushions were especially handmade for the room and inside the door is the old spinning-wheel used in their production. There are samples of French-Canadian art and literature, and a model of a St. Lawrence-type schooner. Old lanterns (fitted with electric bulbs) are used to light the room, and on the door is an ornate brass knocker used for years on one of Quebec's oldest houses.

Over a period of years these seven rooms have accommodated men from nearly every part of the world. A glance at the registration book discloses visitors from such far-away places as Aukland, New Zealand; Amsterdam, Holland; London, England. Among the more famous guests are Sir Charles Harrington (Director of National Institute of Medical Research, London), Lord Montague (Bank of England) and The Prince of Wales (the present Duke of Windsor).

Chas. Hendry New Director Social Work

The students of the School of Social Work met their new Director, Professor Charles Hendry, officially yesterday afternoon at the Economics Building. Professor Hendry replaces the late Dr. H. Cassidy.

Dr. C. T. Bissell, Assistant to President Smith, represented the University in welcoming the new Director. Dr. Stuart K. Jaffary spoke on behalf of the school faculty and Irving Mann, president of the School of Social Work Undergraduate Association on behalf of the students.

In acknowledging this welcome, Professor Hendry expressed his gratitude for the support given him. He spoke of the tremendous challenge to the Social Worker today and of the importance of interpreting correctly the place of social work.

Police, Medical Labs Conducting Experiment On Drink And Driving

Students of the University of Toronto need no longer feel concerned by the regular sight of a Toronto police accident squad car parked on the campus. Their presence was explained by Dr. G. H. W. Lucas, professor of Pharmacology, as being connected with experiments carried out in conjunction with the Traffic Department, on alcohol, and driving under its influence.

A survey is being conducted, based on breath tests to determine the presence of alcohol in the systems of drivers subjected to the test. The Toronto police have been taking samples on the scene of all traffic accidents, by having all concerned breathe into balloons which are then delivered to the medical labs for analysis. The same tests are also given to other motorists, to determine if these drivers have consumed any alcohol, and in this way it is found out what amount of alcohol will impair safe driving.

"The purpose of these experiments is not only to find out how much a person can drink before his driving becomes dangerous, but also to establish if and to what extent these tests can be used as legal evidence in court. Up to now the only evidence accepted by the court when a person is accused of drunken driving, is the testimony by the police constable who made the arrest.

A survey of the same type was conducted last year by Dr. Wilbur Smith, and the results were published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal. If the amounts of alcohol permitted were quoted in ounces instead of percentages, this article might constitute handy reading for every driver.

This question remains however, who does the drinking for the tests when no persons under the effect of alcohol are available as subjects for the experiments?

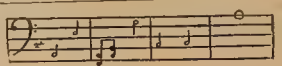
Striped Pole Harmoneers To Compete

Hart House sponsors a quartet contest annually, in which singers can demonstrate their prowess. The winning quartet has its name engraved on the trophy to go to posterity with other notorious foursomes, such as "The Fourflushers".

The rules for the 1952 contest are:

1. Each quartet must consist of members of Hart House.

2. Contestants in any one quartet need not be from the same faculty, college or school.



3. Costumes and choice of selections are left to the discretion of the quartets concerned, but the committee reserves the right to disqualify any number.

4. Judges will be appointed by the committee, and the judges' decision will be final.

5. Judging will be on the basis of musical talent and entertainment value.

6. Eliminations will be held in January, and the finals are set for the Vic At-Home, Friday, February 8, 1952.

Applications may be had at the Warden's office in Hart House between 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Choir At Emmanuel

Last Friday and Saturday evenings in Emmanuel College, the Victoria College Music Club presented their glee club in a concert consisting mainly of Christmas music.

Everyone who was there knows—and no one better than the singers themselves—that the Vic Glee Club did not sound very professional. Perhaps not so many realize how close the performance came to real excellence. But for a few faults that should not be too difficult to correct, this choir would rank with any other on the campus. There are many good things that could be said about them.

In the first place, they had evidently rehearsed sufficiently for them to be able to take their eyes off the music and watch the conductor, Charles Wilson. He had real direction to give them, and it was heeded. The result was crispness of attack at all times, and generally well-controlled dynamics.

Also, the male section of the choir was astonishingly good. Seven men (only two of them tenors) managed to achieve a full-blooded, manly tone, and in spite of their inferiority in numbers to give a firm foundation to the harmonic structure.

What, then, was wrong? The main trouble was linguistic, not musical. English is one of the most strongly accented anguages, and consequently it is not easily adapted to singing. However, if a choir will give some thought to the meaning of the words they are singing, very often the natural accents of the words will fall in their proper places.

Otherwise, rather grotesque results are apt to appear, and the music will have a kindergarten ish effect. This was unfortunately what sometimes happened to the Vic Glee Club. One cannot help thinking about it, and have it mean anything, especially if the music does not naturally fit the words too well, as in the Rutter-James Air.

The other quality which the Glee Club lacks is assurance. With a little more confidence in the powers of their own voices the singers—particularly the girls—would not have felt they had to shout, and would have achieved a much more pleasant tone. Strangely enough, the best numbers sung from this standpoint and that of proper accentuation were those where the girls were left entirely to their own resources, without male voice support.

Two soloists lent variety to the program—Gloria Trimble, contralto, and Margaret Carmichael and Margaret Carmichael contralto. Both of these are excellent performers. Miss Carmichael has a remarkable voice, a real contralto in tone, not a soprano with a low range.

The Vic Glee Club deserves to be heard again. They have a fine tone, they are technically capable of performing difficult choral works. A little more work and practice should turn them into a very presentable choir.

All-Varsity Chorus Symphony Sparkle

University of Toronto students could well be proud of their symphony orchestra. On Sunday night, under the direction of Keith Girard, it showed that it had accomplished much in only a few weeks of rehearsal. Most of the time, it was a well-integrated ensemble, playing with care and polite. But, it must be noted that the section, the woodwind, consistently outshone the others. At all times their work was practically impeccable: their phrasing was superb and their tone well-shaded.

Of the strings one must be more reserved. Their work, too, was usually quite good. However, in the opener: Alceste Overture, one noted occasional hesitant entry, although this contained some of their best work. In some passages of the Mozart Jupiter Symphony, their work was sub-standard. These were, admittedly difficult passages, but we felt that improvement could have been achieved.

In recompense for this, the slow movement of the Jupiter was expertly handled by the strings. It was here that Girard and the orchestra performed with sensitivity: a quality replaced in other movements by a youthful exuberance for the music. This exuberance lent a tenseness to the minuet that seemed to get out of hand in the finale. Some of the best passages in the finale were the obbligattas; these are complex, and their playing was a credit to the orchestra.

Here must be mentioned the overexuberance of the brass section which by the finale of the Mozart overweighed the rest of the orchestra (in volume) and a blasting tone which was annoying. They should be trained; purity of tone and exuberance do not seem to go together in the brass. One must strive for the former while tempering the latter.

After intermission, with the leader absent, the Faure Pavane was given a sensitive if indefinite performance. By this is meant that an impressionistic character in the music seemed to be emphasized.

The remarks made at the first apply generally to the All-Varsity Band Chorus also. In the number with chorus alone — Charles Bryan's Suite: From the Textbooks — they performed with style and were sure of their parts. At all times, their enunciation was clarity itself. This partly arises from a small, well-balanced group. Of the music itself, it seemed as if one had heard similar works before. A comparison that struck this reviewer was of a cross between a typical glee-club selection and an Italian madrigal.

KEITH GIRARD

It was when the orchestra and chorus combined forces and enlisted two soloists, Barbara Franklin and James Beer, in a performance of Bach's Cantata No. 122 that the disaster of the evening occurred. Here one could go on at great length hurling criticism in all directions. Suffice it to say that Beer was possibly the worst Bach singer this reviewer had heard, even though the more dramatic aspect of the recitative suited his style better than the aria; that Miss Franklin seemed, to say the least, unsure of her part and a bit awed by it all; that the balance of the ensemble was poor; that the registration of the organ continuo was quite unsuitable; and that the chorus did not seem to have mastered the incisive attack required.

If one had left before the final number, he would, no doubt, have been pleased by the accomplishment of the two organizations.

Two-Act Drama, Poetry And Prose Win Epstein Prizes

Miss Olga Skey, I, Eng. Lang. and Lit., has been awarded $300 from the Norma Epstein Foundation, the Council of University College announced on Friday. Miss Skey won $250 for her play, Writ In Water, a short drama in two acts, with prologue, and $50 for her collection of poems. It is hoped that her play will be performed by the U.C. Players' Guild.

The Norma Epstein prizes are awarded annually for creative writing in various fields. The foundation was set up by Mr. M. H. Epstein as a memorial to his daughter, who died in 1945, in her final year in U.C. The first awards were made in 1947. The capital now is $30,000. Awards are made in varying amounts, according to distinction and promises of the work. Past winners include such people as James Reaney, now lecturing at the University of Manitoba, and Michael Hornyansky, now a Rhodes scholar.

Poetry winners this year include Ian Sowton, III, Eng., Lang. and Lit., who won $50 for his poem, Requiem: For Good Friday, and John Hampson, IV, Eng. Lang. and Lit., for his collection of poems.

Prize - winning short stories included Countercheck, by Rowland McMaster, III, Eng. Lang. and Lit., The Penance of Pierre, by Ian Sowton, and The Road To Victory, by F. M. Parks, IV, Moderns. G. F. Atkinson, III, Chem., was awarded $35 for his essay, Kalevala — The Land Of Heroes.

Hillel To Discuss Summer Seminar

The International Student Summer Seminar, and the International Student Service which ran it, will be discussed at the Hillel House, 186 St. George, tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Speaking to Hillel will be Ernie Shulman, IV UC, who attended the seminar as one of the Toronto delegates, and Pat Daniel, National Secretary for ISS.

The seminar, which students from 16 different countries attended, was held last August in a French-Canadian boarding school six miles north of Ottawa.

Subject of the seminar, which Shulman will describe, was "The Needs and Contributions of East and West". This broke down, according to other Toronto delegates, into an introduction of the West to Asians, and of Asia to members of the western countries.

Students from Pakistan; India, Finland, Germany, and Holland were represented at the seminar. Other countries represented were Israel, Belgium, Canada, the United States and Ceylon. About 80 students attended, half of whom were Canadian.

The International Student Service will be described by its National Secretary, Pat Daniel. ISS is a university organization originally designed after World War I for relief for needy students in Europe.

Since then it has extended its activities to include an educational program, designed to awaken in the students the feeling of a worldwide university community. In recent years the centre of its activities has moved to South-East Asia.

Its annual campaign is being replaced on the Toronto campus by SHARE, which will send its funds to Asia through ISS.

It takes a pretty fair cameraman to make a fast-action sport on the screen live for you. It is easy, of course, to get a long-distance view of sport events as in the newsreels. But boxing, baseball or football have not often come out of the flat screen to envelop us into the heart of split-second action.

There has been happy exceptions. James Wong Howe has made both boxing and bullfighting intimate and realistic in BODY AND SOUL and THE BRAVE BULLS, both of which he photographed for Robert Rossen. And in a cheaply-made football film, SATURDAY'S HERO, the camera of Lee Garmes makes the frequent and essential gridiron sequences happen right in our laps.

SATURDAY'S HERO is a purported exposé of the seamy side of subsidized athletics in American colleges. Made from a novel by Millard Lampell, the script also had much of the author's hand in it. This may be why there are scenes which actually take place in lecture rooms and professors' offices at Jackson University. In one scene, an English literature professor (Alexander Knox) explains the genius of Balzac and Dostoievski to young Steve Novak, the football hero. This discussion is so real (talk of Truth and Beauty) that the Saturday evening audience at the St. Clair theatre was audibly bored. The restless reaction may explain why movies about college commonly focus on sweater girls rather than on Truth and Beauty.

But it is the superb imaginative camerawork of Garmes that lifts the film out of the superficial rut. On the football field, the young hero's rise from high school fame to freshman eleven to the varsity and near-All-Americanhood is shown in exciting hard-hitting action. And in the one classroom scene, the camera watches the face of professor Knox as Novak recites "The Eve of St. Agnes." This scene is an effective and subtle suggestion of what might have been for the earnest young hero.

John Derek is Steve Novak, and he is more satisfying than previously as an impoverished immigrant's son who picks Jackson because it is renowned for its scholars. Donna Reed is interesting as a different kind of heroine, while Sidney Blackmer is convincing as Novak's "benefactor." Alexander Knox has only a few scenes, but he expresses the academic scorn for professional athletes with effective bite. But it is the assorted group of burly subsidized athletes and the Novak family of three which provide a solid edge of reality to this uneven film.

Yesterday afternoon, I found myself wafted into the Museum Theatre for one of the Anthropology Department's showings of Carl Dreyer's DAY OF WRATH. This is a Danish film, never shown commercially in Toronto, which is understandable.

DAY OF WRATH is a tremendous film at times. The love scenes between the minister's child-wife and his son are pathetic yearning at its best. Even more effective is the burning of Marthe, the convicted witch, by the townspeople and the church. And the scene when the young wife tells her elderly husband that she has been unfaithful to him is a tense, deadly one.

DAY OF WRATH has some slow moments, Dreyer is in no hurry and likes to get his mood across. But this slowness and some rather ludicrous sub-titles made the student audience hoot and holler. Yet there were other moments, like the love scenes, when hooting and hollering came because some were embarrassed by the feelings shown on the screen. (We have learned in the twentieth century to make love with a wisecrack and a munch on a cud of chewing gum.)

You would think, said one student present, that university students would at least have more consideration for others. It was just like a children's Saturday matinee. Be that as it may, the Anthropology department obviously had a field-day in studying social psychology just by listening to the audience and its performance at DAY OF WRATH.

Mechanical Building Has Model Niagara

By RUTH RAYSON

For some time now the persistent sound of rushing water and the throbbing of motors has been heard in the corridors of the first floor Mechanical Building. The continuous disturbance comes from the River Flow Laboratory in the basement of the building.

At present the laboratory is the site of three projects. The first one is the largest of the three, taking up more than one-half the space of the room. At first sight it seems to be four unconnected sections of wide and narrow chutes, partitions within the chutes, motors that pump water into pipes connected to each section, with the water flowing thorugh the sections to disappear into openings in the floor.

Each of the four sections is a model of a new project intended to divert additional water from the Niagara River to a new power station where it will be converted into Hydro power.

The present system provides for water to be piped from the Welland and the Niagara River through canals to a power station for conversion, but this is quite inadequate (witness the power cuts during the past few years), and the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario has drawn up plans for the construction of another system. This system will use additional water from the Niagara and Welland Rivers and thus the Company will have an enlarged source for producing hydro-electric power.

The models were constructed to solve any problems that would arise before the actual project is built. As Professor E. A. Allcut, head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, commented, "It's a great deal easier to correct a mistake in a small pliable model than it is to correct one in a full-scale project."

According to Professor Allcut, the past twenty-five years have seen an enormous growth in the use of models and the models of the Niagara project have saved the government 2.5 million dollars (and think what it has saved the taxpayers). The University was fortunate enough to have the space free so that the models could be constructed in the Laboratory.

Another model shows the cross-section of part of the Manicouagan River. A new power plant to be constructed downstream will change the level of the river. The purpose of the model was to find where a timber boom could be held for the annual log drive, to collect the logs (matchsticks in the model) and prevent them from going down their regular route to the mill until they could be diverted into another channel.

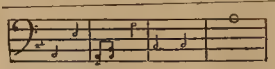
This is a model of the project intended to divert additional water from the Niagara River to a new power station where it will be converted into hydro power.



The third and last model in the room is the smallest. It is enclosed in a long case of armour-plate-glass three-quarters of an inch thick to withstand the pressure of the water. It is the model of a dam. The continuous flow of water in a certain spot is certain to cause erosion eventually and this model was constructed to study what would happen if erosion began underneath a dam and what methods could be used to combat it. It was found that if the erosion were allowed to continue the dam would collapse. The problem was solved by constructing a cement step just downstream from the dam to break the force of the water as it came through the sluice-gates and thus prevent the water from carrying away the river bed.

The laboratory is itself an interesting place aside from the projects constructed in it. Large flow-pumps can pump 9000 gallons per minute when working at full capacity. The duct system installed below the floor permits water to be pumped to any part of the laboratory.

This is the same model showing the conformations of the channel when the flow of water has been stopped.

Lois Marshall

The second in the Wymilwood Sunday evening series of concerts was given last Sunday by Lois Marshall, soprano, accompanied at the piano by Weldon Kilburn.

Toronto audiences have taken Lois Marshall to their hearts. She stirs up a peculiar patriotic enthusiasm in them, as though they had something to do with nurturing and recognizing this phenomenon in their midst.

But it is not really much of a feat to recognize the remarkable talent of Miss Marshall. For her gifts are of the most striking sort—a rich, powerful voice of very wide range, a technique capable of dealing with the most fantastic vocal fireworks of the eighteenth century, and most important of all an understanding of the music she sings, character she is portraying in the song.

Sunday evening's concert was a test for the versatility of the singer. Miss Marshall sang a group of sixteenth-century English songs, a group of seventeenth and eighteenth-century arias by Handel, Purcell and Boyce, and "Deh vieni non tardar" from Mozart's Figaro. The second half of the program consisted of four Scottish songs, two operatic arias, "Una voce poco fa" by Rossini, and the "Jewel Song" by Gounod.

It is very difficult to pick any one song or group as being of greater excellence than the rest. The choice is bound to depend on personal preferences for one or other sort of music. The simple emotion of "The bonnie Earl o' Moray" or "Have you seen the white lily grow", or the exquisite brilliance of "Had I Jubal's lyre" or the simplicity of "For days and week's work"—all were sung in their expression in Miss Marshall's singing.

I have but one small quibble, a very small one—about Miss

Coed Free To Dress Does Not Need Help

Kingston (CUP) — A comment by Levana President Pat Purvis of Queen's University which appealed to co-eds to stop wearing slacks to the library and to lectures, made last month, has become a controversial subject at Queen's.

One said that "It should be left to our common sense. It is just another example of the boarding school attitude found in connection with Levana. In Europe the student has to grow up because there is no attempt made to supervise her."

The Queen's Journal editorially asked Miss Purvis what right she, The Levana Society, or the Faculty had in legislating against the student's dress. "Within the bounds of the law regarding public exposure and indecency, everyone is free to dress as he or she wishes," the paper continued.

The Journal suggested that slacks are highly utilitarian, although many find slacks hard on the eyes."

Roman Catholic Simone Weil Writes 'Dangerous' Book

WAITING ON GOD, by Simone Weil, Routledge and Kegan Paul, London, 1951, 169 pp, $3.00. (Translated from the French by Emma Craufurd.)

Religion is not as out of fashion with us of the Younger Generation as it used to be. This does not mean that churches have higher membership or attendance from the young adult group. In fact, there probably still remains the same dissatisfaction with the usual rigidity and lack of imagination in the Church approach to man's faith as there ever was. But among those of us who try to think, there is a turning to an investigation of a faith above that of pure rationality.

Unlike our fathers, we have little confidence in the world that is going to be ours. We mistrust our political institutions, especially on the international level; we fear the encroachment of the giant Machine over dwarfed Man; we are not sure of anything anymore. So we wonder about religion and its possible chance of offering a feeling of security to us lost lambs.

It is our growing distrust of human institutions that make us think organized religion far from satisfactory. We meet, quite early in our development, the disillusioning effect of the scientific explanation of things and how they came to be. Our Sunday School Bible stories come off badly in the exchange. If we go further and start asking questions then we are often irretrievably lost to our Churches and Temples.

But being young, we do not really care at the time. We have faith in ourselves, and we are interested in more immediate things. But now, a little older, we are losing that faith in humanity. We talk, a little beaten before we begin, of the need for a transformation of our orthodox practising of religion. We need an overhaul so that more of us and our neighbors can be caught up in a universal desire for co-operation and goodwill.

All this is a lengthy introduction to a dangerous little book that has come along. A posthumous collection of letters and essays by a young Frenchwoman who died in 1943, Waiting On God is an intensely sincere, humble and religious book. It is dangerous because while deeply sincere and religious, it criticizes the Church.

Books are sometimes banned from Canada because they criticize organized religion. Charles Erskine Scott Wood's very funny and sometimes angry Heavenly Discourse is a good example. But Simone Weil is safe from censorship by angry lobbies. It is too quiet, it is too humble. Unlike Scott Wood, Simone Weil is no flashy iconoclast. From an almost awesome humility, she asks gentle but piercing questions about the Church and its interpretation of God and His attitudes.

Simone Weil tells her priest-friend, that she cannot accept baptism in the Church because she does not feel ready for the step. When God feels that it is time for her to accept the sacraments, he will make it known to her, she says.

Simone Weil goes further in her criticism of the Church. She says, the function of the Church as the collective keeper of dogma is indispensable. She has the right and the duty to punish those who make a clear attack upon her within the specific range of the function, by depriving them of the sacraments . . . But she is guilty of an abuse of power when she claims to force love and intelligence to model their language upon her own. This abuse of power is not of God. It comes from the natural tendency of every form of collectivism, without exception, to abuse power."

Going further in her unorthodoxy, Simone Weil says, "Every existing thing is equally upheld in its existence by God's creative love. The friends of God should love him to the point of merging their love into his with regard to all things here below." We immediately think of all those who will have as their friends and neighbors only those who agree on a particular conception of God.

To love thy neigabor," she says, really means, "a question of completely anonymous, and for that reason, completely universal love." She cites Christ's example of loving thy neighbor, "the neighbor is a being of whom nothing is known, lying naked, bleeding and unconscious on the road."

Born into an agnostic Jewish family, Smone Weil came under the influence of Roman Catholicism. Never baptized, this young teacher of philosophy studied thoroughly her own "Waiting on God." Her saint-like character is emphasized by the story of her insistence on eating only the occupied France food ration while working in London for the Free French government. Near starvation and even early death was the result of this diet on her frail overworked body.

Paradoxical Disraeli In Colorful Biography By Hesketh Pearson

DIZZY, Biography of Disraeli, by Hesketh Pearson, British Book Service, 1951, $4.25.

To most casual students of British history, Benjamin Disraeli is known vaguely as the Jewish Prime Minister of the Rah-Rah age of Victoria who was somehow connected with the purchase of the Suez Canal. To Hesketh Pearson, Disraeli was a peculiar combination of paradox. "Disraeli was only quite happy at home with his wife," Pearson writes, "yet, such was the necessity of his nature, he would not have been happy at home if he had not been busy in the world."

The busy biagrapher, Hesketh Pearson, has written over a dozen lives from Shakespeare to Shaw, from Dickens to Darwin. After reading Dizzy, one has the impression that the author admired no one so much as the colorful statesman..

Pearson is too thorough to let the less attractive sides of his subject's nature pass unnoticed. But even when he is making note of Disraeli's faults and failures, the biographer cannot prevent the attitude of admiration from creeping in. One is reminded here of Moravia's definition of loving admiration, which he says is "taking a delight in contemplating not merely the beauties but also the defects, whether they be few or many, of that person."

Again, Pearson is too skilled to allow events to overshadow his subject. He presents a clear and detailed view of Victorian history, but he is constantly pushing Disraeli to the fore, quoting his views on this political theory, involving him in that historical event, or telling of his attitude toward some social custom. Speaking of an anti-Disraeli coalition in 1853, Pearson says, "We must select only those moments which disclose the peculiar nature of our protagonist, whose mere existence relieves in retrospect the tedium of so much ado about nothing."

Pearson argues for this practice in biographical writing, and plugs his own profession, in a paragraph criticizing Disraeli's Life of Lord George Bentinck. He first quotes Disraeli as writing, "Read no history, nothing but biography, for that is life without theory," then adds, "It is a pity he did not heed his own advice. To those who are interested in human beings, the story of humanity is tedious and depressing, because repetitive. Individuals vary; humanity is always the same."

"Dizzy" reads like a novel. The plot runs thread-like through the whole biography, twisting here and there to accommodate chapters on the hero's habits, loves, home, and attempts as a novelist. Suspense is maintained until the final chapters. The hero sometimes comes very close to the realization of his dream to be at the top of his political profession, and almost as often an impediment appears which disrupts his progress. Until the later years of his life, Dizzy encountered opposition at various times in everything from the attitudes of older politicians who called him "whippersnapper" to those of his own party who could justly attack none of hois abilities so he turned to name-calling and branded him "the Jew". According to his biographer, only Disraeli's patience and ambition, strengthened by the encouragement and love of his wife, kept him in the dirty game of politics.

Hesketh Pearson has chosen a subject who, to say the least, "was sufficiently out of the ordinary to make his portrait worth painting." He has matched this choice with a lively account of the life, and has managed to make his admiration for the subject compelling and contagious.

Thermodynamics Is 'Time's Arrow'

TIME'S ARROW AND EVOLUTION by Harold F. Blum; R. J. Saunders, 1951. $5.50.

'That which has happened could not have happened in any other way." This statement sums up Harold F. Blum's conclusion to the question of the creation of life. In an argument based on chemical thermodynamics, he shows that the possibilities of organic evolution were limited from the outset. This world may be "the best of all possible worlds" — according to Blum, it is perhaps the only possible world, and also, he thinks, probably the only living world.

"Time's Arrow and Evolution", in spite of its flashy-sounding title, is a very thoughtful book, evidently the product of many years of serious consideration of the problems of the origin f life. Blum, of course, does not reach a final conclusion on all the questions involved, but he performs a service both to scientists and to philosophers in stating them in clear terms, and attempting to answer some of them by quantitive application of physical laws.

In this book, he summarizes several theories of the origin of life, and incorporates them into a plan that is, as all such plans must be, thermodynamically sound. Blum adds to this composite hypothesis his own idea that the free energy for the synthesis of the first living substance was supplied by the same means as that used by all living things today to obtain energy—ATP and the other compounds of this system. He enlarges this idea by stating that he thinks that many of the compounds found almost universally in living matter (for instance ATP, the tetrapyrrole ring, and possibly the steroid nucleus) must have been present in the "hot soup" in which the first self-producing protein molecules were formed, and have so passed into the vital systems of all living things.

These relatively complex organic substances were, according to the author, utilized for the "metabolic" processes of the first living structures directly from out of their environment. Only later, after the original supply was exhausted, did they "learn" to synthesize their own food supply, using the energy of sunlight. Consequently the chemical framework of life was determined at the start by the nature of the environment in which it arose. This in turn was determined by the strictly limited possibilities of chemical combination in the non-living world prior to the arrival of life.

In addition, Blum undertakes a quantitative thermodynamic treatment of mutation. Although he admits it is based on skimpy data, he presents evidence concerning the essential nature of the change in gene structure that leads to a change in some heritable character, and even deduces values for the activation energy of this change. This argument leads to the conclusion that far from being entirely random, mutation is a very closely limited process, the possibilities of which are determined by the thermodynamics and kinetics governing the changes which initiate it.

It would be a pity if only students of science read this book, for it is of universal interest and significance. The first 130 pages or so are devoted entirely to making it self-contained. With a little serious effort, anyone can sit down and read it without previous knowledge of physical chemistry or bio-chemistry. The scientist may find these introductory chapters superfluous, and possibly others, too, may notice that they contain some unnecessary material—for instance the discussion of carbohydrate metabolism, or the list of amino acids and their structures, taking up three and a half pages.

A final note should be added regarding the author's symbolism. Blum very properly adopts the standard symbols of the physical chemist in presenting his argument to the lay public. No mathematics is involved in them. They are merely convenient abbreviations for complex concepts, and the non-scientific reader should not be frightened by them.

Historical Pageant Of The Hapsburgs

THE HAPSBURG MONARCHY (1867-1914) by A. May. R. J. Saunders, 1951, $8.00.

The Hapsburgs as a ruling dynasty may now be a has-been but for centuries they were a determining force in Europe. Arthur May has produced in his latest work, The Hapsburg Monarchy, a splendid sequel to his earlier book, The Age of Metternich. After a short review of the growth of the empire from its medieval beginnings, Prof. May traces in detail the last fifty years of a once-dominating empire whose capital, Vienna, still retains some of its old glamour. 1867 marks the year in which a dual constitutional monarchy with all the usual bureaucratic trappings, was established over the states of Austria and Hungary. Period by period, May describes the evolution and final collapse of these two states which culminated in the First World War.

May's central thesis is that this monarchy existing as it did, for dynastic purposes was unable to satisfy its divergent nationalities, although it made a noble attempt to do so. Nationalism, like a dynamic centrifugal force broke the empire asunder. May holds that the Empire only held together as long as the personality of Francis Joseph held sway.

Since Hungary played a large part in the break-up of the empire, May spends considerable space in giving an account of the ethnological and cultural background of the Magyars.

The Hapsburg Monarchy is a careful study, but this seemingly academic work is infused with life by the fluent style of Prof. May. Although the Hapsburg Empire is defunct, the pressing problem of intoxicating nationalism has by no means disappeared. Students will gain a keen insight into the problem of reconciling nationalities and national minorities by reading The Hapsburg Monarchy.

'Memory' Not Made Memorable

THE LONG MEMORY, by Howard Clewes, MacMillans, 1951, $2.25.

Here is a novel that is neither a world beater nor a flop. Better than the average novel, it will hold the attention of the reader to the end, but once read it will soon be forgotten.

Philipp Davidson is a man with a long memory. He is the son of a tug-master on the Thames estuary. While still a boy he becomes embroiled with some men who smuggle hunted criminals out of England. On the evidence of his girl friend, Fay, and an accomplice Pewsey, Davidson is committed to prison for the murder of the ring-leader. The novel picks up Davidson's story seventeen years later when he is released from prison and returns to his former haunts along the Thames.

Philipp believes that he was convicted on trumped up evidence and sets out to track down the two friends who betrayed him. Things become complicated when the narrater, a London police officer conveniently in charge of the case, reveals that he has married Fay.

Since no modern novel can afford to ignore the psychological implications of human personality, The Long Memory devotes some attention to Philipp's re-adjustment to the world from which he has been excluded for seventeen years. This portion of The Long Memory is the most compelling. However Clewes' style is disturbing. He writes as if every verb demanded an adverb and every noun an adjective. As a result the almosphere he creates remains unconvincing.

MEDS TIE BOXLA FINALS

Waterpolo Title Round Won 21-11

The University of Toronto water polo team has won the Hershorn Cup, emblematic of Intercollegiate supremacy, for the fifth year in a row. The Blues took the trophy, as they won the home and home total points series 21-11 from McGill, the only other competing team. The Blues trounced the Redmen in Toronto a week ago 16-3, and lost the return match in Montreal last Saturday 8-5.

The tilt in Montreal was much closer than the one here, the big difference being the closer checking of the McGill defence. Blue Star Norm Mortimer, who tossed in eleven goals in the first game, was covered like a tent, but even so he managed to score four of his team's five tallies. In their eagerness to keep Mortimer off the scoresheet, the Redmen fouled him on numerous occasions, but in so doing accomplished their purpose.

The game started off slowly, with each team scoring once in the first frame, but the home team pulled ahead to take a 4-2 lead by the half. The Blues stayed even with their opposition in the third quarter, as each squad netted two. But the McGill team never came close to the Blues on the round as the Varsity team entered the game with a 13 goal lead.

Novic was the star of the Redmen, as he threw in seven of his team's goals and generally sparked his teammates. For the U. of T squad, Larry Rosen at rover and Bernie Langer who scored one goal, and played both forward and defence played well, while Phil Rosen played his usual steady game on defence.

Puck Intermeds Defeat Ryerson In Exhibition Tilt

An Intermediate Blue hockey team, still in the process of being rounded into shape for the Intercollegiate season that gets under way after the holidays, downed the Ryerson Institute team 4-2 in an exhibition game played last night in Varsity Arena.

The Baby Blues notched a single counter in each of the first two 15 minute periods and scored a double in the last stanza to leave the Ryersonians two points in the dust at the final whistle. RIT scored once in the first and one in the last period and spent their idle moments bumping the Blues around and collecting penalties for their efforts.

Play throughout the game was rugged, with coach John Kennedy of the Blues employing four lines and two goal keepers in an attempt to decide just who is going to make up Varsity's Intermediate entry. Lawson and Bodnor on the same forward line accounted for 75% of the Blue scoring, with Lawson netting the pair.

Positional play on the part of both squads left a great deal to be desired, although on the whole, the Baby Blues outplayed and outchecked them throughout the game and walked away with a well deserved win from the abbreviated contest.

The Intermediates will see action in another exhibition test next week against one of the teams in the City Industrial League. League games against Western, OAC and Waterloo College are scheduled to get underway in the New Year.

Hugh Thompson takes a shot on the U.C. goalie, Ray Smela, in the second game of the best-out-of-three lacrosse finals yesterday. Smela's eyes follow Thompson's bullet shot into the corner of the net, but it takes more than eyes to stop a lacrosse ball. Thompson, like many others, was in on Smela all by himself to take his shot.

Slaughter UC 12-4 In Second Game

Jack Gear scored seven goals in the second game of the Meds-UC lacrosse finals, yesterday, to lead the Medsmen to a 12-4 triumph over UC. The game tied the three-game series at one game apiece, and leaves the championship to be decided in the final game tomorrow noon.

UC won the first game 11-10, but looked like an entirely different team yesterday, as they tired quickly and after holding the Medsmen fairly even on the play for most of the first half, seemed to disintegrate completely.

The first quarter was tightly played, with close if not exceptionally rough checking keeping the score close. Meds emerged from the period with a 3-2 lead. Dutch Young, UC's ace, was hurt in the stomach in the second period as Meds scored their fifth goal, to make the score 5-3, and had to leave the game until well into the second half. This seemed to take a lot out of UC, who owed about as much to Young for their win last week as Meds owed to Gear yesterday. Eagleson of UC was also hurt, and couldn't bend his elbow, and Giles played his first game for a couple of weeks or so, having sustained an injured biceps in the UC-SPS game.

Gear's play could be called little less than sensational. He, along with Axe Haliburton and the Varga brothers, formed the quartet which dominated the Interfac lacrosse scene for the past few years on Meds teams. With all but Gear gone this year, he has stood head and shoulders above the rest of the team.

Meds played a cagey sort of game in the first half, passing little and running with the ball as much as and wherever possible to keep possession. At one time they had all but two men off the floor with penalties, and Gear ragged the ball for over a minute till one of the penalized players came on again.

Many UC men seemed to be near collapse in the second half. Meds had taken the score to 7-3 by then, and scored five goals in the final quarter to bring it to an even dozen. Meds' passing was greatly improved, while UC's got wilder as the game went on.

oBth goalies, Reg. Perkin of Meds and smiling Ray Smela of UC, played good games in their unenviable positions in front of the nets. Smela suffered from lack of adequate checking in front of him, rather than any deficiency on his part. Perkins' play, in the first quarter when UC was pressing hard, was very good.

Aside from Gear, Colin Kilty was Meds' best, scoring three goals. Bob McMillan scored one goal, and played a standout defensive game. Hugh Thompson scored the other Meds counter.

UC's goals were divided equally amongst Young, Giles, Eagleson, and Lainson.

Lineups:

UC—Goal, Smela; Young, Eagleson, Giles, Lainson, Kopsky, Watson.
Meds—Goal, Perkins; Gear, Vince, Kilty, McMillen, Thompson, Sims, Morton.

Forestry A Wins Over Dents A 4-1

There was little action in the inter-faculty loop on Monday, with only one hockey game slated which Forestry A's took from Dent's A's by a score of 4-1. Swartman and Ross were the big guns for Forestry, Swartman getting a hat-trick and an assist on Ross' goal, while Ross, besides getting the fourth goal, notched the assists on all of Swartman's tallies. Dents' lone goal was scored by Cudmore. There was only one penalty in the game but Forestry's Bill Movey required stitches to close a cut received in the first period.

U of M, Laval Lead Intercoll Pucksters

By BARRY THOMAS

At present the U. of M. Carabins and Laval University are tied for the intercollegiate hockey lead with four points each. Varsity and McGill are both two points back. Much of the new spark of the league can be attributed to its newest entry Laval who are providing a balance to the group that their predecessor Queen's failed to do. Already the Quebec City team has dumped the supposedly two strongest teams Varsity and U. of M.

After being beaten by U. of M. in the league opener back in November the Quebeckers reversed the decision with the Carabins in their second tilt. Then the Laval team let down their defences and were recently beaten by an inspired McGill aggregation. However they bounced back into the win column last Saturday night when they polished off the Blues.

McGill who have had their ups and downs are nevertheless responding well to their new coach Rocky Robillard who was a former star with the Redmen in both football and hockey. Norm Lupovitch seems to be the best of the newcomers and hails from an American hotbed of hockey, Denver, Colorado. Both of the McGill defeats can be attributed largely to their number of penalties.

The U. of M. who actually possess the best record at present, will likely be the team for the Blues to beat. Since the war they have become the strongest team in the league and were only beaten last year by a Varsity team that outfought them. Few will contend that the Carabins aren't the smoothest skaters in the league. They have several veterans back with them this year headed by all-star Andre Charest who scored three goals the other night when his team whipped McGill 8-3. Charest has moved back to defence this season but his scoring punch still seems to be prevalent.

The Blues, who set out for Michigan this week-end for a two game exhibition stint, will likely concentrate on strengthening their defence this week. Missing stalwarts such as Porky MacDougall and John Addison has not helped the rearguard situation. However when Joe Kane returns to action the defence should show a marked improvement. Also with Al Fasan and Paul Prendergast improving daily, plus the experience of Jack MacKenzie and Gerry Fitzhenry, coach Bill Wade's worries will likely resolve themselves.

The offensive strength of the locals seems well spread out with all three lines figuring prominently in the week-end scoring. The Rope-Wheldrake-Adams line collected a goal each while Phil Arrowsmith upheld the second line with a pair of goals against McGill on which his two linemates Ernie Frey and Red Stephen drew assists. Al Conboy with two and Norm Fox with one provided the other Varsity goals.

Back at goal there seems little to choose between Doug Orr and Jack Ross. Orr succeeded in staying off the McGill forwards in fine fashion last Friday while Ross played brilliantly in defeat on Saturday.

The finals of the Women's Interfaculty Basketball season are to be played in Hart House gym tonight. The long fall basketball season came to an end two weeks ago, and in the semi-finals last week the two PHE teams, I and II, vanquished the opposition to earn the privilege of meeting one another for the championship in the big gym: If things develop as they have in past years, they will also have the privilege of playing for the first time this year in front of a fair-sized crowd.

PHE I beat Nursing in the semi-finals, and Beryl Lewi sank 16 points for the Physeders. Bob Masterson not having come across with an offer to play for the Blues yet, she will likely be a big threat tonight. Alma Hatch paced PHE II to a win over UC in the other semi-final with 10 points.

UC Leaders In Reed Race 500 Pt. Edge

The latest total of points in the Reed Trophy race puts UC-PHE on top of the heap by a clear 500 point majority in the Intramural Athletic Office announced last night. With a berth in the Mulock Cup finals and the Soccer championship in hand, the Redmen got the jump on the boys from SPS who occupy the second step on the Reed Athletic ladder.

The point leaders also collected a hatful of points from a large number of men on Intercollegiate football, soccer and rugger teams. Skule is in a pretty precarious position at present as a win for Meds in the final lacrosse game tomorrow would give them 100 points, enough to give them the second spot.

Knox, Architecture and Trinity are fourth, fifth and sixth in line respectively, with the Crumpeters leading Vic by a 400 point margin.

Morals On Canadian Campi Analyzed By McMaster Paper

McMaster's undergrad paper, The Silhouette, volunteered to analyse the state of manners and morals on various Canadian campi at the conference of the Canadian University Press last year. Out of 21 papers only five replied to the questionnaire. However this first part of the feature offers some idea of where "babes and bottles" fit into the university scene.

In general, says Silhouette writer Bill Solly, the results reflect the attitude suggested by Jim Knight, news editor of The Varsity last year. "There isn't much one can determine about morals," said he, "One can just guess!" All the people mentioned in the article were on the editorial staff of their respective papers last year in some capacity or other.

Whiffed

One of the best of these "guesses" came from the McGill Daily, especially on the subject of alcohol. A reply received previous to their suspension of last year considered alcohol with "the status of an old and honoured member." Beer, which can be bought in the Quebec grocery stores, and other drinks made their appearance at most games, dances and other social affairs. Legal restrictions on alcohol were heard of only in the envious murmurings of visiting Ontarians. Although the college never supplied alcohol at the dances, the undergraduate organizations which sponsored them usually provided coke, soda, and other mixers for the many who "brought their own".

The "good old days" included the traditional "smoker" parties in the Student's Union, the inevitable gatherings of the "whiffen-poofs" for beer at the "Shrine"—Cafe Andre and the rugby games played in Molson Stadium where "our spirits included many a bottle and can of that well-known beer." As Mary Draper, C.U.P. Editor of the paper, said in her first letter to us, "There are no rules forbidding alcohol at McGill and no written rules allowing it . . . we don't think that our professors would exactly approve of alcohol in lectures, but there is no rule which forbids it!" and again, "You ask is there any special place set aside for this purpose. Why set it aside? . . . We don't believe in setting aside places for drinking here—we leave them out in the open."

Last fall, however, when intoxicating beverages were sold at a mixed function in the Union, McGill was forced first to submit itself to a suspension, then to a number of new regulations concerning intoxicating beverages: alcohol is forbidden at dances, beer is to be allowed only at Stag and Club parties and smokers, and cocktails can only be allowed at the McGill Union "if the President of the Students' Society has given his written approval, but in no instance may cocktails be served at any functions whatsoever for which tickets have been sold." The Students' Union, however, which is open to men and women, is still the only Student Union in Canada where alcoholic beverages are allowed in any form.

Putsch

At Toronto, there is also no university regulation against alcohol, but the Caput rules provide for punishment to those whose conduct, due to alcohol, is unseemly. It cannot be served anywhere on the campus, and is forbidden in Hart House and the residences under University control. Feature writer Olga Bruchovsky said: "It is actually the Liquor Control Board that handles the alcohol regulations here. For example, there is no University statute against throwing a big beer party on the front campus, but the Liquor Control Board would step in and break it up. The pretext would be that the University has no license."

The amount consumed by the individual student at Toronto, however, is a different matter, since who drinks, and what he drinks, is something left up to him and him alone. "There is more drinking," says Miss Bruchovsky, "than there was ten years ago, but now it is so much easier to obtain liquor."

Blue?

Only one case of drunkenness in which punishment has been handed out has occurred since the war at Dalhousie University at Halifax, which forbids the serving of alcohol at any university function. Any breach of this regulation or any other unbecoming conduct is subject to regular university discipline. Drinking is definitely prohibited on the campus of Acadia University too. As far as the co-eds are concerned there is no drinking whatsoever in residence. To be caught in residence is punishable with expulsion. This also applies to the male population on the campus.

Too Much

L. C. Coleman of the Queen's Journal states the case for Canadian students in regard to alcohol: "Canadian students don't necessarily drink too much but rather drink in the wrong manner. Their object, too often, is an end effect of drunkenness instead of a desire to use drinking as a social stimulus and a source of pleasure to the palate. This, I feel, is something common in our whole society and not confined to universities alone — undoubtedly one of the after-effects of the prohibition era. However, as is commonly felt, university students, if anyone, should be enlightened, and if our society is to adopt saner ways, they must be among the first to adopt them.

"This large percentage of students at Queen's, when they first arrive there, have done little or no drinking. They also are usually faced for the first time with absence of parental restriction. Like most people, they have a fair amount of the sheep complex,— i.e. follow the leader—the leader in this case being the senior students. They note that these students drink and often to excess. To show that they are 'one of the boys', they also start to drink, and to show that they aren't 'stick-in-the-muds' they don't hesitate to tie one on. They get the idea that they are being pretty smart and boast about their exploits with the bottle, rather than being ashamed of their weakness. They are not to be totally blamed since their elders offer them such a poor example."

"Receptions"

Students are seldom aware of the fact that dances have only been held at McMaster for approximately the last fifteen years. At Acadia, which is also a Baptist university, dances are called receptions. In order for a reception to be constitutionally possible, seven topics must be given during the evening. This is handled by a Social Committee. Topics are entertaining features which are held during intermission. The word "topic" comes from the topic-evening popular at Acadia in the twenties. Couples would promenade about a room discussing different topics of conversation.

By Ten

Rulings for late leaves for girls in residence at Acadia are quite stiff: Saturday is a free night for all but like Cinderella, twelve o'clock is the deadline for late leaves. All the co-eds receive this privilege. Freshettes must remain in residence two evenings a week. Late leave is considered to be eleven o'clock excepting Saturday night. Sophs receive two late leaves, Juniors three and Seniors may have a late leave every night. Sunday night is another free night, but ten o'clock is the required coming-in time and ten-thirty the late leave for this evening.

Co-eds

John Cunningham, of the McGill Daily has some interesting comments on Chorus Lines and Group Behaviour at this University: "The topic of Chorus Lines and Women Cheerleaders could possibly fall under the heading of sex. For years McGill students have been clamoring for drum majorettes and co-ed cheerleaders, — as a matter of fact, a yell has been devised to register this disapproval. The Board of Governors regulation on this reads: "Women Cheerleaders and Drum Majorettes are not permitted at McGill University. The appearance of women students in 'chorus lines' will be approved only in those cases where the girls appear on an appropriate stage as a part of a regular performance approved by the Student's Executive Council and provided that in no case shall the girls apepar in chorus costume in any part of the University buildings except on the said stage." At the Senior Intercollegiate football games, where McGill is the only University forbidding the performance of drum majorettes and women cheerleaders, it is not an uncommon sight to see male students impersonating co-eds for the amusement of students who are deprived of a pretty pair of legs."

Rabbi Speaks Next Sunday In Vic Series

Rabbi Abraham Feinberg will address the students of Victoria College Sunday, December 16 at 7:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

He is speaking in connection with a chapel series, which features some of the best-known speakers in Toronto.

Former speakers included President Moore.

Rabbi Feinberg's speech was announced at last night's meeting of the Victoria College Union. The speeches are usually held in the chapel, but the Rabbi's will be given in Alumni Hall.

all's choice of program. Suzanna is not her part in "The Marriage of Figaro". Her intensity would be very appropriate in "Forgi amor" or "Dove sono", but "Deh vieni" is not the full-bodied thing she made it. Suzanna is only a little girl, suddenly overcome by the moonlight. Even Rossini's countess-to-be is more sophisticated, and was well portrayed in Miss Marshall's "Una voce".

The long asscoiation of Miss Marshall and Mr. Kilburn is evident in the reliance on the other performer on both sides. The result is a rare unanimity between singer and accompanist.

Lois Marshall is sometimes described as "a coming artist", This is but a lukewarm distinction. Anyone who heard her last Sunday will agree that she has arrived.

Demonstrate Against Store In Montreal

Montreal (CUP) — The McGill Daily reported last night that the demonstration by University of Montreal students on Saturday was ineffective in stopping buyers from entering the large department stores which had advertised that they would stay open on the day of the Feast of the Immaculate Conception.

The Daily reported that the picket lines were easily broken up by police. The demonstrators sang impromptu lyrics to the tune of a hymn and chanted "a Loi pour tout le monde" — the law is for everyone — while picketing.

Saturday was the first day that a new city by-law ordering the closure of stores on Roman Catholic holy days was enforced. Stores remaining open faced a $40 fine and possible padlocking if convicted a second time. The padlocking of the stores would be done under a different law than the provincial padlock law which applies to communists. Ordinarily the city law is used to close gambling and disorderly houses.

Words, properly used, have the power to crumble empires, smash armies and corrode minds. I say properly or improperly judging by the standards and motives of the user.

It would seem, however, that the school of the complete sentence and the graphically illustrated phrase have a somewhat different outlook on the matter.

"I've always heard that simple writing, forceful, well-chosen words, and an idea to start with are about all a writer needs to get his point across. There are those who would disagree with me.

"A bat is a round piece of wood to bat a ball with." Understand? If you are a grammatician, you don't. Shame on you. I misplaced a preposition.

I'll never forget the day I split my first infinitive either. There it was, big as life and split all to heck and gone. I was appalled at what I had done. I went around for days with my collar turned up. I knew better, but I couldn't help myself. It was noticed by my English teacher, Miss Antrope, and from that day to this we have been waging a battle. She, for the complex sentence, and I for the liberation of the common man.

There has been a general gripe among those who sell books that the American public has lost interest in reading. It buys a picture magazine and has the week's news poured into its dome supersonically. No big three-syllable words to worry about, no dangling participles, no prolapsed articles or fractured grounds. They do it with pictures and captions. And the public loves it.

"A face like a bilious alligator." Think that one over for a while. Ghastly isn't it? But at least you know what the person in question looks like. That was the caption on a picture of a prominent wrestler. You not only have the picture to see, but a caption to affirm your suspicions.

The contemporary writers who have succeeded financially seem to be the ones who can push your face into the mud, slop it about a bit and bring you out feeling as though you have just experienced a new sensation. All this without completing a sentence. They dangle participles before your baby blue eyes, hack infinitives to pieces, cast the bits to the four winds, intersperse the sentence with a few lusty cuss words and then go out to sell their books. They get rich.

I've probably misplaced a verbal here and there, and doubtless some of you may find my thought structure a bit shaky, but I've graduated from the school of simple writing to the realm of consummate phraseology. Complete sentence to you.

Molson's: So What?

Editor, The Varsity:

Mr. Alley's letter of December 10 concerning advertising on the part of breweries indicates rather little in the line of reasoning. Any argument that makes diabetes caused by excess sugar analogous to alcoholism caused by excess alcohol, and goes on to prove drinking no more dangerous than eating sugar — any such argument is beyond dispute because there has been no argument other than a rather ill-chosen analogy. If you really want to know, Mr. Alley, the social consequences of excess alcohol compared to excess sugar, ask Dr. Rogers, the medical consultant to the Provincial Police. He would inform you that alcohol is involved in 75-90% of automobile accidents. Or you might seek guidance from the Yale Institute of Alcoholic Studies. This is no self-righteous temperance group, yet they would inform you that your laboured analogy of alcohol to filet mignon, caviar and sugar is labored — and rather ridiculous when the social consequences of these excesses is compared.

Now, Mr. Alley, exactly what is it that you are saying in your rather long and disconnected letter? It seems that like a good preacher you have left your text to the last in order to keep your congregation guessing. Your last sentence is — "Personally I like Molson's". That is a noble text, Mr. Alley, and one deserving of consideration but I ask you, is it really original, is it really thought-provoking, does it really merit such a long build up as your letter bestows upon it?

It seems to me that we have yet another suave sophisticate bursting for self-expression, another eager young debonair soul thirsting for acclaim — and the method used is a shock, supposedly. So our suave sophisticate chooses a whipping-boy and proceeds to belabor him to the (supposed) delight of the bystanders. The easy assumption is made that all Christians are hypocrites and all temperance supporters are self-righteous cranks, and then the unequal battle is on. The imaginary foe, the joyless, puritanical, ascetic modgrationist, is hunted, treed and riddled with a musket full of crushing analogies comparing alcohol to filet mignon and caviar. I ask you Mr. Alley are you not being too severe? It is rather heartless of you to use such telling arguments against such an obviously bad and weak foe.

To return to your text, "Personally I like Molson's", I suggest that your letter is analogous to the supposedly shocking statement of the little boy who proudly announced to his mother on his eighth birthday — "Look Mom, I'm an atheist" only to be met with a pat on the head and the rather disconcerting reply — "That's O.K. son, you'll grow up one of these days."

You say, "Personally I like Molson's". I say, "Sure — so what".

J. A. Lougheed, III Emmanuel.

Policeman's Lot

Traditionally, a policeman's lot is not a happy one.

Recently we received a letter (printed elsewhere on this page) from an individual concerned about the lack of shelter provided for the faithful constables who serve us so well at the eastern and southern entrances to the campus. The letter pointed out the unpleasant aspects of the shelter which these gentlemen have to face—high winds and rain.

We became concerned too. We did not like to think of such suffering going on right under our noses when possibly something could be done about it. And so we investigated.

Yesterday, one of the coldest days this winter has yet offered, we went to see the guard at the wind-tunnel entrance to the campus on the east, to find out whether or not he thought things were all they might be. We had to wait about twenty minutes for him to get back from his relief, and during that interval our ears and hands became very cold.

When he returned, he answered our questions by saying that one gets hardened to the weather. He admitted that at times it gets very cold. But he pointed out that guards are relieved three or four times a day, and never have to stand at their posts for more than two hours at a time. One's ears get weathered, he said. Ours, however, merely got cold.

He concluded that he could not completely agree that he was not being treated unjustly, but granted that university guards were not treated any more unjustly than anybody else.

We also contacted the office of the Superintendent. We were told that last year the guards got through and didn't freeze and didn't die. They are supplied with plenty of warm clothing, and relieved three or four times a day. Moreover, the Superintendent's office had received no complaints from entrance guards, and we were given to believe that if guards felt maltreated, they would complain.

The Superintendent's office had at one time considered erecting guardboxes for the shelter of the constables. But investigations stopped when it was made apparent that guard boxes would make the campus look "more like a penitentiary than it does."

Our friend the guard had a concrete suggestion. Queen's Park is rented by the University to the Province for a nominal fee, on a 99-year (or there-abouts) lease. Queen's Park represents a lot of open, unused space. Unused space reminds the modern mind of parking lots. The constable suggested that Queen's Park be used as a parking lot. Those using it would have space near the campus to park their cars. A fee of about fifteen cents a day would pay for a warm coat and cap for an attendant to guard cars and contents.

If this is effected, guards will not longer be needed at campus entrances.

And we suggest, if the guard's plan is carried out, that the cap be provided with ear-flaps.

Comment

Toronto's other morning daily stated yesterday in unequivocal terms that Toronto students regaled themselves with no less than sixteen parties over the Carabin weekend. An astounding figure. We can only guess at how that number was attained.

Our guess is that the program of events was scanned. When the two religious masses are deleted, sixteen events remain. The sixteen "parties" then include the arrival at Union Station; a tour of the subway; a tour of Hart House; various lunches; a bus trip to Caledon Hills Farm; a Sunday afternoon tea; and the departure from Union Station. Moreover, students participating in the Carabin welcome, including the director of the weekend, could not recall more than six possible parties; three parties proper, and three post-party parties.

High Winds And Rain

Editor, The Varsity:

This year, as usual, the constables of the university police force are efficiently serving the university and its members, especially at the eastern and southern entrances to the campus. It is also apparent that no provision has been made to shelter these officers, at their various posts, from some of the most unpleasant aspects of the weather, such as high winds and rain. At the eastern entrance, the officer can shelter beneath the overpass, but this becomes a wind tunnel during the winter and because of the location of the barrier, the officer cannot stand in the sun on bright days. At the southern entrance there is not even the shelter provided by a building coping. Some form of guard box which would stave off at least the more rigorous weather would do much to improve conditions for these gentlemen, who appear to have neither the diversions of a regular "beat" or the minimum of comfort usually afforded barrier pickets.

Chatter And Click

Editor, The Varsity:

We have on this campus a student theatre. It has, for the last five years, produced consistently good performances of the better plays. As students we have the privilege of seeing these production for a very reasonable price. On Friday night we saw this privilege abused.

The play started at 8.40 p.m., 10 minutes after the time scheduled on the tickets. This period of grace should be sufficient for all those people who find it impossible to be anywhere on time. By 8:45 on Friday evening we were so annoyed by the continuous interruptions of latecomers that we kept count. No less than 45 people, nearly 10 percent of the total audience straggled in by 9:05. A large percentage of these were students.

Audible chattering and the click of heels could be heard in the entrance corridor. Even after entering the theatre proper, some of these delinquents found it impossible to make only the minimum of noise. The odd seat may bang when someone edges into the centre of a row. But removal of coats, rustling of programs and whispers of "What has happened?" and who is speaking?" are entirely unwarranted.

These disturbances are not only annoying to the paying customers but also to the actor or actors who are on the stage. We found from talking to them that this night was no exception; if everyone was seated by 9:05 they felt relieved. Such an ill-mannered display is neither fashionable nor in keeping with the spirit of a true theatre-goer.

As regular customers of Hart House Theatre and as students of this University, we feel that Hart House Theatre has enough prestige to do something about the situation.

We suggest that people who come in after the performance starts should be required to wait QUIETLY in the lobby until a scene change allows them to be seated without interrupting the audience. If some of these late customers feel this is a slight on their dignity, their money should be refunded and they should be allowed to go home in shame or in rage, whichever reaction their immature natures dictate.

We sincerely hope that the management of Hart House Theatre, the students and the Board of Syndics will take definite action to prevent the recurrence of another such annoying evening in the theatre.

Carillon To Ring For Xmas Tree

Tomorrow night at 8:00 you will hear the inspiring chiming of the Hart House Carillon. These bells are rung only on special occasions such as the Royal Tour and Armistice Day. Thursday night is just such an event. It is the Blue and White Christmas Tree. The Christmas Tree, which was inaugurated last year, is aimed at bringing the whole university together in the Christmas spirit.

Following the ringing of the carillon at eight-thirty, people will assemble in the Great Hall where the Hart House Glee Club, directed by Ward McAdam will present their own versions of Christmas carols. A mass carol singing will follow this to bring everybody closer to the true spirit of Christmas.

The atmosphere is foremost with the setting being in the darkened Great Hall of Hart House which will be illuminated only by the lights of the tree and the glow from the fire place where there will be a yule log burning.

Tommy Tweed, noted dramatist with the Canadian Broadcasting Commission, will deliver his interpretation of a Christmas Story from Dickens' Pickwick Papers. This is another annual event in the Christmas Tree.

A well known campus personality will be on hand to handle the chores of Santa Claus complete with padding and beard. He will mediate between the colleges and faculties in the exchange of gifts.

Informality is the keynote for the evening. Everyone is urged to bring a blanket. Because of the cramped conditions of the Hall, people will settle themselves on the floor around the fire place.

This is another extra that counts on the campus. All students who have that hidden Christmas spirit have this chance to get out and join with their fellow students in bringing back a little of the spirit of fellowship.

The Varsity Christmas Tree is free.

Undergrad to Sponsor Hunt For Art Talent

The Undergrad is again sponsoring an art contest this year in which all students of University College may enter. Items submitted may be from any phase of the field of art — anything from sculpturing to sketches, watercolors and oil paintings. The deadline for the contest is to be January 10th.

"There is a lot of talent in UC", said the editor of the Undergrad, Peter Jarvis (IV), "and it remains to be seen." You don't have to be an artist to enter the contest added Jarvis, and the only way for the contest to be successful is for all to enter and let the judges decide the winners.

The prizes for the winners will be donated by the UC Women's Undergraduate Association, and the more entries there are, the more money will be given by the WUA.

This year the art exhibit will be displayed in a prominent place in University College and the winners' names will be published in THE UNDERGRAD and in THE VARSITY. The judges, as last year, will be faculty members. Professors Bagnani and Grant were judges of the contest last year.

The works will be judged on originality and signs of future promise rather than on technical proficiency, and it is the purpose of the contest not to discourage but to encourage amateur artists who show promise. Considering that UC is not a college of art the judges do not expect professional technique from the entries.

Mock Parliament Committee Allow 2 Independent Seats On Basis Of Mock Election

A motion allowing the Independents at the University of Toronto two seats in the coming Mock Parliament was approved yesterday by each of the fourth parties of the Mock Parliament Committee. The motion was brought in by David Fry, IV Trin, and was supported by the spokesman of the Independent group, George Brigden, IV UC.

It will be introduced to the legislature at the beginning of the first Mock Parliament, to be held next January 10th, in the legislative assembly of the Parliament Buildings. It will be moved by Fry, who will be allowed to speak five minutes on it, and seconded by John Medcoff, IV UC, leader of the opposition.

The motion, as worded by Claire Bacchus, IV UC, chairman of the Mock Parliament Committee, reads: 'Moved, that the Independents be entitled to one representative on the Mock Parliament Committee, and two seats in the Legislature during the present session; and that the Independent members proposed to the Mock Parliament Committee, by their spokesman must be accepted by four-fifths of the Committee.'

The two independents who will represent the Independent party will be picked at the next meeting of the committee on January 8th. Two people tentatively suggested for the seats are Vern Turner, IV UC, and George Brigden, IV UC. Many other have indicated interest in the Independents, and the choice of members is not restricted to those signed to a recent letter to The Varsity, said Brigden commenting on support of the movement.

In stating the case for the Independents, Brigden said that from the number of students who voted Independent in the election, we must see that they are represented. "The marks used by the Independents were just as legal as the check marks, etc., that were recognized and accepted. We demand that the Independents be accepted to the House."

Representative from the Liberal party to the Mock Parliament Committee, John Medcof, IV UC, pointed out that "a decision was made and publicized early this year stating that only recognized parties of the University of Toronto would be acceptable on the ballot".

Said Brigden, "We came late as a result of seeing the political platforms as they appeared in The Varsity. We feel that independent opinion must be recognized and we will give as independent opinion as possible," he said.

At the same meeting, David Fry, IV Trin., and leader of the Government, outlined the bills his party had agreed to. One of these bills must be accepted by the speaker of the House before we can go ahead he said, and we will notify the parties as to the choice before Christmas. The suggested bills are:

(1.) to introduce comprehensive social security; (2) to establish a Government Grants board for Universities, and increase bursaries to Universities; (3) to amend the Liquor Control Act of Ontario.

What Goes On

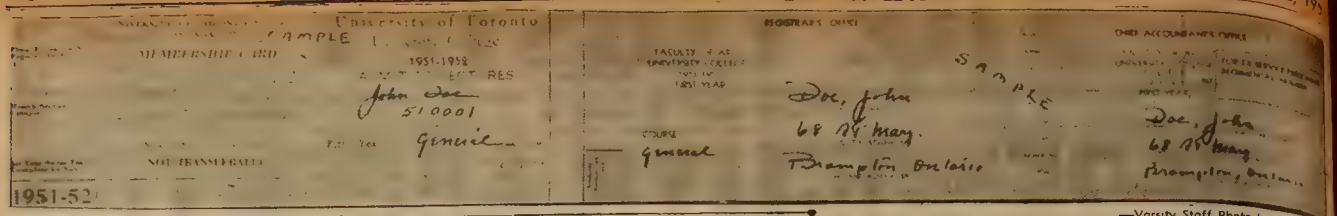
Hart House dress, always a subject of debate, reached a new high yesterday when Peter Wade, IV UC, appeared in Great Hall in his pyjamas. His pants had apparently been stolen, and pyjamas answered to the call of decency. Controversy has arisen in the past over Hart House dress, some feeling that suit coat and tie should be worn at all times in the House, others feeling that such violation of individual liberty would be undemocratic

SIDNEY GILCHRIST

Gilchrist Talk: Afric Doctor's Life & Work

Dr. Sidney Gilchrist, head of the Dondi Hospital in Angola, West Africa, will speak on "The Life and Work of the Doctor in Africa" in the lecture room of the Banting Institute tomorrow at 1 p.m. The lecture is being sponsored by the Student Christian Movement in Medicine.

Dr. Gilchrist began this work in 1930 under the United Church of Canada, and is now on furlough in Canada.



As well as treating diseased persons both surgically and mentally, he has organized village clinics in Angola where native dispensers are able to administer injections of chaulmoogra oil to arrest leprosy. This is laying the foundation for more adequate treatment of this disease. At the hospital many native workers are employed in doing research on prevalent diseases in that part of the world.

On arrival in Canada for furlough early in 1940, Dr. Gilchrist enlisted in the RCAMC, and served overseas as medical officer in North Africa and Italy. In recognition of his services he was awarded the MBE, making him a member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire.

On his release from military service in 1945, Dr. Gilchrist took the Public Health Course at the University of Toronto before returning to his work in Angola.

History Prof Is President For Institute

It was announced on Monday that Edgar A. McInnis, Professor of History, and a Canadian historian, had been appointed president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, founded in 1928, for the purpose of giving information about international affairs to the Canadian public. Professor McInnis is now on a sabbatical leave from the University, in order to write a book about the evolution of post-war settlement.

Here is your ATL card as it starts off in September, 18 inches long. The familiar little part you keep is the 8 inches on the left end of the streamer you see here. It folds in half, very conveniently going into your wallet, and when called for will get you somewhere nothing else would. The portion on the right hand end of the card is claimed by the Chief Accounts Office, and is filled out for the IBM machines that handle them. The section in the middle is removed in the Registrar's office for their files. This one contains all the pertinent information regarding the students, such as, name, course and anything else the University would have to know about our imaginary student.

ATL Card Always Help Except to Get to Lecture

"May I see your ATL card please?" Click. "Okay, go on in" and you proceed with another stamp, mark of perforation on this handy little card-of-all-uses. Admit To Lectures cards have been around the University as long as anyone can remember and their value seems to increase each year.

Your ATL card starts off in September, 18 inches long, in the University Registrar's office. When an application for admission is received, an ATL card is made out. The Chief Accountant's Office claims the right-hand portion for their files. The little sections on the left-hand side are filled out by the IBM machines that ease the work in the office. The Registrar's office then removes the next section for their files. This section contains the students name, course and other pertinent information. The remaining section is then sent over to the correct college or faculty where our imaginary student, John Doe picks it up when he registers at the beginning of the year.

This eight inch piece of paper becomes increasingly important to Doe as he proceeds through the functions of orientating himself at college. By now he (or she) has name, student number, college or faculty, course and signature of a registrar on it. No matter how long the student stays in university he retains this same number, the first two digits of which represent the year he began college. The other digits indicate the order in which his application was received.

Then by going around to the various activities Doe is reduced to a series of letters, numbers, symbols and various hieroglyphics. He is given a physical education number and letter up in the left hand corner. His state of health is stamped immediately below that and the fact that he passed his swimming test and when he passed it is indicated underneath. Football fever is in the air and the UTAA takes up that blank space to the right of the year when Doe purchases his tickets. The numbers one to five are all that is left and these fill in a variety of uses. Special sports events and so on will cause perforations that will obscure these numbers. That, then is just about all that the athletic portion of the ATL card will take so Doe concentrated on the other four inches.

The SAC office perforates the lower right hand corner when the "Students' Bible" (officially known as the Students' Handbook) is obtained. The UC "Lit" punches a hole somewhere in the blank space above that when Doe voted in the "Lit" elections. The "U" is crossed out during the Mock Parliament elections. For some unknown reason, a star like perforation was made over the small number "13" on one student's card. His signature is needed when he goes to Simcoe Hall to get his examination pseudonym.

One of the important values of this ATL card comes in regard to retail merchants. Some firms that make surgical instruments will grant reductions to Meds students on instruments on presentation of the card. A florist reduces the price of flowers to students, two firms rent dress suits to students at lower prices and a movie theatre lowers admission, all on the presentation of the omnipotent card.

Impersonating a person by using their ATL card brings down severe repercussions. Suspension faces those who use ATL cards for impersonation at exams and other important University activities and confiscation of the card will result from using the card illegally at sports events. Loss of the ATL card means a seven day wait at Simcoe Hall. Then cards are stamped "Duplicate."

These cards are very valuable for use in identifying oneself at banks, at the border or when questioned in connection with an accident. In fact, there isn't much that these cards aren't used for, except, perhaps, to be admitted to lectures.

PRESS DEBATE

At eight tonight, the motion "Resolved that this house regards the Press as a monument to human folly", will be debated in the Debates Room at Hart House. V. G. Turner and Ken Jarvis, IV UC, will support the motion, and Ian Montagnes, news editor of The Varsity, and Murray Morgan, III St. Mike's, will oppose it. Ralph Allen, editor of Maclean's, will be the guest speaker for the evening.

Prodigy Dazzles At Massey Hall

The last great violin prodigy was Yehudi Menuhin who, at the age of eleven played the Bach, the Beethoven, and the Brahms violin concertos — all at one concert. Last Monday evening, a new prodigy, fifteen year old Michael Rabin dazzled the audience at Massey Hall. There is no doubt that Master Rabin will follow the steps of Mr. Menuhin and develop into a great artist. In his concert, Michael Rabin showed that he already possesses the two requisite qualities for a great violinist: a superb technique and an amazingly rich tone.

The boyish nonchalant ease with which he played Sarasate's Introduction and Tarantelle and the four Paganini Caprices (21, 13, 24 and 3), with their staccato, flying staccato, dificult doubit stopping, long intricate runs, and the other paraphernalia of violin bravura, was astonishing, and, at times, breathtaking. His technique has almost reached the point of perfection. Master Rabin, as well, has an extremely resonant tone; it absolutely filled Massey Hall with sound.

Perhaps where such a tone is indispensable is in Bach. In his performance of the first four movements of the Bach Partita in D Minor for violin alone, Michael Rabin gave it an organ-like fullness and grandeur which is the very essence of Bach's writings for the violin. His tone infused lyrical passages, such as the second movement of his main work, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, with a great warmth and beauty.

However, what Master Rabin lacks, obviously enough, is maturity. The colouring and expression of the music did not come from within the violinist, but was mechanically and pedagogically imposed from without. This was most clearly revealed in the Vivaldi-Respighi D Major Sonata, where all expression marks, especially dynamics, were ever so slightly tending to exaggeration.

Because of his youth, an oddity, a novelty today, with maturity, he will certainly be a great musical artist.

Victoria Debaters Uphold Saint Nick

Santa Claus was described as a pot-bellied old fossil yesterday afternoon as a Vic Debating Parliament defeated 11-3 the resolution that "Santa Claus should be abolished."

The idea that Santa Claus is harmful to children was put forth by Frank Machry, I Vic, leader of the government. It teaches them they can get something for nothing, he said.

"We teach children falsehoods," he said, "and then try to teach them the values of life."

Joan Graham, I Vic, leader of the opposition, said that if Santa Claus were abolished, children would have less incentive for being good.

She said that children are rarely emotionally disturbed when they find out that there is no Santa Clause. As a rule, she said, they grow out of the belief slowly, and any child who is badly affected is the type who would be affected by any of life's numerous jolts.

The second speaker for the government was Ruth Pigeon, I Vic. She argued that children should not be bribed to be good, with Christmas presents, because "bribery is the kind of thing which corrupts itself."

She described the "awful pang" she got when she found out there was no Santa Claus. For a long time, she said, she had no ideals to put in his place.

Ivan Thornley-Hall, I Vic, second speaker for the opposition, wanted to know how one would go about the process of abolishing Santa Claus. He predicted, as a result, "an underground composed of the younger generation all over the world."

He said that even without Santa Claus, the commercialism of Christmas would continue.

Employment Vital Issue To Keynes

"I would be inclined to believe that even if the cold war hadn't developed, and if we were not rearming, our obsession with full employment would still have given us a real problem of inflation," said Professor W. C. Hood in a talk on "John Maynard Keynes" to the Political Science Club last night. Hood believes this situation to be partially a result of Keyne's preoccupation with the problem of unemployment.

Keynes believed that saving was dangerous in a depressed community, Hood continued, and anti-thrift campaign could receive theoretical justification through Keynes. "History may prove him to be more of a bauble and less of an explosion because of the set of problems with which we are forced to deal today," he added.

Among the unusual facts about Kaynes which Hood mentioned were that his mother was Mayor of Cambridge, his wife a ballet dancer, and he himself "was one of those people who hated to get up in the morning and consequently did a great deal of his work in bed." Possessing an admirable combination of talents, Keynes was an economist, artist, administrator, writer, the friend of many and had a strong faith in reason and in England, he said.

For Keynes' policy came first, then theory, Hood said. He wrote voluminously for the press, and "his books were an appeal to the intelligent for support of ideas which he had aired weeks or months before", he added.

"He knocked more of the dickens out of the classical economists than he really had to," Hood said. As in his condemnation of the gold standard Kaynes often overstated his case and wanted to 'go whole hog'."

Commenting on Hood's appraisal of Keynes' general theory, Professor Easterbrooke of the Economics Department said the speaker "might even be useful to history some day".

ISS Explained By Secretary

"The International Student's Service is based on the concept of the university as an association of people with certain common ideals and interests," said the national secretary of ISS, Pat Daniels. "To the ordinary individual student or professor it offers a chance to take part in the program of assistance and education between members of the various university communities," continued Mr. Daniels, in his address to members of the Hillel Foundation.

The ISS in Canada really got its start during the Second World War, as Canadian students realized the need for European relief. Since then, Canadian students and professors have contributed over $100,000 in cash and kind. Last year, at the University of Toronto, ISS sponsored the AVA, whose proceeds went to fulfil part of the programme of relief in India and Pakistan, and it is hoped that this year's SHARE campaign will do the same thing. These funds provide medical drugs, student health centres, and books and journals for Asian universities.

The double-barrelled ISS programme provides also for international education, based on Canadian scholarships for refugees, and international summer seminars.

Final Issues

There will be no issue of The Varsity tomorrow. Remaining issues this term will be Friday —a Christmas issue—and Monday — a theme issue on Education. Those wishing to have announcements in the paper should submit them by 4:00 p.m. today.

Hart House Art Talk

Goodridge Roberts will speak on his current Hart House exhibition at 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, December 19, in the Hart House Art Gallery, a week from today.

This distinguished Canadian landscape painter was born in Barbados, British West Indies, in 1904. In 1905 he moved to New Brunswick, and has been a resident of Canada ever since. Mr. Roberts is a nephew of the late Sir Charles G. D. Roberts (naturalist-author) and a relation of Bliss Carman.

Mr. Goodridge Roberts rarely repaints his landscapes from a drawing, but prefers to paint "from life". He has been described by some as a Romanticist, and by Paul Duval, the art critic of Saturday Night, as a "lyric poet among painters."

Rival Morning Daily Censured By EAC

The External Affairs branch of the Students' Administrative Council met last night and adopted a motion by Ralph Wintrob, III UC, that "The EAC request the SAC to write a letter to the Glove and Mail thanking them for their cooperation at the Carabin week-end and censuring them for a misrepresentation of the spirit of the week-end."

Dorothy Leiberman, II Pre Meds, reporting on the recent Carabin week-end said that "this man from the Glove and Mail was kind and helpful, but he was around for the whole week-end and it seemed to be almost an intrusion."

Wintrob then requested that the Globe and Mail be censured for their misrepresentation in reporting that the week-enders held 16 parties. He later agreed to incorporate an amendment to the motion, which would also thank the downtown paper for their co-operation in publicity.

Morris Keurtzer, II Law, added, "I saw the newsman around and I wish that I had followed him more closely, because he apparently attended 16 parties while I heard only of two."

Tim Armstrong, II Vic, reporting on the publicity for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education, stated that public relations men were busy addressing several faculty governments. He said that Fraser Mustard, III Meds, had spoken to the Victoria College Union on Monday, outlining the SHARE plan for raising $1,200 at Victoria. He added that Ken Jarvis, IV UC, and David Fry, IV Trin, were addressing the groups at the Medical and Dental faculties respectively. Armstrong stated that he would look into a suggestion by Morris Keurtzer, II Law, that the "2,000 students in the Graduate School of Studies" be included in the campaign.

Dorothy Leiberman estimated that after the $2.00 fee still owed by Carabiners had been paid, there would be a surplus of about $250 from the $550 budgeted for the week-end by the SAC. It was indicated that this would be the surplus even after the French students had been subsidized for travelling expenses.

Alabama Looking For Ugliest Man

Auburn, Ala.—(Exchange)—Students at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute are now engaged in the search for a male member of the student body who has a face "that is ugly enough to scare away a hangover."

The winner of the contest will receive the illustrious title of U.M.O.C. which means the Ugliest Man on the Campus. The proceeds of the contest will be used in the various service projects of Alpha Phi Omega, the honorary service fraternity.

Yearbook Prices To Go Up Dec. 21

"The Torontonensis this year will be a more interesting book," stated Editor Walt MacKenzie, IV Meds. "Instead of being a catalogue of the graduating students, it will be a diary of student activities on the campus," he added.

The pictures and the biographies of the graduating classes are "coming along well" according to MacKenzie. The staff of the Torontonensis has some trouble each year, of course, with the large faculties. This year, as in the past, there will be the usual number of students who won't have their pictures or biographies in the Torontonensis because of their lack of enthusiasm in the project.

The reduced prices will be in effect till the end of term according to MacKenzie. That is, the cost of the book will stay at $3.00 per copy, until December 21. Then the price goes up to $3.50 in the second term. The extended time limit is to encourage early sales and because the students studying under DVA don't receive their checks until Friday. Early sales mean a better chance to estimate how many books will be needed.

The SAC office reports that sales are just getting under way.

Last year, 2,200 books were sold, but the number sold this year should exceed this figure. Among other things the Torontonensis covers all the sports completely, all clubs and fraternities, the SAC and its many activities and of course, biographies and pictures of the graduating class.

Art Review

Goodridge Roberts

The current show in the Hart House Art Gallery consists of 33 paintings by Goodridge Roberts. Most of these are oils; nine are water-colors. All paintings, except one, are landscapes.

The paintings have no immediate impact, their colors are quiet, their composition straight-forward, their theme "bread-and-potatoes" landscapes. Yet there is a great vitality and maturity in all of them.

The colors are serene but very subtle in their minute variations. The composition is simple but rhythmic and unaffected. The subject-matter is typical Canadian landscape-scenes which only a few people dare to paint — the edge of a forest, a meadow in summertime, a simple rocky beach.

The landscapes are presented in moody but unspectacular atmospheres. There does not seem to be any interest in the play of the sun-rays over the surfaces, but rather in the blending of the scene with its natural every-day setting. This all is presented in a broad, unconcentrated, unrestricted space, which is not confined into the frame of the painting, but which seems to continue all around it. The paintings are behind the frame (viewed through it) rather than in it.

Goodridge Roberts does not simplify the masses into more geometrical forms characteristic of the Group of Seven. Instead he simplifies the shapes to their rhythms, inherent movement, and general visual qualities. His principal means in achieving this is an energetic and final brush stroke. Best examples of this are "Samedi" and "Edge of Clearing".

The optical illusions of perspective are minimized by the composition, a strong continuity of the "horizontal" plane of the picture, and the brushwork which does not decrease in size, but only slightly in its clarity.

The water-colors have a lighter and more luminous character. They too are handled very energetically. They avoid the slight touch of pettiness, found in almost all paintings in this medium. On the other hand, they do not have the definite mood and great subtlety in color changes of the oils. The colors tend to run.

The whole show presents a problem of monotny in representing only a short creative period. This tends to limit the subject matter, the moods, color and composition into a definite, closely related group.

The exhibition will remain on the walls until the end of this term. It will be reviewed by Mr. Goodridge Roberts himself on Dec. 19 at 5 p.m. Both women and men of the University will be admitted.

Manners And Morals

This is the second article on "babes and bottles". It is an analysis on the state of manners and morals on various Canadian campi conducted by Bill Solly of the McMaster undergrad paper, The Silhouette.

Jim Knight, in his reply from The Varsity, headed his answer by speaking of his newspaper—"As you have seen, we go in more than somewhat for a fair representation of the student 'body' in our paper. The fact that we go in for it more on the physical side may tell you something. Unfortunately, the feature won't tell you a damn thing."

He did make one noteworthy observation on alcohol: "As a result of the decreased revenue, more dances are held on the campus, rather than at the big hotels downtown. Since liquor is forbidden on the campus, it has become more difficult to get the stuff from the bottle into the drinker at a dance. When a dance is held at a hotel, it is customary for a group of people (anywhere from 4 to 40) to rent a room in the hotel where drinking can be done in peace, if not in quiet. On the campus, it is necessary to creep guiltily into a washroom for a quick one, and unless the girl has her own bottle, she doesn't get a drink at all. Even with these increased restrictions, there doesn't seem to be any decrease in the amount of drinking done at dances, although it never was serious enough to constitute anything like an orgy, fortunately, or unfortunately, according to one's point of view."

On Group Behaviour McGill said: "When a large group of students mass for such things as a Pep Rally or a football game there are certain inevitable results. . . . BEDLAM is usually bound to break loose. The Pep Rallies which usually fall on the eve of the Senior football games are very notable for their rowdiness. Last year, before the Toronto game, one of the year's biggest rallies was held. Many street cars were stopped by students breaking the connections with the power lines; the majority of the downtown movie theatres were forcibly entered by groups of students who would give a McGill yell and then leave for the next theatre. This sort of student behaviour does not help to endear the University to the citizens of Montreal. The last Pep Rally of the season was confined to the McGill campus."

Other problems on our subject come up at Queen's: one thing that aids and abets the drinking problem is the ratio. At this university it is roughly five men to every girl. "Like anyone their age, recreation looms large in the minds of Queensmen," says Coleman. "A large number of the most attractive forms of recreation involve a date, and there just aren't enough girls to go round. Some solve this state of affairs by taking out local girls but many of them are tied up with local fellows so that still leaves a large shortage. That leaves shows, athletic events and pubs as the only other recourse, since a town the size of Kingston is strictly limited in its recreational facilities.

"Apart from the problem engendered by the ratio, sex life at Queen's has little that is exceptional apart from the fact that most of the girls at the university live in residence which produces a slightly abnormal atmposphere. Residence rules are a constant irritation to those who take these girls out, and lack of facilities for entertainment in one's own home and lack of any degree of privacy, are a constant headache. Necking which is a popular pastime among people of student age has to be done out in the open or else the participants have to develop a certain degree of resourcefulness. Co-eds who live in Kingston become unduly popular and those who board in a place where they can entertain become worth practically their weight in gold."

Another interesting institution peculiar to Queen's is the annual Sadie Hawkin's Week. For one week during the early part of November, the co-eds take over the social initiative. "There are many pros and cons regarding this institution. At a university like Queen's . . . it not only provides a relief to many male pocket-books but also provides many of the girls with an insight into the men . . . it can also produce bad results with the financial problems which exist for many of the egos and inferiority complexes of many of the men. The traditional climax to this week is the dance on Friday night. In past years this was referred to as the Dogpatch Drag and often approached the proportions of a Bacchinale. In 1946 the Drag reached such proportions that university authorities clamped down on it and since that time it has been a somewhat watered-down affair. One of the chief objections was to the costumes worn, many of which were supposedly quite indecent. For the following two years costumes were banned, but in the last year or so they have been gradually making their reappearance. Drinking which is occasional at most Queen's dances is somewhat more prevalent at this one, and it is not to uncommon to see a couple arrive with a gallon jug of ready-mixed 'Kickapoo Joy Juice.'"

At Queen's, one significant feature which is different from most other Canadian universities is that there is a strict ban on fraternities and sororities, which eliminates a factor which would produce disunity in a college of this size, if it existed. "While fraternities may have their place and be good things at some of the other universities," says Coleman, "the general feeling among the student body at Queen's is an emphatic 'We do not want them here.'"

He Who Pays The Paper...

The author claims this is one of his irregular series entitled The Onion Skin. Longer winded than usual, he is upset about William Glenesk's recent series on the Press, (The Prostitute) and tonight's Hart House Debate topic.

By MAX PARSONS

cently William Glenesk, fast with a phrase, presented in paper a series of three arti- on the modern Press, which onceived in terms of a Pros- e.

night a regular Hart House te will tee off on a resolu- that "The Press is a monu- to human folly".

I ever had a good reason to t off my big mouth, this is t would be unkind, unfair, unwise to try and predict the ome of the debate. But for a numental ass of a subject, Debates Committee has out- e itself. As for Willy Glenesk, fair flowering master of the ng phrase needs some kind of answer, not only because of florid, sensational approach used (an approach he spends siderable time deploring, in- entally), but also because he a comet by the tail and re- d to do anything but trail g in its wake.

he Press, the roaring, rol- ing, crazy patch-quilt mirror modern times, as everyone ows or at least suspects, is a tard. It is supposedly dedi- ed to one goal, the fair, un- ed, objective presensation of h facts of human existence activity as are of interest and portance to the society. It is t to be the bulwark of free- m, because it is traditionally respecter of authority or of em. It is theoretically incor- tible, because its editors and blishers have their bloodshot s fixed on a Messiah usually led Truth. It is the essence entertainment because it tries eaven the mass of tragedy and ror it records in life with the t things humans are always ng, the human interest story, s man bites dog tale.

Newspapers (and magazines) e popularly supposed by the rld's idealists to have as their al Truth, which is more or less ughly equated with "all the ts, presented in such a way as ensure that no value judg- nts are drawn, no presupposed nclusions implied, no bias ad- ted." This ideal is tuned to somewhat limited perspec- s of the modern press, and ticularly the daily newspaper, en expected to come out pris- ine pure and holy. It totally ig- res most of the more important hnical, temporal, psychological d commercial aspects of mod- publishing which are at once bane and the life blood of most any publication you wish name.

In a word, gentlemen, the world it has always been) is on the rink of disaster, and the modern ess, primed by technological ances which would have left Franklin gasping, is giving us ring-side seat. The picture may be pretty, the techniques may ack of anarchy and strife, the notions may be raw, but the ess, as a mirror and a com- dity of considerable commer- l value, is doing a hell of a ne job.

I had the feeling, as I read the ree successive installments of e Prostitute, that I was witnes- ing, on a decidedly lower level, modern William Quixote. This ting at windmills is dangerous siness and inevitably leads to articles like this one.

Yet those who sit down and ac- pt the unrelieved horror ich it is possible to draw from e world are beaten before they ve begun. The world has mov- quickly in the past century: so quickly that one is immediately ccused of being a master of e cliches if he should happen to ing it up. We are in an age (and a country) that has made materialism a god, and in all the many possible ways has reaped the somewhat dubious benefits of that devotion and faith. We all know the stories of the breakdown of the family, and the increase of neurosis, and the deplorable vacuum which is so typical of the modern white-collar man. We have increasingly seen diatribes against the popular arts, and their inevitable corruption; the big-fixes of sport, the massive display of thigh and breast and subtle tummy in the brassiere ads, the clashing cacophonous jangle of modern music. We have watched with dismay the gradual retrenchment of the individual as he handed across more and more of his soul to the large corporation and to that most massive of modern corrupters, the state. We have ridden our way through two huge, inutterably destructive wars in three decades.

And we have been unhappy. We have perverted wisdom and pleasure and a good life until there is a definite release from tension when we finally plunge ourselves into what might almost seen a welcome catharic, the modern, scientific war.

Enamoured of the machine and the amazing creature comforts it can provide we have forgotten about our insides, have left our emotions to the purveyors of cheap tricks in the market place, and are now caught up in a great confused flood of conflicts and contradictions and paradoxes which seem each day to become more complex, more unmanageable, subtle paving blocks on the formerly stony path to Hell.

You see what I mean: given a little imagination, and quite a few trite phrases, (mostly copped from cleverer men I think) you can begin to structure a world from which there is no possible escape, except in death. Even that final release isn't entirely certain.

It is a small wonder that the modern intellectual deplores the Press, while the masses devour it daily. They seek release from things they know not, and surcease from sorrows that touch them in these emotional sores which no amount of machine technique has been able to breed out of us.

"All I know is what I read in the papers," Will Rogers used to say. It is well to recall that Will Rogers was a comic of the first water.

Anyone who approaches the modern Press with a Will Rogers' attitude is really eligible for treatment by the growing body of psychiatrists the medical schools are producing. For the modern Press, without trying to blame anyone in particular for it, is what it tries to be. And that, in the main, is an abstract mirror of its world.

The most obvious examples of the Press which come into discussions in North America today are your local newspapers (The Star, The Telegram and The Globe and Mail, for example), Time, Life, The Reader's Digest, The New York Times, some lurid example of the American tabloid press, and perhaps Vogue, Mademoiselle, Look, Quick, The Christian Science Monitor, along with an assotted selection of comic books, paper-covered "novels" and some of the more famous pulps. It has always fascinated me that few discuss the Tribune (Toronto Daily Worker), Canadian High News, The North Toronto Herald, and the similar rash of small circulation punlications which reach, in cumulative terms, a huge number of persons.

The reasons are of note: like everything else in life we tend to pick the great mass-produced supremely successful mediums rather than those which still exist (and perhaps always will exist) in the marginal areas of profits and successful enterprise.

And discussing the Press, we usually forget the other mass media of which the Press is really only a part: the radio, the film, and that amazing synthesis of audio-visual hypnotism, television. When we do a Glenesk we immediately restrict ourselves to the narrowest limits of our bias and prejudices because we ignore any perspective, and make it impossible to appreciate and improve communications because we are already blinded and seduced by their brilliance and their effect.

Let's stick to the Press, and particularly the larger, metropolitan daily, for this discussion, always remembering that it is but a fragment of the total picture.

The modern Press is the spawn of something that no amount of psychiatry and phychology and clever statistical market research i ever going to work out of us: an ingrained curiosity about other people which the poorest of minds usually possess. The Press, in these days of high-speed reproduction, and far-flung communication systems, has taken on more important functions, but basically its function remains the same: to tell people what other people are doing, thinking, saying, whom they are divorcing, raping, killing and exploiting, and particularly of late, why. The why, as we increasingly realize, depends on something more subtle than curiosity.

News as defined in the above paragraph, is an extremely valuable commodity. It is also very dangerous for the minute that men begin to learn what is going on they are theoritically able to make up their own minds about things, a thought that often horrifies philosophers. A free Press, as understand it, indicates a situation in which you are able to publish anything you wish, without reference to morals or manners. There has never been such a thing as a completely free press, and even where it does exist partially the freest part of it is often the poorest in terms of commercial success.

Newspaper editors learned early that it was the trivia of the world that titillated the masses. And the man who discovered (or perhaps invented) the headline, soon found that its screaming announcements of the great human tragedies was the surest way to keep the profits up.

With the advent of modern machines it became possible to distribute this kind of thing to masses of people, and the huge circulations so typical of the twentieth century were developed.

To rant about this type of development of the Press is to tilt at a windmill. The barons of the rotary machines were (and are) in the business to make money, and they created a press which gave the public what it said it wanted. There may have been (and may be) other motives, but you need to make money to stay in the publishing business. This may all have been a horrid mistake, and it is quite possible that it should never have been allowed to happen, but the whole development of the democratic world would have been a different and perhaps an impossible thing without the Press.

Today the Press works under conditions of tension and speed which are equalled in few other enterprises. Its beat is the world, a world from which editors draw the important and trivial items which go to make up any confused day in the life of a modern man. Editors may or may not be interested in the Truth: that is not their job. Their job is to present selected hunks of life, of the great, the unhappy and the deformed in mind and spirit (what the public will buy) selected because there is far too much to cover, and condensed for easy reading, the kind of thing you can keep your eye on as your fellow slaves jostle you about in a Bay streetcar in the five o'clock rush.

The Press may be very deplorable, it may sometimes give your stomach an odd turn, but it is probably far closer to the "truth" than any of our clever pundits writing in the literary magazines would admit: for the modern Press is in a sense the mirror of the modern man, and that as I have pointed out earlier is something that you can get very morose about in the best of modern times.

Anyone who has managed to struggle this far, and having heard the first and second lessons, may now prepare himself for the sermon. Which I promise will be short.

Those who advocate revival remedies, such as Glenesk suggested in his "Billy Sunday of the Press," or those emotional charlatans who would support the substitution of one vacuum for another — a false understanding of what we have with an attempt to purify the Press and bring it to the living Truth, are a little off the beam.

I think it is probably more honest to recognize the Press for what it is: a reflection of our society and ourselves. It is not an exact reflection, any more than the vision we may see of ourselves in a wind-swept quarry pool.

And what is needed is citizens who will not be drowned in this flood of newsprint and rag paper, of film and sound, of curves and impressions and propaganda. We need rather persons aware of the place that the Press and other media hold in our modern world, persons who will stand up to the challenge and contribute to these media an unrelenting flow of ideas and clear thinking and honest values as they may understand these things.

Given a sense of humor and a feeling of humility the more passive reader may yet find it possible to work out a sensible attitude toward those great forces of mass communication which are one of the wonders of our time. Perhaps we may someday even find it possible to control both the forces and ourselves.

It is always well to remember in moment of panic that maybe the world isn't going to the bowwows. And that even if it is, the Press will be there to report it.

Alec Lawson Wins John Copp Trophy

By HEATHER McPHERSON

The Johnny Copp Memorial Trophy, awarded season by a vote of the members of the Senior Intercol Football Team to the player considered most valuable sportsmanship, character and playing ability, has bee this year by Alex (Lic) Lawson, the Athletic Asso announced yesterday.

Lawson, who handled quarterbacking chores for the Blues almost single-handed this fall, was the number one veteran on the squad. Alex and Johnny Evans were the only two players on the 1948 championship team that defeated the Western Musangs in the playoff game. Performing as an end for the Blues, with pass-catching a specialty, during the 1948 and 1949 seasons, Lawson flunked in the spring of 1950 and was forced to sit out of Intercollegiate competition for the next year.

In his final year at SPS this season, Lawson was converted into a quarterback by Coach Bob Masterson and far exceeded his fondest hopes. Almost flawless play-calling and some excellent ball handling made Lawson one of the chief factors in Varsity's undefeated season this year.

Alex spent his year away from Intercollegiate competition coaching the Junior SPS football team in the Intramural League and as playing coach for the Skule III basketball team during the winter.

One of the few married the Senior Blues, Alex bec father only a day before th exhibition game against the Aggies this fall.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

In spite of the fact that only three of last year's senior team are back, the number of good grapplers trying to make the wrestling team this year has diluted any pessimism that coach Kirk Wipper might have felt before the season started. Most of the good prospects are members of last year's intermediate team, like "Wild Bill" Chykaliuk, Ernie Dryden, Glen McCormick, Larry Skitch, and Walt Pitman, all of whom won Intercollegiate Championships in their respective weight groups. A lot of good prospects showed up in the Junior Interfaculty Championships last week too, like Bob MacKenzie, Phil Henderson, Pete Nichols, and Ted Bowers, who had never wrestled before for the University.

Olympic weight classes and rules have been employed for the Intercollegiate meets this year, and for most of the other meets as well, since this is an Olympic year coming up, and many of the University champs will be trying out for Canada's team.

Prior to the Intercollegiate, the team meets traditional opponents such as OAC, Buffalo, and Rochester. Last year after the college championships Wipper took two of his best men down to Cleveland for National Championships, and will probably do the same this year if he thinks the men look good enough. Hugh Graham (177 pound class) and Bill Dingwall (191 pound class) made the trip last year, and put up good showings although both lost their first bouts.

The lower weights are pretty well stocked with returning team members. Joe Goldenberg in the 123 pound class was senior last year, as well as Ontario novice champion. Walt Pitman, who was the Intermed champ in the 137 pound class last year, is the likeliest choice for the new 130 pound class. With Hom Hatashita in the 137 class, there is ample reason for a prospective limb-twister in this weight moving down. Hatashita won all his bouts last year except the Senior Intercollegiate, which he lost by one point. Wipper is every keen on all three of these men.

Al Hebert, the senior man in the 147 class last year, has graduated, as has the intermediate entry. However, Paul Phelan, who was injured last year, and Stan Kopera, last year's Intermediate manager, are just as good prospects right now as the men who they replace. Bill Bush, in the 157 last year, is ineligible this year for academic reasons, but Orie Loucks, on last year's Intermediates, Pete Nichols, Junior Interfac champ this year, Dan Cucin, and many others, are vying for positions on the teams in this group.

A somewhat similar situation exists in the 167 pound class, in which Intercollegiate champ Pete Hopkins has decided to try for good marks in his Meds course this year. Bob MacKenzie, also in Meds, just started wrestling this year, but has the distinction of having pinned the Junior Interfac winner this year, Irv Salsberg.

Bill Chykaliuk will be hard to beat in the 177, but it is a very strong class, in which Phil Henderson and Ted Bowers, the Interfac finalists, are contenders. Doug Hamilton and Larry Skitch enter the space left in the 191 class left by Bill Dingwall, undefeated last year. Leon Smith, the high jumper, is another fine wrestler, but he has not been out as yet.

Rev. Harry Robinson, 6'4", 215 pound senior intercollegiate heavyweight entry last year, is back for another try. Ernie Dryden, the Intermed champ, will fight the Wycliffe strong boy for this position.

After practice bouts with North York AC Thursday night, the team will have a lay-off till Jan. 12, when they meet Ithica in the Athletic Night here.

B-Ball Blues Go To Buffalo Wilson Back

Both the Senior and the Intermediate basketball teams go down to Buffalo tonight to play the Buffalo University Bulls in the team's first double bill on the road this year. The Intermediates will play the Buffalo Junior Varsity in the preliminary, and the Blues take on the Bulls' first team.

Good news comes from the Blue camp, in the form of Bill Wilson's return to a Varsity basketball uniform. Bill had planned to take the year off the sport in order to catch up on his course, but most people considered it a matter of time till Willie gave in and came out for practice. He has been working with the second line so far, since Bob Masterson has shown no inclination to break up a winning combination by changing his first line. Wilson was one of the Blues' top scorers last year, behind Natanson, Gray and Brennan. He handles and dribbles the ball well, will play one of the "out" positions on the offensive, and will likely play forward on jump-offs.

Buffalo is reputed to be a powerhouse this year. They beat McMaster by the fantastic score of 106-40, and have slaughtered several other colleges. They beat Varsity 74-60 in one of the Toronto team's better games at Mutual Street Arena last year. Chalmers, their top performer last year, is gone, but little Jim Rooney, who scored 16 against Varsity last year, and averaged about the same figure over the season, Hal Kuhn, who potted 14 against Toronto, is also back.

PHE Sophs Win Basketball Final

The women's basketball season was brought to a climax in the final game, last night in Hart House, with P.H.E. Sophs defeating the Freshie team 26-21. Both teams were in top shape, and the outcome was doubtful right until the end, with the firs year playing an excellent game against their more experienced opponents.

At the end of the first quarter, the Freshies were ahead by one point, but the Sophs took over after that, and were leading 12-8, at half time. The third quarter showed both teams at their best, in fast-moving play, with the second years retaining their lead. The last quarter was a repetition of the previous action, bringing the final score to 26-21 in favour of the Sophs.

Alma Hatch got away after a close-checked first quarter to amass a total of 18 points, for the victors, with good support by Anita Hicks and Donna Howson. Beryl Lewis scored eight points for the Freshies in a good steady game, and Mary Binnie led the very effective first year guards.

UC Senior-Juniors came out 21-19 victors over School of Nursing in the Consolation Basketball finals. The scoring was pretty even all the way; Donna Parr and Jane Neyhard, but UC managed to ahead by a small margin.

After a 6-5 score in favour at half-time, the third quar more productive, marked by effective long shots by both bringing the score to 15-11 still ahead.

Following a tense final the total came out to 21-19 UC girls. They had pret control of the play thro supported by the capable sh of Joan Mooney who was re ble for 16 points, and a g fensive pair, Nancy Porte Mary Lewis. The Nurses hard and held their own i way; Donna Padr and Jane croft each scored eight po the losers.

They've finally played string, the chips are dow Meds and UC square off today with the Interfacult crosse Championship on th After dropping a squeaker week, Meds came back with geance Monday to tie the three series and force this death game for the crown.

Monday's lop-sided win will that the doctors will rule vorites to cop the champ but UC can't be counted the strength of that loss Dutch Young going strong ways, the Redmen are to b oned with providing Young racked up by the injury kept him out of half of M contest. UC supporters can a useful contribution from too.

As for Meds, they will be on the sensational Jack Gro has scored twelve goals in games to date as well as lead team to bottle up the UC Colin Kilty and Bob McMill bear watching. Meds have efficient workman in goal person of Reg Perkins and need to be pretty sharp goals they score. But it's s body's series and the only thing is that there will be plenty in the big gym House at one today.

Now that the Varsity female cagers have folded away their basketball "dickeys" for another year, the hockey enthusiasts are venturing forth in to the chill, grey dawn to limber up their skating legs at Varsity Arena. This year's schedule promises some rugged competition with Trinity, Vic, UC, Meds, PHysed, POT and St. Mike's each pledging two teams apiece. And it's anybody's guess who will finally come out on top of this three-group league. Games get underway right after Christmas — the opener slated for Jan. 7th.

For the "really keen", an all Varsity squad will be picked in February by the referees. This team will meet the Varsity grads, OCE and some wiry high school groups. Curator Joan Mathews has high hopes for a game with McGill, but this is not definite. Queens withdrew their team last year so if there is going to be any intercollegiate competition this year, McGill looks like the only contester.

Which all adds up to a pretty interesting season. C'mon gals sharpen up those skates. So you have given up trying to be a Barbara Ann. Want to try for a Max Bently?

alcony viewpoint

By DAVID PEDDIE

A brief mention of "amateurism" last Monday leads me very rally, I think, to a discussion of student drama — its growth and ity. To start out with, all student acting is amateur, for it is ily acting for the joy of acting. Only occasionally is a student t on going into the business. Those who are really intent on it in a way, professional, but they themselves are for the most their own severest critics and never make the pretense that are great artists.

Thus, in levelling a charge at "amateurism", we must for the part concentrate on those people who make pretenses and there usually a good number of them around the University. Their rest is a little bit specialized and therefore they conclude that r field of interest is the only field of interest. They usually act as ey were some cultural elite and everyone else — including the bers of the audience who have a genuine understanding of the is — are nothing but a bunch of "Yahoos".

When these people produce a play they are generally intent on wing off their newly-acquired but inadequate knowledge — which udes putting on phony voices that sound no more convincing than garette ad — rather than giving a serious rendering of the author's . Serious rendering can apply to farce too — make no mistake. in such a case the audience does not want to be impressed. This tricality — either it has been a Hart House show where the he play and is not noticeable except perhaps to another actor or ctor.

That is occasionally the case. It is not, however, the "be-all and -all" of the amateur. Often good plays that are openly amateur— as some of the one-act plays that do not have many technical ntages — can give a real pleasure to the audience because the is usually aiming in the right direction at least, and their honest rts give some hint of the true worth of the play.

There have been a few campus shows that have smacked of this trically — either it has been a Hart House show where the ctor has done his professional job of staging but the cast only n pseudo-professional performances, or a college show that has n amateur all round.

When people start saying that we need a course in Dramatics e, it is usually the above-mentioned "artists" who are finding study difficult with their other committments. There is only one way to rn acting and that is by practice. If the University ever does nk seriously of teaching Dramatics, let them please stick to the rks of reputable authors, the history and cultural background of ir times and a study of their ideas of art and theatre. Let such a rse distinguish clearly between entertainment and drama. And ve all, acting must be treated as the way in which people express ss — not as the way in which "actors" impress Yahoos.

obert Frost Lecture auded By Princeton

Princeton, Exchange — A ath of New England winter, a npse of glistening snow and wit of one of America's fore- t poets invaded McCosh last t as Pulitzer-prize winner, ert Frost delivered a wildly- lauded reading and rambling mmentary on some of his most ous poems.

Frost maintained that God gives n two beliefs and one unbelief. e two beliefs are religion and ence which are lost in antiq- ; while the unbelief is philoso- , which started "when a man nted to throw everything away, then see what's left."

Man can't make the world good enough for salvation, he commented; "he must find another world in order to achieve it." This is the point where man runs up against a blank wall because "there's more that we don't know than we ever can know."

Disclaiming any connection with philosophy, Frost claimed that poetry can be seen in "flashes of insight" into human nature and "common little bits of wisdom that he picks up here and there."

Such expressions as "You bet your bottom dollar," "You bet your sweet life" and "What's the big idea" are examples of these scores of thought and poetry.

Meet The University?

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Empty Chairs

The term "freshman orientation" has a pretentious, even formidable sound. It seems to suggest that students coming from high school to university need as much acclimatization as a Hottentot moving from darkest Africa to the east end of London. Possibly this is too extreme a view.

The necessity of introducing freshmen to the university, not just to the college or faculty to which they will belong, has become increasingly obvious during recent years. Too often students are indoctrinated into a course and faculty without ever looking at the great beyond — the university as a whole. And no matter what course a student may be in, there is always a great beyond.

This tendency to ignore the woods and study the trees has serious implications — both for the students and the university. For the university means far more than any specific course and its success as an institution depends upon student recognition of this fact. And as far as students are concerned, they will miss the whole point of the university if they accept it merely as a grey road to a career, rather than as a technicolour production to be accepted on its own merits.

Thence, freshman orientation. Thence, the desire to show the university in all its myriad aspects to freshmen before they have a chance to lose themselves in their course and college. Thence, the belief that students should be told something of the purpose of a university, meet faculty members who might otherwise remain unknown to them, be told about some of the extra-curricular activities, and be introduced to students from every faculty.

At the University of McGill, the whole idea behind freshman orientation was considered so important that the first year entered university a week before term began — with the sole purpose of seeing and talking about the university which they were going to attend.

Thus far, the University of Toronto has done little more than exhibit schizophrenic tendencies of character. Last spring's plans for an all-university freshman orientation program were met only with a wide measure of disagreement. In short, they were not adopted.

The whole comprehensive scheme petered out into four tea dances to be held in the four arts colleges. Of course, freshman orientation has to begin somewhere, but it is questionable whether it began at all this year. Or if it ever could begin with tea dances.

The freshman orientation species of tea dances were supposed to be rather intellectual affairs with "lots of chairs and little dancing". In practice, they seem to have been like any other tea dance — lots of dancing and empty chairs.

The whole meaning of freshman orientation seems to have gone its own sweet way to oblivion. However, the route which it took is entertaining. The "tea dance plan," sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council, has been under the surveillance of the Co-ordinating Committee. Now, this committee was set up at the end of last year with the intention of cutting down on extra-curricular activities, by co-ordinating them. At this point it is in the rather ludicrous position of having added four more tea dances to the list of activities which, last year, were considered too extensive. They have added grist to their own mill and called it orientation.

The Students' Administrative Council this year has sponsored an orientation plan which is little less than meaningless. In endorsing the plan, however they indicated their approval of the idea. Surely, it is not too much to expect the SAC to find some way to implement the idea, for next year, at least.

OUR READERS WRITE

Trinity Rushes In

Editor, The Varsity:

Yesterday you printed a fatuous reply to Mr. Alley's excellent letter, penned by one of our earnest young campus Christians. Our man of God allowed his righteous indignation to overcloud his intellect and the result was an appallingly un-Christian outburst of name calling and fantastic jumping to conclusions. Our young Christian first acknowledged his lack of humor by taking seriously the analogy between sugar and alcohol. He then implied that Mr. Alley was attacking his breed personally, "The easy assumption is made that all Christians are hypocrites and all temperance supporters are self-righteous cranks, and then the unequal battle is on." Now I admit that Mr. Lougheed is probably a good example of a self righteous crank, but Mr. Alley said nothing of the kind. He merely stated that beer in itself is no evil, that it should be treated and classed with other luxuries, and that brewing companies should not be especially singled out for fund giving, because their contribution to society is somehow different from other luxury producing industries.

Mr. Lougheed uses up a valuable paragraph of The Varsity's space in vitriolic name calling of the worst kind, "sauve sophisticate bursting for self-expression, another eager young soul thirsting for acclaim," etc. Dear me, disciple of Christ, is this exactly the Christian attitude? You accuse Mr. Alley of saying nothing and then proceed to do the same yourself. I earnestly recommend that you atone for this outburst this coming week by practising just a shade more Christian meekness and life "turn the other cheek" routine.

W. W. Fraser,
IV Pol. Sci.

Editor, The Varsity:

Really, Mr. Lougheed.

John F. Boukden,
IV Trinity.

Editor, The Varsity:

I sincerely hope that Mr. Lougheed is not in the pay of some brewing company and that his letter was not an attempt to induce me to order an extra case this week nor to draw a flood of letters giving free publicity to the drinking cause. I am nevertheless outraged by the name calling and false logic of Mr. Lougheed's letter and feel obliged to add to your correspondence.

My first objection is to his use of statistics to draw conclusions. 75% of the people involved in accidents drink, but 80% smoke and 50% chew gum. The figures are interesting and equally useful. Secondly he tries to provide a link between militant absention and Christianity. Some abstainers may be christians but all christians are not abstainers — the first christians not only drank but also made wine. To link themselves with Christianity is a worse falsehood than Mr. Alley's attempt to make out that all members of the United and Presbyterian churches are dry. Mr. Alley's mistake is more excusable for he would have to look hard to find a United Church member who dare admit taking a drink.

The attempt to whitewash his (Lougheed's) fiendish cause continued in his wild use of words. The first that comes to mind are temperance and moderation — both of these imply a middle of the road opinion, not absolutism. The total abolitionist is as intemperate as the drunkard, both are to be pitied for their lack of social responsibility. The province should found homes for the cure of both.

The next wild use of words is in the phrase "joyless, puritannical, ascetic, moderationist." A moderationist cannot take any such extreme position. I feel that Lougheed's letter has proved nothing except that I cannot use against him his own words, "That's OK son, you'll grow up some day," because he doesn't stand a chance.

Ornithologist On Birds

I am by nature reserved, and seldom could I justly be accused of false enthusiasm. In fact, I am often classed among the cynics who find nothing amusing or even interesting. However an occurrance of last Sunday had such an affect on me that it exploded the lid from all my moral inhibitions and has driven me to bare my most secret feelings.

First I must confess that, in spite of my apparent sobriety, I do have a secret interest which has captured my whole being in what has now become irrepressible enthusiasm. I refer to the study of Ornithology, vulgarly referred to as bird-watching.

Nothing in my life takes precedence over this interest which some call a hobby, but which is really an obsession with me. Even education, which my fellows attach such importance to, suffering in a secondary position to my beloved bird-watching. A glance at the files in the Registrar's office will provide the proof of this statement.

It was last Thursday when I first heard that a group of Ornithologists from St. Trinian's College ware planning a gang bird-watching expedition for the week-end. Although I usually practise my observations alone, the natural attraction to people whose interests are coincident with my own convinced me that I should join their group.

Shortly before dawn on Sunday I arrived at the rendezvous. I supposed I should have realized that St. Trinian's was a ladies' college, but my excitement at the prospect of a whole day engaged in "gang-watching" had, I must admit, left me completely without reason. Trere was some embarrassment on both sides when I arrived, but as soon as I spoke the girls realized that I was one of them.

My very appearance must have persuaded them that I was a genuine, because I had taken great pains to dress in full Ornithological regalia. I was wearing my mauve beret at a jaunty angle, my pale green Eisenhower jacket, which opened at the throat revealing a new scarf engagingly bedecked with printed chick-a-dees, and my risque strides with flap pockets and triple out-seams. This practical outfit was supplemented by my instruments of observation slung at the ready over my shoulders. Long-range artillery binoculars hung from my left arm, a brownie was strapped to my waist, and a small over-night bag, held in my right hand, contained a sandwich and thermos of fruit punch.

The first part of our day was spent in research at 'Christie pits', sometimes called Willowvale park, and often referred to in other terms by the parents of the district. After an unsuccessful search for a Red-breasted Tail-snapper which had been reported in the area, we went to High Park where we spent the afternoon.

I find words so inexpressible when I attempt to tell of that glorious day. We almost drank of the woods catching those pert little Nuthatches in off-guard moments with their mates, glimpsing everything from sparrows to Professor Saunders. When we finally dropped exhausted in a small glade I made good use of my experience in the Boy Rangers (as well as making a grand impression on the girls) by building a small camp-fire.

I munched my lettuce sandwich with gay abandon while listening to the girls relate their experiences. Finally we decided it was time to be getting home, since it was almost 3.30. But before we left I persuaded my newly-made friends to join me in a sing-song. Appropriately we sangs eighty-seven verses of "Robin Red-breast" and then finished off that super outing with a rousing chorus of "Yo ho and away we go."

A Merry Christmas

. . . . . Who Lived In a Shoe

The Spirit Of Christmas

Midwinter Night's Dream

By MAIRGHREAD

Last night as the silent snow drifted about the campus, students sat before the great yule log in Hart House, and their carols wafted out the vaulted windows to mingle with the quiet tones' of the winds. While the buildings slumbered, the trees beside the library nodded to each other, and the oaks by Trinity stretched themselves. Even the dragon on the University College newel post stirred and smiled, for the voices of the carollers had told him that Christmas was nigh.

As far as most of the students were concerned the evening passed without catastrophe. But one was averted only by the slightest of chances.

Things happened like this. Early in the evening the imps and elves, the fairies and leprechauns, the sprites and even the gremlins were all out sitting on the window ledges listening to the music as they brewed plans for the holiday.

And in University College the dragon sat alone. When he first came to this country he found Canadian customs very strange. He really is an extremely shy, timid creature, but as he looks so formidable the wee folk had not been too friendly. And the fact that he couldn't dance well enough to join the faerie ring by the side of philosopher's walk, or tread lightly enough not to leave foot prints as he travelled at night (his tail always dragged on the ground) did not help him any.

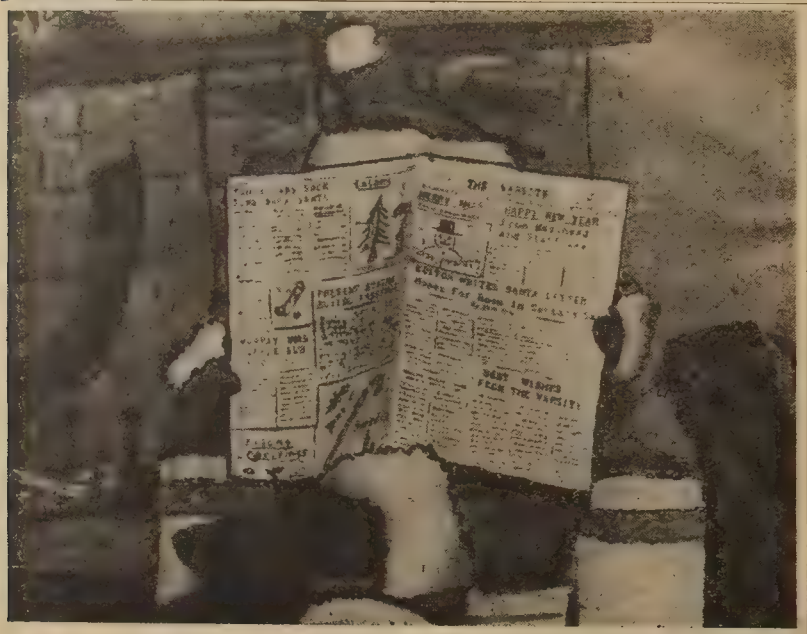
So he sat alone on the newel post and pondered the problem. Perhaps, he thought, if he practiced, he could become just like the ferocious dragons of story books, or like the one that the professor said Beowulf slew the other day; and then he would be able to protect the wee folk, causing them to regard him as their own great warrior and hero. Yes, that was exactly what he would do.

As he wandered about the campus he growled at all the statues, even though they never batted an eye, and snarled at the little gray library kitten who just laughed and chased him up a tree. Nevertheless he didn't give up, for he had a premonition that the time would come when he would be needed. And it was.

For in Knox college there lives a sprite named Johnny. Now as you know, sprites are by nature mischievous, but Johnny, who takes his name from both Calvin and Knox, has raised more commotion than any other protestor thought of doing. It was he who placed a copy of Freud right next to "A Handy Guide for Snakes" in the book-store. It was he who, with Jack Frost, painted the colleges on Hallowe'en; and it was he who broke the windows in the Zeta Psi house last week.

And now Johnny was up to his tricks again. Bribing the mouse in the Hart House pantry, he had obtained a large jar of molasses which he proceeded to pour down all the chimneys in Hart House. This might sound like a fairly harmless joke, until you remember that Santa Claus is making his annual inspection trip just now . . . and as Johnny hoped, it was more than likely that Santa would get stuck in one of the chimneys.

Like all dragons, the University College one was hungry last night, and just at the time when Johnny and the Hart House pantry mouse were cooking up their fiendish plot, he was raiding the ice-box. The dragon heard the plot and he knew that he could not allow Santa to be stuck in the chimney. But what would he do? The wee folk wouldn't listen to him; and certainly Johnny and the mouse wouldn't. Whatever he did would have to be on his own.



So he climbed to the Hart House roof and peered down the chimney. At first he could see nothing, so he leaned far over to get a better view. And slid with a kerplunk, bang, crash, right down into the music room. Bruised and unhappy he skithered to his feet, only to discover that as he slid, his big heavy scales had brought all the molasses down with him. He was a chimney sweep! so racing to the roof once more he slid down all the chimneys, until every one of those in Hart House was clean once more. Santa could now come with no difficulty.

And Santa did come while the battered dragon was dragging himself back to the newell post in University College. However the dragon was not battered for long because he had created such a rumpus while sliding down the chimneys, that all the wee folk had come out to see what was going on.

When they saw what a noble job the dragon had done, they rushed out to him, cleaning up that which he trailed (for he was a sorry, sticky mess). Then they danced around him in a magic ring, giving him the hero's acclaim.

As the dragon curled asleep on the newell post that night he smiled for now he had friends with whom to have a merry Christmas; and too he had saved Santa from the pranks of Johnny.

And the buildings slumbered; the trees beside the library nodded to each other; and the oaks by Trinity stretched themselves.

'Twas A Night

By RICH ANCO

'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse
The guests had departed, the room now seemed bare
Except for the empties and butts left with care.

* * * * *

I sat and I looked at the bottles all dry,
And thought of the guests who would, with a sigh
Awake in the morning with god-awful heads
Yet I wanted a nightcap, before off to bed.

* * * * *

When up from the lawn there came such a yell
I sprang to my feet to see what the ———.
Away to the window I tore like a flash
Fell over the table, broke a chair with a crash.

* * * * *

On new-fallen snow, just what did I see
But eight sturdy reindeer, a sleigh, and — Oh me!
A little old driver who looked like St. Nick,
And I saw in a glance, he was tight as a tick.

* * * * *

The reindeers all eight, were hitched to the sleigh
As Santa leaned forward, with spirit quite gay,
He'd met with some friends on his trip, it would seem,
And he hiccoughed and burped as he called to his team.

* * * * *

"On Schenley! On Seagram! We ain't got all night,
You too, Haig and Haig, and you Black and White,
On Bradings! On Molsons! Get off of this wall,
Get up on the roof, we've got a long haul."

* * * * *

So reindeer and sleigh rose up to the top
And Santa dismounted in one great big hop,
With sharp ear attuned, I heard from above,
A heck of a noise, but it wasn't a dove.

* * * * *

Down the chimney he came, he squirmed as he fell
Right flat on his pants, he lit with a yell,
He rose, and he blinked, and voiced a loud "Brrr . . ."
He was dressed all in red, with trim of white fur.

* * * * *

He was chubby and plump, and he tried to stand right,
But he didn't fool me — he was high as a kite,
His bright red nose made him look a bit wacky
And the beard on his chin was stained with tobbacy.

* * * * *

He had pints and quarts in the sack on his back
And mumbled and stumbled as he went to unpack:
"If I'd only not stayed with those darned engineers,
I wouldn't be stuck now, with this bag full of beers."

* * * * *

Though plastered he was, he went straight to his work
He missed half the stockings, but only would smirk
And when he was finished, he turned on his toes
In the wink of an eyelash, up the chimney he rose.

* * * * *

He leaped for the sleigh and fell flat on his face
But finally did manage to fall into place,
And with a jolly good laugh, and a loud-sounding "hic",
The reindeers took off with stout old St. Nick.

But I heard him call back, ere he passed out of sight:
"MERRY CHRISTMAS!! You Skulemen — now really get tight"

University Christmas

omeless Studes' hristmas Dinner Pickwick Style

"This," said Mr. Pickwick, looking around him, "this is indeed, comfort."

hristmas at Dingley Dell will have nothing on the Hart House tmas Dinner if an 18-foot Scotch pine and Yule grapefruit are indication. The latter (grapefruit topped with lighted candles) mber one on the menu for the dinner which will be held in the t Hall at 7.00 p.m. on Thursday, December 20.

The dinner, which has been held annually since 1923, is given ll men in the university who live too far away to go home for tmas. In earlier years there were only 30 or 40 guests, but this over 300 invitations have been sent out to people from 25 different tries, and the Warden hopes that as many as possible will attend. lthough nearly one half of the total number are from Saskatche- British Columbia, the Maritimes and the United States, there e men from as far away as India, Southern Rhodesia, Peru and y parts of Europe.

There will be no after dinner speeches. Louise Roy, a member of Conservatory Opera School, will sing several French and Italian s. Also during the evening the names of all the countries rep- ted by the guests will be called and each student will stand up be applauded.

A report of the details of the dinner has been broadcast on an national network over CBC. After the dinner the Hart House teur Radio Club station VE3BPD, will set up apparatus so that ts may send messages to their families all over the world. This be the third year that the club has done this; one year they were to reach Norway. If the messages can't be sent direct they are ed by intermediate stations.

Warden Ignatieff feels that preparations for Christmas on the pus start too early and that one has to force the pace to get a Christmas spirit while it is still too distant. He also thinks that tmas has become too commercialized and that it is up to events as the dinner and particularly the Blue and White Christmas to overcome this fault.

He said that it must not be just another party, but that the atmos- e of the event is terribly important. He feels that the ideal cele- on of Christmas lies in the blending of the Christian idea of good lo all men with that more prevalent in European countries of the e of renewal and the birth of a new year.

lee Club Carollers ing Over Network

e Christmas broadcast of the House Glee Club has become nual event—a tribute to the ation of the best-known chor- up on the campus. Listeners parts of Canada will be able ar the broadcast on their local -Canada Network station, at 12:40, EST. In Toronto the program will be carried by station CBL.

The Hart House Glee Club is, of course, an all-male organization. Its approximately 50 members are conducted by Ward McAdam, Mus. Bac., who has been musical director of the club for two years. The members of the club come from all faculties and schools, and also include a considerable number of graduates.

The Hart House Glee Club specializes in less well-known carols. This year's program will include both ancient and modern carols, but most of them are ones you are not likely to hear often anywhere else.

The program begins with "O Come, O Come Emmanuel", an ancient Latin advent hymn. This will be followed with "Quem Pastores", an old German carol, written in Latin. "Tyrley, Tyrlow", a modern setting of old words by Peter Warlock, and the better-known "Lo How a Rose E'er Blooming" by Michael Praetorius will follow, and the program concludes with "Patapan", a Burgundian carol.

Although the accompanying script almost always speaks of the performance taking place in the Great Hall, "with its great oak beams, and with a roaring log fire", the recording for this transcribed broadcast is made in the music room, which is more suitable for the purpose.

The conditions are not quite as romantic as those described by the announcer—the object is to keep the temperature down, not to push it up with a log fire. But the members of the Glee Club and their conductor have worked on the proper atmosphere for carol singing for some weeks past, and it is doubtful whether the listener can detect the difference between the spirit and the fact at his radio.

KFH To Air AC Show uesday Nite

e SAC Radio Committee is unting among its special ac- es a radio program based on Christmas theme under the ion of "X the Unknown". This ram will be heard on CKFH Tuesday, December 18 at 9:05 This will be the first time in e years that a dramatic pro- n presented by this university been broadcast over AM fre- cy.

its program has been arranged produced by Rocky Martino, n Studies, who also is respon- for writing the script. Mar- described the production as nded to show the rampant mercialism that has perverted rue idea of Christmas, by con- ding how Christmas is celebrat- oday, in the "atomic era" with nanner in which it was cele- ed 150 years ago. The story of "Silent Night" was written is narrated in the show.

ne half hour long production feature an original music score en by Dr. Joseph Roff whose s have been performed over CBC and by the Toronto Sym- ny Orchestra. A special ar- ement of "Silent Night" by Dr. o will be sung by the All-Varsity ed Chorus under the direction Keith Gerrard. The lead in this hour show will be played by y Sue McGee, II St. Mike's. McCarthy III St. Mike's, is associate Director of this production, besides acting in a supporting role.

Several other productions of the Radio Committee are scheduled for the second term, and CKEY will start broadcasting the Round Table Discussions in the second week of January.

It's the season, of course, that makes things like this happen. And because it is the Hart House entrance, our Spirit of the Christmas Present is this young lady, all ready to help you get into the spirit of things. At the risk of breaking your illusions though, this particular Spirit visited Hart House only for the photographer's sake. But perhaps if some organized support is put into getting some more Spirit back in Christmas, she might even be the Spirit of Christmas Yet-To-Be. Her name is Elizabeth Baysley, I Vic.

Varsity Christmas Celebrations Brewed Among Many Faculties

The annual series of Christmas parties and dances has at last broken upon the University of Toronto campus. This time of year nearly every organization on the campus arranges some kind of Christmas get-together for its members.

One of these is the Christmas dinner and party the campus Coop provides for its members every year. It will be held tomorrow evening, and will be combined with a dance at the Coop in the evening. Said Chummy Reading IV UC, in commenting on the party, "This is the one time in the year that the staff at the Coop really show their good will toward the students."

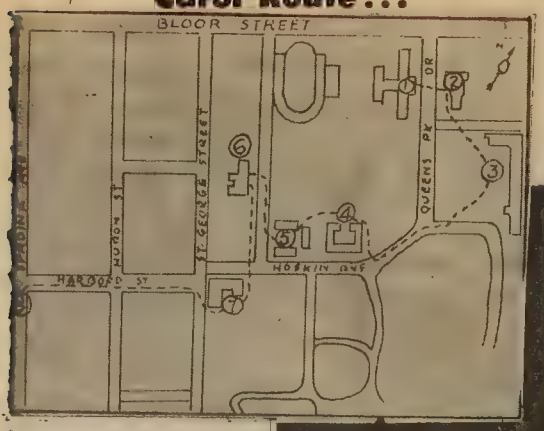
Tonight the University of Toronto men's Residences will hold their annual Christmas dance in Hart House. "To make it a real Christmas party the students always adjourn from the dance to their rooms in the residence, or to nearby restaurants, and carry on festivities late into the night" agreed several students who had survived last year's party.

On Thursday, 20th, of December the girls in Whitney Hall will hold their annual Dean's Christmas Party in the Women's Union. A dinner will be served to the residence girls, in their respective houses, with all the girls in University College invited to the official party in the Union later.

At the annual Christmas party of the Social Work Student Association held last Saturday night at the Forest Hill Golf and Country Club, 104 students, faculty, and supervisors, got together. The highlight of the evening was the presentation of music from the opera "Oklahoma" by the students' Choral Group.

Trinity College is having a carol service Sunday in the chapel and a party for the children of the staff and students next Wednesday afternoon in the Buttery. There will also be a party for the domestic staff at the Buttery Wednesday night.

St. Mike's are having a Christmas dance tonight at 8:30 in Brennan Hall, with Paul Moonan's orchestra. Sunday night at 9.00 there will be a Christmas program with the St. Mike's Glee Club. A Christmas tree will liven things up in their dining hall and will stay there till after Christmas.



A crib will be erected in front of St. Michael's College as part of the program to put Christ back into Christmas. The crib will have spotlights focused on it and will be there until after the Christmas season.

Victoria College will be having a carol service at one o'clock in the chapel on Friday. A special attraction will be a talk given by Rabbi Abraham Feinberg on "Jesus—A Modern Jewish Point of View." This talk will be given next Sunday, 7:00 p.m. at Alumni Hall in Vic. A reception will be held after the talk.

At University College the various clubs, the French Club, the German Club, and so on will be ing parties. So across the campus, all the varied tastes are being catered to as the Christmas season rolls around.

Swim, Tumbling Gifts and Dinner

Twenty years ago, the University Settlement had just moved from Adelaide Street to its present home at 23 Grange Road. At this time, Dr. Wasteneys, a prominent member of the Hart House Board of Stewards and the Board of Governors of the Settlement made a suggestion that a supper be held to provide a bit of Christmas cheer for all the male members of the Settlement. This was accompanied by some form of entertainment; the traditional sing-song, which included many carols, and a magician.

This first affair was so successful that the Board decided to make it an annual institution, to be financed and arranged by them in co-operation with the Settlement staff. But over the years there have been some changes from the original form of this event. Now, with such a large membership, it is only for the younger boys 8-12 years, numbering about one hundred; all are regular members at the Settlement. The Hart House Supper Party is the event of the year for these kids; they talk about it for months before and after.

On Wednesday, Dec. 19th, the boys will all meet after school at the Settlement House, slicked-up for the occasion. They will go en masse by special bus to Hart House. They have the use of the pool, if they want to swim; or the gym for baseball and other games, and to watch a display of acrobatics and tumbling. The Camera Club quarters and the Rifle Range are also at their disposal for about two hours. After supper in the Great Hall, they will troop into the Debates Room for the entertainment, which is planned this year to consist of movies, a sing-song, a magician. Lastly, as the boys pass through the door, each one receives a little gift, usually some candy for a treat.

The girls from the Settlement are not going to be neglected this Christmas. They can't enter Hart House, but they are having their party at the Women's Union the same day as the boys' party, with similar entertainment. Further, the UC Men's residences have got ten together to give 60 new Canadian children from the Settlement not only a supper, on Thursday, Dec. 13, at the residences, but also movies, and a Christmas tree and even Santa Claus, in person.

The Bells Ring Out

The bells of Hart House rang out across the campus last night calling the students to come to the Great Hall where they could sing Christmas carols and sit on blankets before a Yule fire. People for blocks around Hart House stopped to listen to the tunes the bells played for the snow-covered campus. The only ones who perhaps were not pleased to hear the bells were several pigeons living in the tower.

Campus Christians Start Plan To Keep Christ In Christmas

Christmas is a many-sided celebration. Some celebrate it in terms of Santa Claus, Jingle Bells or Rudolph. Some consider it the celebration of goodwill and family life. Some celebrate Christmas as the birthtime of Christ.

A group on the campus holds the latter conviction, and has done something about it.

During the Christmas season, there will be nativity scenes at Trinity and St. Mike's. These are intended to remind the public that Christmas is fundamentally a religious celebration, said Carolyn Graton, IV St. Joseph's.

On the evening of Saturday, December 15 there will be a group of student carollers roaming the campus.

Disc jockeys will insert spot commercials emphasizing the idea of Christ in Christmas. Printers have prepared free one thousand posters bearing the legend, "Bring Back Christ to Christmas," and five thousand hand bills to be distributed.

The presidents of the four Art Colleges have been contacted, and have given their approval.

The "Bring Back Christ to Christmas" movement recommends the sending of Christmas cards that reflect the religious spirit of Christmas; putting nativity cribs in homes; telling the children the Christmas story.

The movement was begun on this campus when a group of women from Mount St. Vincent's College came to Toronto to attend the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students in mid-November. Although it began in the Catholic branch of the university, the movement is nondenominational within the Christian faith.

SCIENCE NOTES

Ghosts

By JEM ANDERSON

The salami on rye had been rather potent. In spite of it, sleep finally drifted in. Just in the midst of a very pleasant dream in which I had found a pretty cheerleader in my Christmas stocking, I awakened to see a figure standing at the foot of my bed. Peering through the gloom, I discovered that this apparition was the editor-in-chief of The Varsity, (sensation) Pointing a trembling finger of accusation at me, she hoarsely whispered, "Worm!"

Pulling the covers tightly about my chin, I hesitantly asked her the cause of such a scornful epithet. In answer, she derided me for not having written a seasonal science column for the Christmas issue.

"But there isn't any tinsel in scientific circles. . . ."

"Nonsense," she answered.

"I could put in a terrific article on how microscopic fossil foraminifera are used in oil field correlation," I suggested brightly.

Not even deigning to answer, she uttered the following threat: "On the next three nights exactly at the stroke of midnight, you will be visited by three apparitions in succession, the ghosts of Science Notes Past, Future, and Present. Synchronize your watches."

With these words she closed her eyes tighter than she usually does when furious, and disappeared.

It seemed an interval of but a moment before I heard the cuckoo clock on the mantle downstairs regurgitate twelve times. The door opened and a ghastly figure glided into my lowly bedroom.

Instead of clothing, this monster's body was covered by a heavy growth of lichens except in the region of its prominent umbilicus. Its eyes glowed like a firefly's rear view mirror, and from its mouth drooped a big fat cigar. It was making hypnotic motions with its hands and at the same time groaning, "Unclean. Unclean." Dragging behind him on a long chain fastened to his waist was a strange assortment of objects including an Easter Island image, a tree from the Forestry reserve, a whale, a very dead chunk of venison, and a pterosaur.

Sickly I sought the significance of this sordid sight.

"I," he chanted, "am the ghost of Science Notes Past — the has-been ghost. Thanks to you, O guts and ganglia, I am doomed to travel eternity burdened with this impossible collection of subjects from your deservedly unread columns."

"There is a good variety, isn't there?" I queried rather ineffectually.

Saying nothing but looking much, he backed out of my presence swatting at a persistent queen bee.

On the next night I was visited by a second spectre of blank untainted countenance who introduced himself as the ghost of Science Notes Yet To Come.

"And with what," he asked bitterly, "am I to be inflicted?"

I answered that we were planning to start the new year with a series on the scientific background of an appreciation of the arts. He looked doubtful.

"No leprosy?"

"No leprosy."

"No brewer's yeast?"

"No brewer's yeast."

He seemed considerably relieved and turned to leave the room.

"Oh by the way," he said pausing at the door, "Merry Christmas."

On the third night I was visited by the ghost of Science Notes Present. And this was it.

Messiah In Toronto

Every year at Christmas time, in every part of the English-speaking world, Handel's monumental oratorio, "The Messiah" is given many performances. The most elaborate of several Toronto performances is given in Massey Hall by the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir, accompanied by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, and conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan.

This season's performances are on Tuesday and Wednesday, Jan. 1st and 2nd, 1952, at 8:00 p.m. Soloists are Lois Marshall, soprano; Mary Palmateer, contralto; J. S. Vickers, tenor, and James Milligan, bass. Several of these soloists are newcomers to the Mendelssohn Choir's "Messiah", and the performance is therefore expected to differ somewhat from that of former years.

The CBC will broadcast the entire performance on the night of Jan. 2 on its Trans-Canada network. For those who will not be in Toronto at that time, the radio will help, but to those who will be in town, the experts say, "It's not the same thing." Even the CBC's technique is not always equal to the task of making a large choir, orchestra, organ, piano, and soloists perform through one loudspeaker. Ticket prices are $1.00 to $2.50.

Handel's "Messiah" is too well known to require detailed description. It is almost unique among eighteenth-century oratorios in using the words of the Bible nearly verbatim throughout. Most oratorios of this period were set to words by some long-since-forgotten poet, who paraphrased the Bible or another piece of literature in rhymed verse. The added dignity of the words of the King James Version has made "The Messiah" a favorite with English-speaking audiences, who have learned to disregard Handel's occasional lapses in the matter of English accentuation.

The annual Toronto performance of "The Messiah" is also almost unique in its way. Late in the 1780's (40 years after the writing of "The Messiah"), Mozart was commissioned to re-write the orchestral accompaniments in mode modern, "galant" style. His edition of this oratorio was the one used almost universally for many years.

Late nineteenth-century and twentieth-century musicologists recognized that Mozart's style was unsuited to the bold outlines of Handel's orginal composition, and wrote their own accompaniments for it. With various publishers each backing their own revision, the original version was seldom heard.

Sir Ernest MacMillan has over the years prepared an edition of "The Messiah" that conforms to the spirit, though not always to the letter of the original. Unlike other modern versions, this one retains the continuo, or impromptu filling-in of harmonies on a keyboard instrument. For the choruses this is performed on the organ, for the solo numbers on the piano, sometimes with assistance from the organ. The extra orchestral parts written by Mozart, Hamilton Harty, and others have been eliminated.

So it happens that in Toronto we hear a performance of "The Messiah" that is probably closer to the simplicity of the original than any other to be heard in the world today.

Dame Really Man In Mother Goose

Tradition has it that the Dame in a pantomime should be played by a man and the principal boy's part should be taken by a girl. The pantomime MOTHER GOOSE which will play in Eaton Auditorium runs true to form in this matter. The part of Mother Goose is being played by a well-known radio actor, Eric Christmas. Mr. Christmas has had a lot of experience in this field of entertainment in England and brings all the tricks of the trade to this Canadian production.

A Christmas pantomime is not, as some people might expect, a ballet without dialogue, but a musical revue based on the old nursery rhymes. There are topical songs and dance routines breaking up the narrative of the story — which in the case of MOTHER GOOSE is a very intricate story about the Goose that lays the golden eggs and the consequent decline of Mother Goose due to the wealth amassed by selling these eggs. A ferocious Devil enters into the proceedings as well as Mother Goose's children.

The production of this show, which plays from Dec. 26 until Jan. 5 at Eaton Auditorium, is in the hands of Johnny Wayne and Frank Shuster, two UC grads who have become the best-known Canadian radio comedians. They have written all the songs for MOTHER GOOSE which is a departure from normal procedure. Usually the songs used are topical favourites but anyone who has heard their radio show will know the kind of songs to expect.

The "panto" will be given in a condensed version on the "CBC Wednesday Night," Dec. 19 at 8:30 p.m. and at that time Eric Christmas will give a short talk on Christmas pantomime. People are advised against believing that it is a show designed strictly for children. Young and old can enjoy it equally; the very young are sure to miss many of the allusions.

Mass Fantasia

For two weeks, beginning December 24th, the Royal Alexandra Theatre is showing a film of Disney at his eclectic best — Fantasia. The purpose of the movie, implicit, if not stated, is to take classical works of music such as Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite, Stravinsky's Rite of Spring and Schubert's Ave Maria, and pictorialize them in the hope of making them palatable to untutored tastes. If so, the film, far from guiding the naive neophyte into a state of enlightenment, rather leads him into the dragon den of error and misconception.

There is no lower conception of music than that which attempts to realise it in terms of the ocular. It runs counter to the very essence of music, which represents a spiritual state only engendered by a composer's reaction to visual reality.

Disney perverted this masterpiece into movie music, only re-inforcing the emotion one receives from the visual action. It is not surprising that many people who usually revolted against the discordances and disturbing rhythms of the Rite of Spring when heard unadulterated, blandly accepted it in the movie.

Perhaps the most successful of the sequences was the cartooning of Paul Dukas' Sorcerer's Apprentice, for this work was primarily intended as narrative music; the composer himself provides a detailed outline of the amusing story of an apprentice who uses the powers of his wizard master of which he has no knowledge and control to make a broom perform his labours. Moussorsky's Night on Bald Mountain, showing a satanic sabbath, was also very well done.

There is no doubt that the movie is very imaginatively done, with vivid colour and, at times, with a certain wit. It is certainly worth seeing for these elements alone; but it is wise to remember, concerning the music, the limitations of Disney's method.

A Christmas Carol

A soft December snowfall is gently spreading over the campus as this Christmas viewpoint from the balcony is being written. You would almost think that I'd hired some movie magicians to give me atmosphere, since one of the pictures being reviewed is A CHRISTMAS CAROL, the latest in a line of movie versions of Dickens' sentimental Christmas overture.

The first time that Scrooge was enacted for me was in junior high school days, when on a high school stage a retired English actor whose name I have long forgotten gave a monologue of Scrooge's Christmas morning after the visits of the spirits. The highlight was the scene from the window when the regenerated Scrooge asks the passing boy to get the prize turkey from the butcher's. Most of us in the audience were entranced. We had just read A Christmas Carol for the first time. We had hissed, shuddered, thrilled, wept and laughted with Scrooge and Tiny Tim.

Since then I have seen two other film versions. One was a British version which is very dulled in memory. The other was an MGM effort starring Lionel Barrymore. And now has come the newest version, starring Alastair Sim (HAPPIEST DAYS OF YOUR LIFE, LAUGHTER IN PARADISE) as Scrooge. It is sentimental, it is scary, it is outrageous, it is Dickens.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL opens tomorrow (Saturday) at the three Odeon theatres, the Danforth, Fairlawn, and Humber. It should stick around till Christmas, of course. If you want to get away from the artificial blaring of White Christmas and to dip into old-fashioned Christmas, this is your dish. Take along a young child if you can.

Alastair Sim is the main reason why this version of a CHRISTMAS CAROL is so satisfying. His Scrooge is a hammy Scrooge, but his haminess always pleases. Barrymore used to rip out "Bah . . . humbug!" as if it were an oath. Sim's "Humbug!" is annoyed, irritated, and sometimes defiant. It seems more Dickens than acting.

Brian Desmond Hurst is producer-director of this film, and his care with Victorian backgrounds and his mixture of horror and sentiment are very much like David Lean's superior job of translating Dickens in GREAT EXPECTATIONS and OLIVER TWIST. Mervyn Johns is a properly timid but fatherly Bob Cratchit; Hermione Baddeley is an excellent Mrs. Cratchit, George Cole (who was in "The Kite" in QUARTET with Miss Baddeley) is the younger Scrooge. Marley's ghost (Michael Hordern) is a most satisfying Marley's ghost. The spirits as well as the ghostly Marley are treated as real if partly transparent beings, so that there is none of the vagueness that attended Olivier's Hamlet's ghost. Of course, Dickens' ghosts and spirits have a lot to say and need to be coherent.

Kathleen Harrison is Mrs. Dilber, Scrooge's housemaid, and she is a happy choice. The sequence from the vision of the Christmas Yet-To-Come in which Mrs. Dilber and the laundress and the undertaker dispose of the dead Scrooge's belongings is a frightening study of human scavenging. Surprisingly, the familiar Christmas at the Cratchits' is disposed of briefly, but this is not a great jar unless you felt like lingering with Tiny Tim and the goose. Happily Tiny Tim (Glyn Dearman) is not a precocious or sweet little movie darling, but a pinched-faced lad who acts like a introspective child.

I can hardly wait to take my youngest brother along to see A CHRISTMAS CAROL. Partly because he knows the Dickens well, but partly because I want again to share those moments of horror and sadness and because I know that Scrooge is going to be a happy man at the end. And, of course, because soon it will be Christmas.

The River

One of my Christmases was spent in Madras in south India. It was a fantastic Christmas for me, since there was on holly, no Santa Claus parade, nor advertising in the newspapers, and the temperature hovered in the high 80s. The Indian cooking staff prepared a chicken dinner in the mess of the army billet where I passed the morning. And because it was a holiday for us, we were bedecked by the bearers with paper garlands, and we had beer in the mess to go with the roast chicken.

In the afternoon, I caught a train bound north to Calcutta. My coachmates included some RAF types who agreed that it was a bad show to be spending Christmas this way and since they were equipped with a small supply of stimulants, we got slightly squiffed and were hoarsely singing carols as we pulled into Calcutta's sticky Howrah station.

This is a non sequiter beginning, in a way to reviewing the Towne Cinema's "delayed" Christmas present to its patrons. On December 27, THE RIVER, Jean Renoir's beautiful and superlative film on Rumer Godden's novel, starts its run. The River is an Indian river, the Ganges, the holy river. Renoir made this film completely in India, using authentic people, costumes and background. It is a moving, successful job.

This is Renoir. And in THE RIVER, he has captured India in a way that it should be captured for us who live in a completely different world with a completely different sense of values. Some of the success of THE RIVER may be that we will now hesitate about asking futilely why Asiatics do not think exactly the way our own logic goes or why they react differently from us.

Rumer Godden's view of India is a romantic one, and the beauties of Technicolor accentuate the color of the life and scenery and the trappings of both. Lacking are the stink and the dirt and the humid heat and the politics of Bengal, but all the authentic remainder is in THE RIVER.

The story is of three girls, an ugly duckling (Patricia Walters) yearning to become a swan, a spoiled rich daughter (Adrienne Corri) who impulsively pushes herself into womanhood, and a pensive Anglo-Indian (Radha) who finds herself caught between two heritages. Into their closely-knit lives comes a young American (Thomas E. Breen), crippled and embittered by the war. All three girls grow up under the new impact, painfully, eagerly and awkwardly.

Renoir presents an India that not all visitors see: the religious festivals with all their brilliant pageantry, the flurry and bustle of the native bazaars, and the recurrent theme of the River to whom all pay homage.

There are no Indian rope tricks, but there are the real snake charmers, the dancing monkeys and the painted holy men in the bazaars. The music and the singing and the drums are authentic and haunting from the moment the film opens. The same laments and chants used to echo from the late night fires in the hill camps and in the city bazaars.

THE RIVER is the first film in Technicolor made in India which is being distributed all over the world. It is a result of the unusual gratifying collaboration between an American businessman, Kenneth McEldowney, and the French director Jean Renoir. It uses the talents of several well knowns, some lesser-known but able character actors, Nora Swinburne (QUARTET), Esmond Knight (HAMLET, HENRY V), Arthur Shields (THE INFORMER), and Indian actors and technical talent. (India comes second to the United States in commercial film production.)

THE RIVER is different. It is beautiful, it is romantic, but it is India. For many of us the hardest part of THE RIVER will probably be the realization that it is also based in this century, this decade. THE RIVER is an enjoyable experience you should not miss.

Goodwill Austrians Yodel, Sing, Dance At Coming Concert

The appearance in Toronto of the Third Goodwill Tour of Austrian Students and Teachers, while not strictly a Christmas event, will take place before the next regular issue of The Varsity, and therefore deserves mention in these columns.

On Tuesday, January 8, a group of students and teachers from all parts of Austria will present a program of song and dance in Convocation Hall. Many students will remember the program presented by the First Goodwill Tour late in 1949, and again in May, 1950. As on that occasion, the Austrians will perform a series of semi-dramatic skits, showing off the traditional costumes, songs, dances and rituals of the mountainous little central European country.

Austrian peasants, like those of many other countries, have developed folk-dances and songs all their own, and in recent years, experts in the field of folk-music have collected much of this traditional art. It is therefore possible for a group such as this Goodwill Tour to present perfectly authentic tunes and dances from all over Austria, and to make a musical show of them.

Peculiar to Austria and south Germany is the "Slap Dance" (Schuhplattler). It is performed by men only, dressed in leather shorts. Additional musical accompaniment to the customary accordion or guitar is provided by the resounding slaps of the performers' hands on their own (and other dancers') leather-covered thighs and by the clatter of their boots on the floor. In the course of the dance, each dancer tries to trip, poke, box or otherwise maul every other dancer, but always in rhythm. Several examples of this type of dance will be included on the program.

Yodelling is not exclusively the province of the Swiss—the Austrians do it too. Some expert yodellers, both male and female, will be with the group. A performer on the zither, and one on the peasant harp will also be there, in addition to players of more conventional instruments, such as the violin, clarinet, and accordion.

The four scenes of the presentation represent the four seasons in various parts of the country. The spring scene is entitled "Under the Maypole", the summer scene, "At the Harvest Festival." For autumn, the scene is laid in Vienna, and in winter, a peasant wedding is represented.

The Austrian students and teachers make no attempt to produce a professional show. Folk music is amateur music, and it is out of the uninhibited folk songs and dances that these performers make up their show.

The arrangements for the visit of the Austrian students to the Toronto campus have now been completed, announced Joan Presant, III UC, today. She is looking after the visit for the EAC.

Each of the visiting students will have one person as his particular host; this arrangement is similar to that of the Carabin weekend.

The Toronto students will meet the guests after they have attended mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral on Sunday. A supper party will be held on Sunday evening and from there the visitors will accompany their hosts home.

Monday afternoon the students will split up into several groups and cocktail parties will be held.

In order that any other interested Varsity students may meet the Austrians, a party will be held after the performance on Tuesday night. Then the visitors will continue on their way to Windsor, their next stop.

Vive Wien

Susanne Poisticer is one of the directors of the group of Austrian students and teachers performing a program of song and dance in Convocation Hall on Tuesday, Jan. 8. A true Viennese by birth and upbringing Susanne nevertheless speaks English well enough to speak to Canadian audiences and act as MC for the show.

Victoria Stages "Inspector Calls"

The drama AN INSPECTOR CALLS, by J. B. Priestley, is to be presented by the Victoria College Dramatic Society on the evenings of Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, January 10, 11, and 12.

The action of the play centres around the death of a young girl. As the play opens, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Birling are celebrating the engagement of their daughter, Sheila, to Gerald Croft, a young business man of Brumley. The happy party is interrupted by the arrival of a distinguished-looking man who introduces himself as Inspector Goole, of the Police Department. The reason for the visit, he announces, is to inquire into the tragic suicide of a young girl once in the employ of Mr. Birling. At first it appears as though the members of the family have no common interest in the girl but through the clever questioning the Inspector soon proves that each of them contributed to the suicide death in an important way. The unusual manner in which the Inspector interrogates the Birling family and Gerald Croft occupies the greater part of the three-act play. However, in the final act the trend of the action takes a surprising turn, and illustrates clearly the mastery of Priestley's pen.

Priestly not only manages to keep the audience in suspense throughout the entire action of the play but also presents some extraordinary fine character studies in the persons of the Inspector and Mr. Birling. George McCowan portrays the difficult role of the strange and mysterious Inspector Goole, while Douglas Quirk plays the part of the pompous Birling.

The Victoria College Drama Club has gone all-out this year to produce a fascinating and exciting three-act play which should be of interest to young and old. Donald Glenn, a man well-known for his theatrical work, has taken on the difficult job of directing. Ticket sales have begun in Alumni Hall at Victoria College and will continue until the holidays begin. Tickets can also be purchased at the Hart House Theatre box-office.

Sir Ernie's Wacky Show Still Secret

Every year since 1935, Toronto's wackiest musical event, the annual Christmas Box Symphony, has packed Massey Hall for one or more performances. Each year the event has become more popular than the year before, and at the present time, three performances are required to take care of the crowds that always turn up for it.

Advance notices of the Christmas Box Symphony usually sound rather cryptic, because all information regarding the program is kept a very closely guarded secret. Speculation on what will go on is always bound to be on a very theoretical level, since even after all these years of Christmas Box Symphonies they show no tendency of developing any set pattern.

Generally, one or more popular soloists are present, and, of course, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, directed (more or less) by Sir Ernest MacMillan provides the bulk of the entertainment. This is the night when the TSO lets down its long, long hair, performs popular music and carols, parodies of more serious music.

Occasionally, an eminent musician gives an illustrated "lecture" on some abstruse point of musical theory. Once, Sir Ernest himself performed a violin concerto specially composed for the occasion (rivalling, it is said, Jack Benny in his masterful interpretation). At another concert, the St. Simon's Boys' Choir added to the festivities with their carol-singing.

This year's Christmas Box Symphony performances will be given on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, December 18, 19 and 20, in Massey Hall. Tickets as for all Symphony concerts are from $1.00 to $2.50.

Five Dramas For Loafers After Xmas

The first two nights of next term will have plenty of entertainment ready for students who cannot settle right into their studies. On Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 7 and 8 the University of Toronto Drama Committee is presenting five plays acted and directed by students.

These plays provide a variety of types of dramatic entertainment ranging from a very old English Morality Play, EVERYMAN, which is being produced by St. Mike's to scenes from a modern play by Lawrence Houseman, VICTORIA REGINA, which is being put on by the Trinity Drama Club. On the same night Vic is presenting a Bernard Shaw one-acter called HOW HE LIED TO HER HUSBAND. These three are to be shown Tuesday night.

On Monday night UC is putting on for a second time, Dr. Faustus, by Christopher Marlowe. The fifth play—EVERYBODY'S HUSBAND—is the contribution of the Royal Conservatory Drama group who are affiliated with the university.

Meds Win Lacrosse Finals

Blues' First Line

This is the line that will carry much of the responsibility for Toronto's good hockey reputation on its shoulders, at least as far as scoring goals is concerned, when the Blues face Michigan tonight and tomorrow. Jack Wheldrake is at right wing, John Adams is at left wing, and Don Rope centres the line.

Medicals Win 7-6 In Overtime Battle Gear Scores Five

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Once again Meds rule the roost in interfaculty lacrosse. They took a rousing, overtime victory yesterday over UC, 7-6, with Stu Sims potting the big marker late in the second period of overtime. But the stars of the win were Jack Gear who scored the first five goals for the doctors and Reg Perkin in goal who saved his teammates on several occasions when UC was pressing.

The two teams were very cautious in the first half of the game and Meds were sporting a 2-1 edge when the ywent off for a rest. Play opened up somewhat in the last half and the score was five-all at game's end. UC had the lead frequently but Gear always seemed able to square matters. UC went ahead in the extra periods but in the last couple of minutes, Kilty tied the count, setting the stage for Sim's payoff marker.

There was one goal early in the first period, that by Gear who took a pass from Cosens and went in to score. Cosens was given a charging penalty but UC got no farther than a few near misses. Mostly the check was close and fierce but there was the odd rush. Thomson in particular went well, breaking up UC plays with some very pretty checks.

In the second period, the players seemed a little over-anxious and so there were several dropped passes and missed shots. UC especially had trouble getting untracked. While Gear and Kopsky were off for roughing, Al Eagleson netted Young's rebound after Dutch had made a rush from his own end. This seemed to set fire to the UC offensive and they began to roll. The Meds defence was steady and Perkin was spectacular making stop after stop, some at point-blank range. Towards the end of the frame, Gear intercepted a UC pass and went in to give the Medsmen the lead.

Cosens went off for charging and Young tied the score right away with an accurate shot at a sharp angle. Kopsky scored twice during the penalty time to give UC a two-goal lead which Gear cut in half with his third tally on and end-to-end run.

The fourth period saw the players very careful and as a result, action was sloppy at times. Finding no one to pass to, Gear shot and scored to tie the count at 4-4. A face-off followed a roughing episode in front of the Meds nets and Kopsky finished his hat trick right from the draw. However Jack Gear forced overtime, taking the ball from his goalie and going the length of the court to score.

UC got an early lead in the overtime on Young's marker. Meds shone defensively at this stage and Kilty missed a perfect set up. In the second OT frame, Meds struck quickly to put the game on ice. Kilty grabbed a loose ball and whipped it past Smela. Then came the clincher by Sims. Sims had the ball for some time and finally was forced to shoot and his shot caught Smela on the wrong side of the goal. Meds were able to stave off the last-minute tries of the Redmen even though Cosens drew a penalty. Their last chance was gone when Watson drew a penalty and left them short-handed for the final minute.

It was a great victory for the doctors. They never gave up though they were behind often enough. Jack Gear equalled his displays of the other games of the series with his five goals, as well as being a tower of strength defensively. Perkins was great in goal and Kilty was threatening throughout the game. For UC, it was Dutch Young again leading his team and Steve Kopskywith his three goals. There was no disgrace in dropping a series in overtime of the saw-off game.

Hockey Blues Visit Ann Arbor For Two Exhibition Contests

The Hockey Blues entrained last night for Ann Arbor, Michigan and their annual two game exhibition series with the University of Michigan Wolverines. Last year the two teams divided the points with the Wolverines winning the Friday night game 9-3 and the Blues capturing the Saturday affair 6-4.

Good news from the Blues camp is thathard-hitting Joe Kane will join the team for the week-end encounters after missing last week's league openers due to injuries. Besides Kane, Paul Prendergast, Jack MacKenzie, Gerry Fitzhenry and Al Fasan will see defence duty.

There are two changes in the forward lines for tonight's game. Ernie Frey and Phil Arrowsmith did not make the trip and their places have been taken by Jerry Henderson and Gord Bennett. The Rope-Wheldrake-Adams line and the Conboy-Fox-Vernon lines will both be in contact while Red Stephen will centre the other two wings, Henderson and Bennett.

Doug Orr and Jack Ross will again share the goal duties with Orr likely getting the nod for tonight.

The teams will play for the James C. Thompson Trophy, to be presented to the team that scores the most goals in the two-game series. The beautiful gold-plated trophy, nearly two feet in height, was inaugurated in 1947 for the benefit game for Mercy Hospital in Chicago, but was discontinued until this year.

Michigan has already played a similar series this year, with Montreal Carabins. They trounced the Quebeckers in the first game and lost the second one by a narrow 5-4 margin. The Wolverines boast a fine new goalie named Williard Ikola, and have seven other new men in their line-up, including several Canadians. All but three team members last year were Canadians.

It is unfortunate that Toronto fans cannot se these international rivals in action, but it is not financially expedient to invite the Wolverines to the Queen City. In Ann Arbor the fans pay to see the games, which covers the Blues' travelling expenses.

Blue Matmen Defeat NYAC In Hart House

The Varsity wrestling team scored a decisive win over the North York matmen last night in the Hart House gym by a score of 19-14. Of the eight bouts only three went the distance. The heavyweight bout was called off when the North York contestant failed to appear. It was a very good evening with Hamilton, Goldenberg and Chyckaliuk earning extra praise from their mentor, Kirk Wipper.

In the first bout, at 123 pounds, Joe Goldenberg from Varsity pinned Don Levitt from NYAC after 4 minutes 35 seconds.

In the 130 pound match, Walt Pitmann (V) won by defeating Jerry Asner (NY) by a score of 4-0. Pitmann got two points in the third period on a reversal of two more on time advantage.

Tom Hatashita (V) defeated Don Bowyer (NY) by a 9-2 score. Hatashita scored the first two points on a takedown in the first, added one more on an escape, then Bowyer scored two on a takedown and Hatashita ended the second period by adding two more on a rehearsal. Another reversal in the third and two points on time advantage accounted for the rest of Hatashita's points.

Buddy Martin (NY) won the 147 lb. match by pinning Paul Phelan (V) after 2 minutes 52 seconds.

Lindy Primo (NY) pinned Orie Loucks (V) after 2 minutes and 58 seconds of the 175-lb. match.

In the 167 lb. bout Glenn McCormick (V) ended a see-saw struggle by pinning Bill Clifford (NY) after 4 minutes and 46 seconds.

The 177 pound match was considered an exhibition bout since Bill Chyckaliuk (V) had to face Vic Jensen, the North York coach. Jensen finally won by a fall after 7 minutes and 45 seconds of the struggle.

In the 191 pound division Doug Hamilton (V) defeated Chas. Bowyer (NY) by a score of 4-3. Hamilton scored two on a takedown in the first, then Bowyer scored a near-fall in the second and added a third point on an escape for time advantage.

Orphuns Win By 51-30 Score

The Varsity Orphuns ploughed their way to a 51-30 victory and their third straight win in the City Senior Basketball League in Hart House last night against a West End Y squad that did everything but throw cross-body blocks to prevent it.

Relying on an effective zone defence to keep their opponents in check, the Orphuns racked up a 13-0 lead in the first quarter before the squad from the West End found the range. Stulac, Russell and Madden spearheaded the Orphun attack and turned in outstanding defensive games as an afterthought.

The Orphuns were weakest in the foul-shooting department, completing only 14 foul shots in 31 tries. Adopting a fast-breaking style of play, the Orphuns notched the majority of their counters via the breakaway trail. Jim Russell's passing was one of the chief threats that the West Enders had to contend with and he tallied 16 points to make himself high scorer for the contest. Al Brown turned in a noble job for the Orphuns in the checking department.

The score stood at 18-8 as play rolled into the second quarter with the Orphuns sporting a record of 7 foul shots missed out of 9 tries. The West Enders began to roughen things up a little and before the half Doug Kettle of the Orphuns had to leave the floor with a bleeding nose. But a fast-breaking attack kept their opponents off balance and the Orphuns rolled up a 29-13 margin at the half way mark.

The Orphuns continued to press in the third stanza, and with their zone defence keeping the West Enders at long range they outscored their opponents two to one for the quarter. Most of the Y scoring was done on long set shots, and the score at the three-quarter mark was 45-20.

The Orphuns settled back to enjoy their lead in the final stanza and the West Enders took control of things for a while, hooping 10 points to 6 for their opponents in this 15 minutes. The win gave the Orphuns a record of three wins and no losses in the league competition, putting them in second spot behind the all-powerful Tri-Bells who have a four and nothing record to date this season. The loss made it two and two for the West Enders.

Jim Russell paced the game's scorers with a 16-point effort for Orphuns. Don Gibson was tops for the losers with 9 points, while teammate Bill Moore notched 8. Other scorers for the Orphuns were George Stulac with 11 points and Leo Madden with 9, while Al Brown and Al Dancy scored 4 and three points respectively.

Water Polo Juniors Lose To Central Y

The Varsity Junior Water Polo squad absorbed a 15-14 defeat at the hands of the Central Y "A" squad last night in the Hart House pool that eliminated them from the league with a record of two wins and two losses. The other defeat came at the hands of the same opponents earlier in the season.

The contest was the closest, hardest one of the season with Varsity playing a swimming game against the long passing attack of the Central Y team. As it turned out, the Blues ran out of steam before their opponents. With the count at 8-7 at the halfway mark, Varsity held a slim one-goal lead that was to vanish before the final whistle.

Handicapped by the absence of two regular defensemen, Hart Robins, the Blue goalie, was spectacular in defeat, stopping some almost impossible shots by the hard-driving pivot man on the Central team who was high scorer for the winners.

Al Roger was top dog for the Blues with 7 goals. Bill McIlroy, Barry Tobe and Doug Wilson each counted twice, with Bernie Langer scoring a single. Wilson was the heartbreak boy of the game for Varsity as he missed a penalty shot that could have tied the whole contest up and forced an overtime. The defensive play of the Central team was a big factor in their win.

Interfac Major B-Ball Entries Hit New High

The Intramural office announced today that there are a record number of entries in Intramural basketball this season. Due to the limited accommodation the minor leagues still have 96 teams but the major leagues have swelled to 40 teams.

Each team will play a home and home series with the teams in its group. Each group will consist of four teams. The first four of the ten major league divisions will send two teams into the playoffs but the other six will only send their winner in the hunt for the championship.

All of the major league games will be played in the lower gym in Hart House. The schedule will see 52 of the minor leaguers playing in the upper gym at Hart House with the other 44 teams playing at the Victoria College gym.

A total of 406 games will be played in the regular season. This is not a big increase because the number of games played by each team has been cut down.

Basketball Blues Bill Huycke and Bud Natanson
Will Varsity's hot combination top the Intercollegiate?

By MAL CRAWFORD

Buffalo, Dec. 12 (Staff) — Buffalo University laced the University of Toronto Blues 81-54 in an exhibition basketball game Wednesday night at the Buffalo gym, taking the lead at the end of the first quarter and increasing it by six or seven points each period, after being held even by the Toronto outfit for the first seven or eight minutes.

The Buffalo Bulls, who are rated one of the best teams in the East, put on a brilliant display of passing, ball-handling, and shooting, once they got themselves unwound. Several foul shots by Bud Natanson and some sensational shooting by Bill Huycke kept the Toronto end of the score up for a while and put the Blues ahead 12-11. Huycke, who scored half of Toronto's first 12 points, was easily the best man on the floor for Varsity, sinking 17 points, many on sensational shots both from close in and on sets. He scored his tenth straight foul shot Wednesday night, but broke the string on his next attempt.

Buffalo, who played most of the game without their star freshman forward Jim Horne, a spring-legged 18-year-old Negro who has scored 16 points a game to date, took most of the first period to get clicking, but rattled in six points in the last minute of the period, and doubled the score to 32-16 in the first half of the second quarter. Their fast-break started to get past the Toronto defence, with Jim Rooney and Hal Kuhn whipping the ball around like jugglers, and Charlie Johnt kept the net shaking with long set shots. The Bulls by now had learned to raise the trajectory of their shoots when shooting over Natanson, who had knocked down about a dozen shots.

Varsity got hot again before the end of the half, brought the score from 32-16 to 35-25, also mostly on Huycke's shooting.

The Blues had their usual tough third quarter. The first-liners were tiring, and a couple of sec ond string men were a little shaky at first. Horne came on for Bu falo a few minutes before the end of the second half, and scored 1 points before being taken out a the end of the third quarter. He had suffered a concussion on be ing knocked to the floor in Buf falo's one sided win over Ho bart Monday night, and hence wa used very sparingly against To ronto. We have never seen any one else that could drive throug three or four checks and come u under the hoop to score. He ca outjump men several inches ta er than himself, and stole the ba from Blue dribblers three or fou times.

Buffalo intercepted a lot of To ronto passes in the last period, a the Blues looked rattled at time and threw a ball away severa times. Natanson especially lool ed tired. He had controlled bot backboards in the first half blocked shots, and sunk five fo shots as his checks had to tackl him to stop him. He didn't shoo much, though, as the others weren't cutting off him much to take passes from him, so his effectiveness was somewhat reduced. Ray Monnot improved as the game went on, scored seven points in the second half after a shaky start.

The Blues used a zone, in spite of the large floor, in order to stop the Buffaloes' fast break. They have little height—average less than 6'—but would be deadly against a man-for-man defence because of their speed.

The Blues had one of their better days in shooting, getting 30.8% but this was still the department in which Buffalo outshone them. They were hot in foul shots, getting 22 out of 34 tries.

Saturday night they meet Rochester away, to finish off business for 1951. The team lost to Rochester 66-64 last year.

Line-ups:

Varsity—Centre, Natanson 11; forwards Lukenda 5, Glover 5; guards, Huycke 17, Maynerick 5; Garbutt 1, Oneschuk 3, Monnot 7, Binnington, Wilson.
Buffalo—Centre, Craft 5; forwards, Johnt 16, Scamurra 1; guards, Rooney 17, Kuhn 17; Horne 15, Donaldson 3, Riley 4, Thorn 2, Gicewicz 2 Perri, Kwiatek, Roder.

Buffalo U. JV's Beat Intermeds, Stulac Scores 13

The Intermediates lost a close 45-40 battle with the Buffalo Junior Varsity in the preliminary game Wednesday night at Buffalo. The game started off slowly, with both teams playing very cagily. Though the pace picked up considerably in the second half, the scoring fell off considerably as Buffalo started freezing the ball early.

The two teams kept within two points of each other throughout almost all of the first half. George Stulac, slippery as an eel in the centre slot, sunk most of the baskets, and Ollie Mandryk scored several times with a running one-hand shot. Varsity went ahead for the first time late in the second quarter when Bill Corcoran's two free throws made the score 21-19.

Buffalo suddenly caught fire, and both Perri and Smith shooting accurately, were ahead 29-25 at half-time. Fouls were called very close, and Doug Kettle, who along with Stulac, was Varsity's best performer, fouled out at the end of the third.

Varsity—Stulac 13, Kettle 10, Mandryk 7, Brown 6, Corcoran 2, Reeves , Milne 1 Yakomin, Stevens, Balda, Farside.
Buffalo—Smith 13, Perri 13, Falsetti , Kwiatek 4, Roder 3, Scrutt 6, Ramming, Thompson.

SAC at a Glance

Wednesday night the Students' Administrative Council, as well as making the decisions reported elsewhere in this paper:

—heard letters from the Students' Councils of Queen's and McMaster inviting members of the SAC to dances at their campi. No members of the SAC were able to accept.

—passed the All-Varsity Revue budget and requested AVR Director Jim Guthro to present a report of AVR progress, stressing publicity measures, at the first meeting of the SAC in the new year.

—refused to subsidize the Vic Glee Club in an inter-university spring festival to the tune of $110, on the grounds that it was not truly representative of the University —passed the SHARE budget, although not entirely certain to which Asian university a discrepancy of $50 had been allocated.

—passed the University of Toronto Debating Union budget and heard that trials for the New England, Mid-Western and Quebec tours, in which women will be allowed to enter, will be held on January 18.

—carried the motion that a committee of three arrange for the use of Strachan Hall for the Scottish Debate with McGill on January 24, with the Chapel as a poor attendance alternative.

—decided to send a letter to the Toronto Globe and Mail thanking them for their co-operation at the Carabin weekend, and voted down a motion to censure them for a misrepresentation of the spirit of the weekend.

—on reading Bournot decided to change their procedure of having a vote on an amendment carry the original motion with it.

—decided to send a leter to Dorothy Lieberman, II Pre-Meds, Chairman of the Carabin Weekend committee, congratulating her for its success.

—decided in the future not to refer to the terms dollar or pint per student in the forthcoming SHARE and blood donor campaigns, on the grounds that it would discourage students to give any more than one dollar or one pint each to the respective campaigns.

—heard that 62 bilingual students had registered with the newly formed Translation Bureau; that one Czech student had a work written in Italian translated to English by the Bureau, and sold to a magazine; and that without the services of the Bureau its publication would have been impossible; that the University Settlement House had hired students through the Translation Bureau to teach English to New Canadians.

—accepted Margaret Fleming, IV UC, as volunteer in charge of ticket sales for the Austrian Tour Concert, to be held January 8 at 8:30 in Convocation Hall.

Campus Profile

Ronald Watts and Ian Macdonald

By PEARL PARNES

The Rhodes Trustees offer for award in the Province of Ontario two out of ten of the Rhodes scholarships for Canadians, each of the basic value of £400 per year but temporarily increased to £500.

In the section of his will in which he defined the general type of scholar he desired, Mr. Rhodes mentioned four groups of qualities. He stressed particularly literary and scholastic attainments, and qualities of manhood, truth, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy, kindliness, unselfishness and fellowship. Leadership qualities and participation in sports are important in a general round-up of qualities, and some definite quality of distinction, whether in intellect, character or personality, is the most important requirement.

These, then, are the standards Ronald Lampman Watts, IV Trinity, and Hugh Ian Macdonald, IV U.C., had to meet. They are this year's winners of the Rhodes Scholarships and are entitled to two years studies at Oxford, with a third optional year at any university of their choice.

Ron was born in Japan, and learned Japanese before he was taught English. His father, a Church of England missionary, headed the only English-speaking family in a town of over 100,000. In 1940, when Ron was 11, the Japanese sent all the missionaries out of the country, and the Watts came to Canada.

Ron graduated from Trinity College School in Port Hope with a scholarship in English and History, and entered Trinity College at the University of Toronto in Social and Philosophical Studies. In his second year, he transferred to Philosophy (English or History), taking history as his option. He intends to study history at Oxford.

For the past two summers, he has worked for Frontier College, an organization which sends university students to work and teach in the bush country. For ten hours each day, he worked as a labourer with the men, and taught basic English in the evenings.

"Many of the men were new immigrants who knew very little English, and some of the Canadian-born men had never been to school. The young ones especially wanted to make the most of their opportunity. The older ones had been there a long time; had gotten along all right until now, and didn't care to change."

He spent a couple of weeks getting to know the men and winning their confidence before he began to teach. "They had a very high regard for education, the Europeans particularly," he said. They talked about everything, "even a mild form of philosophy," ranging from God to drink.

"They are a rough, crude bunch, but diamonds underneath. They don't have the polished manners of city society, but would stand firm beside their friends."

In university Ron has been president of his fraternity, vice-president of the Trinity Dramatic Society, player-manager of the Trinity College basketball team, and member of the Trinity Lit Government Council and the Trinity Review.

Ian Macdonald is in Commerce and Finance, and intends to study philosophy, politics and economics at Oxford. He will concentrate particularly on economics, and may continue in academic life. Otherwise he will enter law, with perhaps politics as an ultimate goal.

Ian's summers have been spent in explorative work, in the sense of trying to find out what he'd like to do. He has worked in the statistical and actuarial departments of an insurance company, and has been a travelling auditor with a firm of chartered accountants.

"It was a trial and error means to try to get some insight into different branches of work. I'm not inclined to any of them, but the experience helped me to eliminate them as possibilities." His sports life has been active, and he has received athletic letters from UC and the University. At present he is president of the Commerce Club, and spends a great deal of time in the office, ironing out problems in the club's activities. These include running a book exchange in the fall, publishing a Commerce Journal, and holding regular meetings with eminent business and government men as speakers.

The applicants for the Rhodes Scholarships were interviewed by a board of seven, all of whom have been former recipients of the award.

"It was like being a witness in a court," recalls Ian. "You have little opportunity to recover from one question before they fire another at you." They quizzed him on his opinion in the thorny question of professional-amateur relations in hockey, and on his views about wages being tied to the cost of living.

"I don't approve of the policy," said Ian. "It presupposes that a person be tied to a fixed standard of living. His buying power is constant, and there is no scope for incentive to improve. I subscribe to the incentive principle." He described himself as a freethinker in politics, subscribing to neither radical nor reactionary views. "My main concern is to see social justice prevail for all groups." His pet peeve is having to meet deadlines and rigid schedules. "I have a reputation as a chronic offender in lateness!"

This is the famous All-Varsity Christmas Tree as erected in the Great Hall of Hart House last night. The many lights on the tree were the only illumination except for a fireplace Yule log. Gifts to the many notable campus organizations were presented, to the applause of students sitting on blankets on the stone floor.

Council Supports Statement Of Civil Rights Association Re CBC Hoyle "Censorship"

The Students' Council Wednesday night passed a motion supporting the statement of the Association for Civil Liberties that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should be free from censorship. The motion came as the result of a request from the Medical Society that the SAC should consider supporting the association in the dispute over a series of speeches given by Fred Hoyle, Bertrand Russel, and a group of psychiatrists including Brock Chisholm and Anna Freud.

Syd Wax, IV Meds, in presenting the motion said that he did not know much about the "Civil Liberties group" but that he imagined that it was a bona fide organization since Provost Seeley was the president. Other prominent men associated with the organization, according to executive secretary Irving Himel, are B. K. Sandwell, David Croll, Senator Arthur Roebuck, E. B. Jolliffe, Chasles Millard, Rabbi Feinberg and Professor Malcolm Wallace.

The motion was passed without a vote being taken at each faculty and college after Charles Hanley, III UC, told the council that any support would have to be given within a few days. Both Paul Forestall, IV St. Mike's, and Carolyn Gratton, IV St. Mike's, told the Council that because of the feeling about this subject amongst the students whom they represented they felt they should abstain.

The statement which the Association for Civil Liberties is sending to the Parliamentary Radio Committee says: "We understand that as a result of some recent broadcasts over the CBC given by the people prominent in the fields of science, psychiatry, and philosophy, demands are being made on the government, members of parliament, and the parliamentary radio committee to restrict the CBC from broadcasting discussions on subjects of scientific, psychiatric and philosophical nature. Without necessarily agreeing or disagreeing with the speaker's views on these programs, we wish to express our grave concern about any attempt to impose such a form of censorship of ideas on radio broadcasting in Canada . . ."

Condemn Press Folly's Marker

A 41 to 16 vote carried a resolution "that this House regards the Press as a monument to human folly" at last Wednesday's Hart House Debate.

As Honorary Visitor, Ralph Allen, editor of Maclean's Magazine, spoke for the affirmative. Vern Turner, IV UC, and Kenneth Jarvis, also IV UC, were the principal debaters for the resolution. M. Mogan, St. Michael's, and Ian Montagnes, III UC and News editor of The Varsity led the negative side.

Allen stated that he was aware that "the Press has many things to answer for." The Press has fallen short of its aim to be "an instrument for human enlightenment," he added.

"The number one bogey is the mass man," he indicated, because he supports the bad publications as much or more than the good publications. Although "the Press can improve with the help of intelligent readers," said Allen, "the chief failures lie within the Press." "It has a lack of faith in its readers and a lack of faith in itself," he added.

Vern Turner accused the Press of being "a handmaiden of rich advertisers". "The newspapers in the community are only as good as the people who read them," he said, and as such it has become a monument to human folly "and will soon be its own tomb."

M. Mogan, first speaker for the negative, described the Press as multilateral. "It doesn't intend to mould character", he said. The Press is necessary to give "an imminent sense of the present," he added, and thus is indispensable.

Kenneth Jarvis stated that the Press was not a mirror of normal man. He said that editors must pick the events which they believe justify a place in the news, but that in doing so they choose the sensational rather than the normal.

Ian Montagnes accused the affirmative speakers of using the poorest examples of the Press as being typical of all. "The Press does its best to give good coverage," he concluded, "and it is the responsibility of the people to take into account the limitations of the Press."

III Anthrops' Day For Truth Governs Action

Third year Anthropology, in revolt against the governing ethics of today's society, decided to hold a "Truth Day." The idea originated from Joan Presant, Ken McPherson and Terry Baines, all of third year Anthrop. during an informal discussion, when it was notice how much coined phrases in answer to conventional questions have come to substitute truth in everyday life. "Good morning", "How are you" has come to express no more than a conventional salute and the answer to this has become more of a reflex than a truthful reply, they decided.

The resolution that was to govern behavior on truth day, was quoted by Miss Presant, "We, the third year students of Anthropology, have decided to cast aside convention, we have decided to blast the sacred ethics of the Toronto community, we have decided to tell the truth."

It was felt by the participants that Truth Day, though fairly successful in proving the point raised, didn't mention its goal of creating the feeling that we have got away from the absolute truth in modern society. This was partly attributed to the fact that the event was poorly publicized and that people who knew about it avoided putting the idea through a test.

On commenting about the experience, Miss Presant stated, "It is an experiment worth trying, at least once a week. It is good for the soul." She felt that only this way could we realize how many conscious or unconscious white lies were told during the course of one day.

Publication

Except for Monday's Education Issue, the next issue will be published January 9.

Blue & White Society Blasted By UC Club

"A dastardly deed" was the way Bill Kotcheff, IV UC, described the action of the Blue and White Society in holding their Christmas Tree in the Great Hall of Hart House last night at the same time as the University College Music Club had a concert in the theatre.

Kotcheff, President of the Music Club, said that this conflict of activities will ruin the Music Club and probably mean its death, as it has been told by the University College Literary and Athletic Society that it must be a financial success this year.

Last year a Co-ordinating Committee of the Students' Administrative Council was set up to mediate between colleges holding functions on the same night, to see if compromise could be reached. Another of its purposes was to investigate the possibility of amalgamating smaller clubs so that by joining forces they could be financially solvent.

The Co-ordinating Committee of the Council came under criticism at Wednesday night's meeting of the SAC. It was strongly recommended by Doug Sherk, IV Engineering that all groups planning to hold events get, for their own sakes, in touch with the Co-ordinating Committee to secure a free date, submitting two numbers: student enrolment affected by the event and usual attendance.

It was also suggested that the Co-ordinating Committee Chairman, Chuck Hanley, III UC, get together with the heads of various clubs in financial difficulty to see if co-operation between them might help the situation and reduce the confusing number of extra-curricular activities on the campus.

SAC President Syd Wax said that he regretted the fact that Blue and White Society event had conflicted with the UC event, particularly because an earlier Blue and White event had conflicted with the UC Follies. It made UC look like the goat, he said, but actually both conflicts were unintentional.

The co-ordinating committee was described by David Rose, president of the UC Literary and Athletic Society, as "a front for the SAC so that they may foist their own activities on the student body over and above the heads of the individual colleges and faculties." He said that it was apparent to anyone who has followed SAC activities this year that the SAC has stated a wish to cut down on extra-curricular activities, and has not cut down but has expanded its extra-curricular program.

Movies Poor Fun Not Fact For Sparling

"There has been an over-emphasis of films with a message," stated Gordon Sparling, Director and producer of the Canadian Cameo series of theatrical shorts, last Tuesday night at the Botany Building. This talk was one of a series on, "The Film and Society."

"The general standard of films is good" Mr. Sparling added, "but the industry is still in its gawky adolescent stage. Let us always remember that although its wet nurse has been documentary (films), its mother and its family are showbusiness." He went on to say that, "A nation's culture is gauged by its movies, as it is by its music and its painting, its books and its newspapers."

Sparling felt that the National Film Board was doing "a wonderful job", but that it should use some of its publicity to help the smaller producers. He also felt that the NFB should "farm out some of its work to specialists. The film industry in Canada is too small to have differences."

A new technique being used by Mr. Sparling is "the rhapsodic technique," where there is "a less obvious progression of ideas. Seemingly unrelated bits of action are used," but these are all brought together by some "bridging association."

Will Commission Year Book Sellers For Extra Sales

A new tack in Torontonensis sales will be made this year, as salesmen will be working on commission in each faculty and college, the Students' Administrative Council decided at its meeting Wednesday night.

Commission will be 15% on all copies sold over last year's total of 2,450 copies. In this way, an attempt is being made to increase sales without making the cost any larger to the Council. No commissions will be paid until last year's sales have been equalled, and the revenue from the books sold on commission will cover this outlay.

Doug Sherk, IV Engineering, presented a graph to the Council comparing costs and revenue, and showing that if over 4,400 copies are sold, no subsidization will be necessary from the Students' Council.

Walt Mackenzie, Torontonensis Editor, stated that in a survey among 77 universities of yearbooks of this type conducted by the University of California, Toronto was the ninth largest university participating. It publishes the seventh largest book and is the third cheapest at an average cost of $3.40 per copy, but ranks near the bottom, 52nd, in number of copies sold.

Pulp Industry, Reforestation Institute Topic

Professor R. '. Hosie, professor of Forestry at the Faculty of Forestry, University of Toronto, will speak on "Forest Regeneration in Ontario" before the Royal Canadian Institute on Saturday, December 15 at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall. Prof. Hosie is an authority on silvicultural studies at the University.

He will give a descriptive account of the natural development of the pulpwood forest in Ontario with examples of some of the factors concerned in the regeneration, and will make brief reference to the regeneration surveys carried out by the Forestry branch of Canada, the Department of Lands and Forests and the pulp and paper companies in the province.

Since he came to the university in 1924 he has done a great deal of research during the summer months on forest vegetation, pine blister and ecological studies, and has published a great many papers and reports on his results.

Professor Hosie will also discuss the general situation with regard to forest regeneration as revealed through federal surveys and checked by personal observations in the cut-over forest areas. The lecture will be illustrated with slides in natural color.

Will Drill Sick Kids' Caviteeth

Plans have been completed for a program of dental treatment, teaching and research at the Hospital for Sick Children, according to an announcement made jointly by Dr. Sidney Smith and R. A. Laidlaw, chairman of the hospital's board of trustees.

Dr. Stewart A. McGregor has been named director of dental service with Dr. Gordon Nififoruk as his assistant. Three staff dentists have been appointed: Dr. J. M. Carefoot, Dr. M. J. Crockford and Dr. C. D. Beirel. Consultants include Dr. R. G. Ellis who is Dean of the Faculty of Dentistry, Dr. W. McIntosh and Dr. J. H. Johnson. Additional consultants will be appointed as the organization of the dental services progresses.

Diagnostic and consultative services will be initiated among the patients in the public wards of the hospital. Children's teeth will be checked and those needing dental care will be treated if their general condition permits it. Emergency treatments will be provided to outpatients who have recent medical histories from the hospital.

The teaching program will include medical as well as dental students at both graduate and undergraduate levels. Like the research projects it will be a joint enterprise of the hospital and the Faculty of Dentistry.

Christmas Today

"Peace on earth and goodwill towards men" supposedly expresses the idea of Christmas. But these are distant words with little meaning for most people. They are as far from reality as we are from the Communists.

Christmas is a family affair, the gathering of the clan, the annual reunion and a joyous celebration. But it is around the children that the gaiety and good spirits centre. They are the fuel of the Christmas fire, and without them the fire sizzles and may even die.

For children, the world is transformed at Christmas-time. The stores are no longer filled with bad-tempered and harried shoppers. Rather they are crowded with Christmas shoppers who are of a very special nature — full of good spirits and mirth. Children believe in the Christmas spirit, in Santa Claus and the wealth of festivities and colour that goes with it. And consequently, they see the Christmas world everywhere.

Adults, and this includes most university students, call this naivete. We have reached a maturity whose main virtue seems to consist in seeing the world as it really is. By careful observation, we observe that Christmas shoppers are just as rushed, and even more so, than any other variety. Again, we question the cheap commercialism of the records playing outside the radio shops, and the false enticements of the Christmas displays.

Christmas is humbug, we sadly admit. But except for Brock Chisholm, few have wanted to impress this fact on their children. Perhaps this is because most adults want to enjoy Christmas. And this they can do vicariously through their children.

As children we all assumed that Christmas was a very special occasion, and Santa Claus was an extraordinary person. We experienced the whole feeling of Christmas and it was quite as real to us as the porridge which we have to eat every morning for breakfast. Only much more pleasant. We believed in the Christmas spirit, because we could feel it in ourselves. And because it was within ourselves, it was everywhere else as well.

Maybe Christmas should be celebrated on a farm. Here, perhaps, some of the reckless naivete still remains. It takes a stiff country parlour to be so completely transformed by a Christmas tree, with its tinsel decorations and candles. And the pleasure of opening parcels and scattering the wrappings cannot be equalled in less formal surroundings. Beyond this, there is also the delightful necessity of feeding animals their Christmas dinners. As if horses knew why they were getting extra oats! But does it matter?

Christmas, as we said before, is a family affair. For many students this means going home — something which is very important when "home" is far beyond the end of the carline. For them, Christmas will inevitably be a special occasion. For many others, it may be more of a chance.

But to everyone, we wish a very merry Christmas. And to us, that means enjoying the whole show, from tinsel decorations to the turkey dinner. If such is possible.

Comment . . .

. . . In its action to keep the CBC free from outside interference (a parliamentary ruling) the Association for Civil Liberties has sent a letter to both the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Revenue voicing opposition to censorship of scientific and philosophical programs.

At the last Students' Administrative Council meeting, a motion was passed endorsing that action thus adding the University of Toronto students' support.

. . . These are very worthy steps. Perhaps too it would do us no harm to read the context of Hoyle, Russell, Chisholm, and other speakers in question. . . . We are always happy when we find letters-to-the-editor on our doorstep. And usually we are able to publish them. Unfortunately we sometimes meet the technical difficulty of not having enough space in which to print them. We are presented with this problem today, even though we have expanded to twelve pages because we have endeavoured to present as much material as we can to cover the gap between this and the next news issue in January. We have also attempted to present a Christmas issue which will cover holiday entertainment and other student activities, as well as the regular news, so please accept our apologies for the condensation.

Not Dead Yet?

By WILLIAM GLENESK

Once upon a time lived on old man. Not as old as Methuselah, but the lines of time had crinkled his cheeks, and the soft hair of his rustic beard was white. Like King Lear striding the wind he trod the winding Roman road up to the wilderness outside the city. The ground crackled under the grind of his heavy feet, while the air turned brown and dim as the dusk cast her cloak of shadows as far as eye could see.

A grizzled bough like a dying hand reached out from the brush, and the crinkles tightened in the old man's cheek as he drew back startled. It was only the gathering storm. The silver twinkle in his almost hidden eye glistened as he looked and saw the house. Clutched in an arc of trees was a nest-like cottage, one lone light at the only window, burning dimly. Behind the flame two sunken eyes stared into the night. In the flicker of light around the flame were gathered three other pairs of eyes. The man and his daughters seemed locked to the benches as the hoary bearded one stepped to the door to knock.

And so the legend spins forth the tale of the distraught father back in the third century whose poverty held marriage out of reach of his three daughters. Without a dowery the three were on the doorstep of the house of shame. But in the midst of need doweries appeared on the little oaken table surreptitiously bestowed by some mysterious hand.

No knock had touched the door. No one had come in. Yet here were pouches of gold to save the day. The candle quickened its flame as two aging feet pressed up the road and the soft white beard became crisp in the hard wind as the old man ambled into the dark.

Most of you who read these words do not believe in legend. Most of you are from Missouri when it comes to talking about myth. Yet for just a whit of a minute think back to when you were knee-high, when you believed in everything; goblins, fairies, elves, the whole wide world were yours. When we walked the town in short pants and wide-open eyes fantasy was real, and reality fantastic. Can you remember a little land of counterpane, tin toy soldiers and the Wizard of Oz? Yet now at the time of Yule, we say with a sigh, "You are very old Father Christmas," and now we too are old. Faced with a world that is real and as cold as steel, we forget that flame which burned in the roadside Roman house when old Nicholas quietly slipped in.

Old Nicholas was a Christian. Part of his life was passed in prison under the Emperor Diocletian, and he was in and out of the fire until Constantine came in. A few of the embers stayed aglow in folk who followed Nicholas in history, and the custom grew as secret gifts were given once a year. But now gifts are no longer secret, except for the ribbons and wrapping, and such gifts are not confined to Christians. Old Nicholas has donned a scarlet suit and cap trimmed with rich white fur, and the Americans changed his name to Santa Claus. He sits majestic on a throne in Eaton's, Simpson's, Macy's, Marshall Field's, amidst the toys. Santa is not secret now, but seen through a dollar sign by all. All except the children. Do you know why? In spite of the double identity and cries of "fake", small fry still hold on. They want to believe. They want and do.

Santa is a symbol of goodwill. Children old and young do not know where he comes from, maybe the North Pole, and they don't know where he goes. But one thing they know for sure. They know why. Santa stands for a gift to all mankind. A gift that like St. Nicholas of old time is a mystery, just out of reach or reason. Yet there. Santa does not always come in a red suit and a sleigh. He comes in by the back door. He may be the Good Samaritan who stopped by the side of the road. He may be sitting beside a bed, holding a fading pulse all night. He may be a child in a manger of straw. He may be God. He may be you.

EDUCATION

THE IDEAL AND US

Cementing Relations

—Cartoon By Hugh Niblock

EDITORIAL

What's The Big Idea

This issue of The Varsity has about as ambitious a theme as can be devised — education, particularly in relation to the university. Now, devoting eight pages to the ideas of education is rather like seeing the world in a week. Inevitably, much remains unsaid and unseen.

The main purpose of such an issue, however, is not to ask all the questions and provide all the answers. Its value will be determined by the amount of interest and thought aroused. We are not setting absolute standards. Nor are we probably giving a fair presentation of all viewpoints. And we are more than willing to present the neglected facts in future issues.

Like everything else in the twentieth century, the concepts of education have undergone some radical changes. And the universities, in their more lumbering, conservative way, are being transformed to fit the brave new world.

The modern emphasis in education would seem to forsake ideas, for technique, education in favour of training, and this has been carried even to the doorsteps of the universities. No longer do the universities offer the undergraduate an opportunity to be educated, it has been pointed out, rather they tailor him for a career. The Spanish philosopher, Ortega y Gasset, suggests that the specialism being fostered today will produce no more than a race of barbarians.

But why the changes? Perhaps, the universities, after surviving the scorn and envy of a generation bred on Horatio Alger, have fallen prey to their successors. Bright, successful products of the rags to riches school, they seem to want to utilize the universities, to make them serve a "practical purpose".

But what is a "practical purpose?" Is an idea useful? Is a book practical? Surely ideas are the fuel for the machines; without them we would ultimately wear the machines out and have nothing to replace them with. The universities should, perhaps, foster the fuel and the institutes of technology train men to run the machines.

In the midst of all the technicism, the university student can still get himself an education. Maybe it is more of a challenge today, but it is still a possibility. While there are libraries and a few individuals, the student may still escape the bright golden claws of the society in which he has been bred.

"Certainly it is no part of the duty of a university to inculcate any particular philosophy of life. But it is its duty to assist its students to form their own philosophies of life so that they may not go out into the world maimed and useless."—Sir Walter Moberly—"The Crisis in the University".

QUO VADIS ?

The Issue: Past And Present

By THE REVEREND R. S. K. SEELEY
Provost of Trinity College

Fifty years ago it was not difficult for anyone entering the University to have a fairly clear conception of what their purpose was. There had been little change in the ancient established University tradition that it was a place of higher learning for the few where one either rounded one's education in order to take an intelligent place in society or embarked upon the necessary preliminaries of training for the professions of the Church, the Law, Medicine, etc. Universities were small and combined with liberal teaching an atmosphere of learning where one cultivated the mind by discussion and debate, interchange of opinion and a general sharpening of one's wits against those of the intellectual giants.

The twentieth century has seen a rapid growth of another concept of education which is inherent in the democratic traditions. To begin with, the scope of the professions has been considerably enlarged. Engineering, Dentistry, Forestry, the Social Sciences and a score of other fields of study have become professional fields. Furthermore, the sphere of leadership in society has been extended. Apart from the old classification of the professions, leadership was recruited largely from the landed gentry, most of whom had received a liberal education and were enabled to develop through experience in municipal and other offices the specialized knowledge enabling them to become competent legislators for the world of their day. In our day and age we look for, and find, leadership in industry and commercial life and can draw upon a far wider public to administer the affairs of the community. At the same time, our democratic outlook rejects the idea of education for the few and upholds the principle that what is valuable should be within the reach of all.

The other new factor which has entered the field of higher education has been the phenomenal development of scientific research. It is platitudinous to speak of ours as the scientific age, but the implications of that statement are of tremendous import. Scientific research has of course been a proper and honourable function of universities for generations, and these researches have been of inestimable benefit to the community. But true research must be free from demands made on it for utilitarian ends. The community at large looks to the universities as the obvious and natural sphere for the advancement of technological excellence. Thus the universities have become far more directly, integrated with the community than ever before and are expected to assume the role of industrial research centres and workshops as well as training grounds for leadership. The community demands not only human beings equipped with specialized knowledge but also ideas, processes and inventions to assist in raising the standard of living. The inevitable trend to regard the universities as the handmaids of industry is one to be guarded against and one which the scientists would be the first to repudiate.

All this amounts to a new conception of higher education and the role of the universities. They are now expected to perform three main functions:

(1) to raise the general level of education in the community,
(2) to train experts in a wide professional field,
(3) to provide leadership in the community.

The old university system, with its small numbers, its development of critical powers, its emphasis on balanced judgment and perspective and its stress on original thinking, was admirably equipped to discharge this third function. The new system of large, well-equipped universities in large centres of population with well-organized professional courses is designed to discharge the first two. The problem of our age is whether the same university can adequately discharge all three functions.

PROVOST SEELEY

In particular, does the availability of university education for large numbers, which is demanded by the first function, destroy that intimacy of the scholarly community which is necessary for the third function? Would the first function be better discharged by a reorganization of the school system and a fuller development of programmes of adult education? Would the second function more properly belong to technical institutes separate from universities? In other words, have universities, to put it vulgarly, bitten off more than they can chew? No one can yet give the answers to these questions. Undoubtedly if the functions were divided there would be considerable loss which might outweigh the gains. Possibly the University of Toronto with its federated system, its combination of Colleges, Faculties and Schools within a total community of learning, has the key to the solution of the problem. If it cannot be solved along these lines, though not necessarily under the present structure, it cannot be solved at all.

Ultimately the problem is one for the student. What does he want to get from the university, and is he able to get it? Quite clearly, at present many are floundering amid a complexity of conceptions of university life and are getting less than they expect, even though they do not know exactly what they expect. Whose fault is this? If it is inherent in the university structure, that structure must be changed. But it may lie in the students themselves who regard university education as a magic formula to transform them from school-boys and girls into mature men and women. A clearer picture of what they want to get would help them to get it. A job of interpretation needs to be done, partly by the universities themselves, partly by those who advise students at the high school level. The community itself also needs to know more clearly what it can legitimately expect from the universities. Discussion, clarification of ideas, groups of people drawn together from various sections of the community to think through these issues will do much to pilot us through this age of transition to a university system that is adapted to but not dictated by the particular problems and needs of a new age. For a university is never the product of its age. It must stand aside from it in some measure at least so that it can from the vantage point of perspective lead the thought, the culture, the social and economic structure of each and every age.

Why Are You Here ?

A LIBERAL EDUCATION

Education for the sake of education is an obsolete idea.

It is no reason at all to come to university just for the sake of getting educated. No one with this idea ever gets a thing out of university, for he has no realization of what education is and cares less. It's just a good place to waste some time with the rest of his friends.

Similarly anyone who comes to college for the purpose of getting sufficient training to make a lot of money or become a top executive fast is defeating the meaning and purpose of a university.

Yet these are the attitudes that prevail.

Both of them are but a reflection of the essentially superficial, standardized and practical character of our society. It comes out in a person, who is trying to break away from the materialism of his middle class environment, yet shamefacedly admits, making all kinds of excuses, that he is majoring in philosophy or modern history, for example.

What kind of living are you going to make from that? Such is the invariable question that follows!

What's the matter with our attitude and what exactly should the university be? For most people the idea of

> "That our universities have grave shortcomings for the intellectual life of this nation is by now a commonplace. The chief source of their inadequacy is probably the curse of departmentalization. Among students, as well as among teachers, there has been a tendency to regard courses as something which exist in nature, instead of artificial simplifications for the mastery of what are complicated organisms, whether of nature or reason or society,"—Felix Frankfurter in an introduction to "The Aims of Education" by Alfred North Whitehead.

searching for the truth and beauty, which will make you free, is little more than laughable. It means nothing.

But it no more than shows that our whole attitude to a university education is badly misshapen.

At one time a small minority were introduced to culture of the ages for the purposes of leadership either in church or state or other profession. Today our democratic attitude is education for the masses.

But it is more than that. It is getting enough knowledge to make a living and to hell with culture.

This is not to say that the university should be an ivory tower where a few students come to absorb culture for its own sake. Even Cardinal Newman, in writing on the concept of a university education, says that the university should be a place to train people to fill their respective roles of life more adequately, and to make them more intelligent, capable and active members of society.

Though this may be a general ideal we have, it is the last thing in the world that the universities are doing. There is nothing more useless, nor such a waste of effort and talent, as to have an ideal, but no means of achieving that ideal for the mass of people we want to educate.

Certainly we cannot say that our educational system, on whatever level, is doing the job it should. That is, it is not preparing our minds to comprehend the forces at work in our civilization, and to take some active part in the future of this civilization. But that is absolutely essential for a democratic society.

What is the matter and what can be done?

Think for a minute of what we are up against! First there is a preliminary educational system that does absolutely nothing to stimulate the mind. We learn facts and how to memorize them. But we have learned nothing of ideas, and have accepted the opinions of one individual as law on the subject.

Consequently we learn, in effect, nothing, because our minds have not been led along the paths of reflection, to pick up threads of the culture of our civilization and piece them together in our own minds.

In other words, we do not learn to think and search. Our minds are, in effect, dead. There is no individual effort made further than the immediate task of passing exams.

So what happens? We turn the university into a machine, just like high school.

And what else?

Education for a free society, that is liberal education, as it is ultimately conceived, consists primarily in grasping the fundamental concepts of our civilization's culture. Education, liberal in its true and only sense, is a comprehension of the forces at work in our world and how they came to be.

By understanding this development of ideas and attitudes, we can come to grips with our own world and use that knowledge to make a rational approach to problems before us. That is Arnold's concept of education as the search for the truth and beauty.

In other words, by reading, thinking, searching, and intercommunication, we are able to co-ordinate ideas into a coherent and unprejudiced philosophy. It is a synthesis of ideas built up from efforts to pick out the best from all thought.

Most important, the knowledge thus attained makes us amenable to various other points of view and to see how they fit into a comprehensive pattern.

Again this is what liberal education, or the search for the truth, aims at.

This is what the universities must do. But they can only provide the material for this search and offer directions. They cannot do the thinking for us. The whole value and worth of a university can be seen to the extent to which it promotes students to think, to take the tools the university has to offer and use them through their own initiative.

Robert Hutchins, former president of the University of Chicago, brings the issue to a concrete level when he says that education for freedom consists in transmitting to the rising generation the civilization in which they have inherited, together with the techniques by which it can be understood.

"As a liberal education helps to establish a free community, so it helps us to preserve it."

But that is not all. He asserts that technical training should only follow this solid grounding in the liberal arts education. And we will be better able to ... technical training even.

> "The justification for a university is that it preserves the connection between knowledge and the zest of life, by uniting the young and the old in imaginative consideration of learning. The university imparts information, but it imparts it imaginatively. At least, this is the function which it should perform for society. A university which fails in this respect has no reason for existence. This atmosphere of excitement, arising from imaginative consideration, transforms knowledge. A fact is no longer a bare fact: it is invested with all its possibilities. It is no longer a burden on the memory: it is energizing as the poet of our dreams, and as the architect of our purposes." — Alfred North Whitehead — "Universities and Their Function".

"The trained mind is by definition a mind that ... able to operate in all spheres and under all conditi ... If you are an educated person you will find t the liberal education represents the maximum co bution which the school can make toward the achie ment of this purpose."

Here Hutchins has presented the crux of the pr lem in education that lies on our shoulders today. T is what is needed to make education fulfill its funct

But obviously enough our minds are not being ori ed along these lines. The concept of the meaning purpose of education is in a shambles. We know l where we are going and seem to care less.

To live in a free society we must give that soc meaning to the individuals who compose it in a more considered manner than is now being shown.

Ralph Wino

The Question Is . . .

What we mean by liberal education must clearly be something that liberates and The question is how does it liberate? Its liberality cannot surely exist in handing out class privileges because that is not liberality at all. The liberating force in a science is the truth of that science. The thing that makes the study of literature liberal is the beauty of that literature. And it is from entering into the authority of that truth and beauty that the liberation comes. There is no other way to attain it.

I would go even further and say that apart from the church there is no other form of liberty of which society is capable. I should say that liberty in society is exclusively the setting up of the church and the university in the middle of that society, that as far as the university is concerned, disinterested pursuit of the arts and sciences, for their own sake, is the draft that draws the fire of freedom.

We ordinarily divide life into work and distraction. And we think that it is in distraction that we can do as we like.

I think that whenever two people get together to discuss the arts or the sciences disinterestedly, the university is theirs, and that vast open forum of free discussion in society which is the only freedom society has, constitutes the university in the larger sense.—Northrop Fry at the 1951 Carabin Banquet.

FREEDOM'S VIGILANTES

Subversive Iniquity

After hearing a successful young ...ness man accuse our univer... of harbouring communists who ...e so numerous as to comprise ...ninety per-cent of the student ...opulation," one considers it is ...more than coincidence when this ...ersuasion agrees with those of ...several others in the same posi... Many, if not most of those ...who are not well acquainted with ...the state of the university seem ...to support such an opinion.

This deluded belief in the om...potence of one of our campus ...roups finds expression in fore...ding advice and indignant out...bursts. A keen young freshman ...was recently warned that before ...long he would become a ranting ...radical, seeking the overthrow of ...our government. A supposedly ...intelligent man of affairs was ...heard saying that he would soon... deprive his son of a higher edu...cation than send him among the ...subversives at the University of ...Toronto.

Of greater significance are the ...dangerous attitudes which accom...pany these sentiments. A well-...meaning gentleman, shocked at ...the supposed dangers lurking on ...our campi, expressed these atti...tudes typically, "Why should we ...be forced, through taxes, to sup...port a school which encourages ...such people? Communism should ...be outlawed."

These vigilantes have doubtless... been moved to express such a ...wish by a sincere loyalty to our ...way of life. What they are do... is threatening one of our ...fundamental doctrines — intellec...tual freedom.

Intellectual freedom is the free...dom of the individual to thing for ...himself and to arrive at the truth, ...as he sees it, by means of his own ...mind and conscience. Our coun...try's constitution implies that ...there is to be no interference by ...any person or institution with a ...man's thoughts. The opinions of ...the majority are not to be forced ...on to the minority, even if the ma...jority sincerely believe that their ...opinions are truth. Intellectual ...freedom is not the freedom to think right thoughts, but to think any thoughts.

If this freedom is basic in a democracy, it is, if possible, of greater importance in a university. Our society looks to the university for leadership. Some of this leadership comes directly from the school itself when its associates make an important scientific discovery, produce a fresh economic theory, or state a new philosophy. Most of it is indirect and is to be found among the relatively few graduates who emerge with a breadth of vision which is so essential in good leadership. It is necessary that the members of university be given complete intellectual freedom if they are to be the visionaries which provide the best leadership.

Once those who are convinced of their own righteousness are allowed to silence those who are not in agreement, a precedent has been set which is a potential threat to all minorities. History has not always proved minorities to be correct, but their influence has often produced healthy compromise and progressive ideas.

The very men who wish to ban communism on the campus, justify themselves by arguing that communism forces the individual to conform to a pattern of behaviour and thought laid down by another. It is an ironic method of reasoning, for by asking that this group be destroyed, they are asking everyone to conform to their own theories. What guarantee do they give that they will not seek to destroy anything else which runs contrary to their own ideas of truth?

We may be smugly certain that nothing could limit our intellectual freedom here. Tradition is too strong we say.

The University Tests Act of 1871 abolished limitation of religious freedom at Oxford and Cambridge, and this has become a precedent in all other schools of any worth. But we need only look southward to see examples of a break with traditional freedom, and in "schools of worth", too.

The Texas legislature recently voted for the expulsion of a university professor who described our economic system as decadent. These self-righteous politicians also cut the salary of the State University Chancellor who refused to comply with that order.

The Board of Regents of the University of California lately attempted to force its faculty to sign a loyalty oath in a misguided struggle to preserve freedom. The court which discussed this action significantly described the attempt as subversive, a word usually limited to use in reference to the object of their distrust. Said the court: "Equal to the danger of subversion from without by means of force and violence in the danger of subversion from within by the gradual whittling away and disintegration of the very pillars of our freedom."

There is a weakness in this negative approach which smacks of defeatism. If we are not in agreement with the doctrines of a group on our campus, we have the right to speak out against it. We may approach it positively and counter disagreeable ideas with arguments of our own. If our own are strong enough, and "right" enough, we will achieve better affects than would the outlawing of an undesirable group.

The attitude on our campus seems to be that if a student appears at a meeting of the Christian pacifists, the liberals, the communists, or the anthropologists he is necessarily one of them. It is almost inconceivable that anyone should attend in order to disagree with them.

If we remain content in our lethargic attitude and listen calmly while irate citizens demand the banning of minority schools of thought on our campus, then we may expect to accompany the plunge which will carry us to the position where others will decide what we may think. The leadership of the university, on which our society depends, will be fraudulent if we allow the destruction of the inquisitive, unbridled, individual mind.

Carl Mollins

BEFORE COLLEGE

The Weaning Process

Education, from the Latin "to bring up", was to the ancients a process of developing the powers of body and mind by proper instruction.

In the present Canadian educational system, the method of teaching pure fact by means of recitation and compulsion has been discarded. We have accepted the supervised system of "trial and error situations" . . . where a child is presented with a maze of situations in which he will first fail, but be stimulated to try again with ultimate success. The practice of this theory overshadows formal learning in our public schools.

After eight or nine years of this influence, the child who has successfully adjusted himself to the standard of social behaviour set by the educationalists, and who has incidentally acquired a few scattered pieces of knowledge about Javanese tapioca growers or the diet of the arctic seal, enters high school. In the next few years he is fed a hodge-podge of fact dressed up in the form of pictures, movies, radio and television. This is designed to inform the child concerning any field which he may meet.

The noun "child" is still used because this is the level to which the information is geared. Naturally when a teen-ager is given responsibility at this point the results are often disasterous hence verifying the objections so often raised when the high school age group ask for more liberty.

Pre-university education, as described, is not always the case. But this generalization is a valid one. The result of such education is a group of people who (with some exceptions) have not been stimulated to larger realms of thought and action, have not been adjusted to their environment; in short, have not been educated. Rather they have been adapted to, in knowledge and action, the mean of the group. This may be good or bad.

For the advancement of civilization, we must have a generation of inquiring minds; for a stable, secure, mediocre civilization we need not. Or in Matthew Arnold's words, "The impulses toward action, help and beneficence; the desire for removing human error, clearing confusion, removing misery; the noble aspiration to leave the world better and happier than we found it . . . can only be stimulated by knowledge and activated by self-discipline.

By generalization of the courses, and by the elimination of the bulk of material which was covered fifty years ago, the subject matter in school has become over-simplified, invalid fact. Students are given only a Reader's Digest version of the fascinating development through which our culture has already past.

Along with the elimination of the bulk of learning, the responsibility created by home-work, and the responsibility of searching for information for one's self have been omitted. Only by the self-dicipline which such responsibility requires and teaches, can the activation of thoughts and motions be transmitted.

So far we have commented on pre-university education in relation in institutions of a formal nature. But education has much broader connotations, and the goals, if not the methods, of our ideal system must be the same in every phase of the child's environment.

Our present day regurgitations of the "masters" in the comic books and the motion pictures, the increasing influence of radio and video, and the one-sided presentation of religion by individual sects, are all geared to leave a regimentation of ideas with their audience. Not only is this propaganda limited in its scope, but it does not necessitate thought on the part of its recipients — students massed on the production line.

While it would be unfair to design primary and secondary education programmes specifically for those students who subsequently enter university, by presenting a stimulus for knowledge and by training in self-discipline it would be possible to develop the maximum ability of each student. In this way the individual would be better "tuned to reality" regardless of the field he pursues.

To Walk Alone

It has been suggested that university education is our society is education for a free society. Accepting that statement at its face value, it is apparent that the most important freedoms that concern us here are those of thought and discussion. At a time when those freedoms are being threatened, it becomes imperative to worry about higher education. Current trends toward conformity of thought present a "clear and present danger" to our intellectual freedom, and it is the duty of any university to lead the attack on these undermining influences.

The proper objective of education, to use the words of Principal Jeanneret, should be, "learning how to think, rather than what to think." In order to be able to contribute his best to society, the individual must, to a considerable extent, first be freed from society. By that I mean that he must learn to think independently of society, rather than blindly follow its prevailing opinions. To quote Principal Jeanneret again, "The ability to thing for yourself, to walk alone, was never more needed than in this period of propaganda and mass thinking." The prime purpose of education is to assist the individual to develop his own intellectual potentialities to the fullest possible extent, and this, of course, is a task which the individual himself must accomplish. It cannot be "taught" to him.

Does the organization of the University of Toronto lend itself to assisting the student in striving for this goal? In many respects, present trends are detrimental to this attempt. For example, the priority of purposes for which funds are spent is to be deplored. Money has been alocated for enlarging the stadium and for the more "practical" science departments — for "defence" or, in other words, for destructive purposes — to the great disadvantage of the library, the humanities, and the social sciences. The idea of a double standard of salaries in favour of the professional faculties was the most frightening suggestion of all.

Other common practices also tend to hamper the real purpose of higher education. These are the examination system and its concomitant, the spirit of competition for standing. The only type of competition that should be welcomed in a university is the competition of ideas. It is in this realm that this university is seen in its best light. The multiplicity of departments teaching essentially the same subjects from different and even opposing points of view, and the existence of the separate federated colleges, awaken in the student the realization that truth cannot be monopolized. With this realization the individual must fall back on his own abilitiy to think, and this, to repeat, is the true purpose of education. There can be no conviction more valuable to anyone than conviction after doubt.

Indeed, one may even go so far as to say that in an age such as ours of "propaganda and mass thinking", the truly educated man is the skeptic. The University of Toronto provides many opportunities to the student to create this "skepticism", but it is obvious, and at the same time regrettable, that too few students want to take advantage of these facilities.

Horace Krever.

The Missing Root

Over the arch of Victoria College, carved in the fading stone are the words "The Truth Shall Make You Free." Strangely enough these words are only a half-truth, the inference minus the premise: "You Shall Know the Truth." Whatever its many functions, "to know the truth" is the University's foremost task.

Yet in our advancing agnostic age, that word "truth" has all but lost its meaning, and "freedom" runs not far behind. The terms have become hollow, not by a twist of laguage or a quirk of accent, but by the fact that we talk in a time of hollow men. Poet T. S. Eliot's dictum of the roaring twenties still holds as we turn to 1952 and the role of religion in the University.

At the University of Toronto, the branches of our motto "Velut Arbor Aevo", are hard put to flourish when its roots are cut and its trunk hollow, and its leaves are fluttering in "know-how" and "know-what", but rarely in "know-where" or "know-why." A creeping paralysis sets in when the root of the tree is cut. Death comes slowly and gradually, not suddenly. So dies the tree of truth if it loses its religious root.

Dr. Mortimer Adler of the University of Chicago sees the seats of higher learning empty of absolutes. He says the University has thinned its curricula to a new materialism, or "scientism", which turns morals and religion to dust, all with the result that the campus resounds with ethically sterile words like "scientific", "objectivity", and "ideology", but is unresponsive to value terms like "right", "wrong", "justice", "conscience", and "ideals". The only key to open the door to Truth is the current fashion: "Nothing is either good or bad but thinking makes it so." We search now for relativity in truth, and absolutes have fallen by the way.

Narrowed by faculty division and overflowing calendars, we fall into the pose of experts, specialists who knew "more and more about less and less." Robert Hutchins, president emeritus of the University of Chicago, sees education as split into fields in which "chemists could not speak to lawyers, and hardly anyone was speaking to God, where everything was a matter of opinion and each opinion as important as every other."

At the University of Toronto, those colleges concerned with religion, its components of ethic and ends, Trinity, Victoria and St. Michael's and their theological counterparts are verily "islands unto thesmselves", not so much by geography,, but by practice. Confronted by this insularity of the "church colleges" with their dogmatic divergences and split-hair conventions, the undergrad who looks for the security of an absolute, a Truth that is "there," searches in vain, and turns to the unity and embracing arms of Bali'u'lah.

We of the 20th Century are skeptics of what's what in life. Everything is propaganda, and we live with a closed mind. Closed because we are afraid. We are hollow. Youth in the University is kept intoxicated in activity without reflection on just what this push for knowledge has to do with life. And as Schweitzer aptly pricks the spirit of our time: "We wander hither and thither in the gathering dusk unformed by any definite theory of the universe, like harmless drunken mercenaries." I do not propose the University should be a propaganda post. It should be a community in search of Truth, but so long as it dwells on means and foregoes ends, its members decay to hollow men.

Biology it seems has a monopoly on Beginning and Theology on the End. But what of the vast course between the two? We cannot come to know the Truth until there is intercourse between the faculties, that interplay and exchange of minds. There must be talk. Without the feeding and feed-back of thought we cannot communicate, and unless we communicate, we cannot share the search for Truth.

As one University graduate puts it: "College gave us spokes, but no hub. We came away with knowledge, but no purpose, and therein is our dilemma." There are students who are serious about world problems, and still others whose self-security is their chief concern. Many strain their eyes to scan the horizon to catch the wider view, probably more deserve the label "blind followers of empty slogans."

While others strive to break the vicious circles of prejudice and prestige, others with fawning conformity follow the customs of the clan. While some are on the spiritual alert feeling for faith in the ground of Truth, others rest inert in sleep, in darkness "not of woods only and the shade of trees." Bagpipes and Ruts

If there is ever a revolution in Canada the odds are against its being started at the University of Toronto. The motto of the Toronto students would appear to be "blessed in the status quo" or "doubt not and ye will pass."

Conformity in itself has many good qualities. It is nice to know that your fellow students are expected to, roughly, follow a code of ethics and are bound by social conventions to act in fairly predictable ways. After all it would be practically impossible to have a lecture where any student who felt like singing or practising on the bagpipes could drown out the professor.

But conforming can be carried to extremes. There is a big difference between conforming blindly to a situation because it is part of the rules of the game and conforming to a situation but at the same time questioning the reason for your actions. Too many students seem to have forgotten the importance of asking "why, where, what, how."

Both our schools and the university can share the credit for producing such docile automatons. The whole emphasis in our system of education is placed on passing exams, period. Exams are necessary in the sense that they provide a definite, impersonal standard whereby the University can grant degrees, but they tend to force the student to learn definite, authoritative statements and to accept the information necessar to pass the exam as being true in an absolute sense. The result is often a parrot-like repetition of facts without consideration and university graduates who have not received a university education.

In a speech on the topic of education at the University of Toronto, Warden Ignatieff told the Carabins from Montreal that a wide diversity in subjects and in professors was possible at this university because of the tolerance allowed in a university where truth is sought for its own sake. He said further that any professor who accepted the ideals of the University should be allowed academic freedom as long as he did not propagandize by claiming that his personal opinions were the truth.

In the United States particularly, and in other countries including Canada as well, many University governors and politicians do not believe that the students should be exposed to radical thinkers. Apparently they do not feel that university students are capable of judging what is "colored" and "slanted" in what a professor says, even though the students are warned to question whether the professor is right.

The reasons given for removing a professor are usually that when tolerance of radicals may be all right in theory, we are engaged in a "cold war" and cannot afford to take chances. This attitude could be described as curtailing our freedom to save our freedom, with no definite promise that we will not lose so much of our freedom that it will not be worth saving. Let the hysteria mount higher and fear increase, then we might easily find ourselves a lot closer to 1984 that we would be prepared to admit.

Perhaps the solution to the problem is a School of Radical Studies where doubt is encouraged and radicals can examine and criticize without worrying about politicians or police. If this school could turn out one modern Jonathan Swift or Charles Dickens it would be equal value then some of our larger faculties and schools. At last the results would be more interesting.

Harold Nelson

"We must take it as an unavoidable fact, that God has so made the world that there are more topics desirable for knowledge than any one person can possibly acquire. It is hopeless to approach the problem by the way of enumeration of subjects which every one ought to have mastered. There are too many of them, all with excellent title-deeds." — Alfred North Whitehead — "The Rhythmic Claims of Freedom and Discipline".

"The spirit of generalization should dominate a University. The lectures should be addressed to those to whom details and procedures are familiar; that is to say, familiar at least in the sense of being so congruous to pre-existing training as to be easily acquirable. During the school period the student has been mentally bending over his desk; at the University we should stand up and look around." — Alfred North Whitehead—"The Rhythm of Education".

Bull Session

TABLE DOWN AT MOREY'S

Winter has suddenly attacked us in full force over the weekend. And as usual, I am in retreat. Tonight, arriving on the dark, quiet, chilly campus to write this, my first thought was to flee to the succor of the Hart House Shop. But it is late and Sunday besides. If Hart House were open, as on weekdays, there would be a cup of steaming coffee to thaw out the frozen extremities, and if any congenial souls were about, perhaps warming sips of learning might accompany the process of restoration.

The Hart House tuck shop has often been upheld by student sages as the place where more education is gained than in any lecture-room or lab. This may only prove that our student sages are essentially romantic at heart. But on a city campus like ours, it is the tuck shops, and the pubs, and the Morey's where education can be gleaned. Falling back on the John Dewey idea, "participation" is the essence of the process of being educated.

We are exposed to lecturers which tend to be one-way affairs. We sit and perhaps absorb. At any rate we take notes, especially on things that might end up as questions on the final exams. But how much do we think about what we are being exposed to?

"We are letting our studies interfere with our education." This statement from a letter to The Varsity this fall has been tossed about in the Hart House tuck shop and in the Chez Paree. What Walt Stewart said has struck a chord among many. It is not an original idea, of course, but Stewart has said it at a very ripe moment.

THE BOGEY OF EXAMS

We are too terrified by exams. We are too stifled by essays and assignments. "Read books? I haven't got time; I've got too much work to do." This is not a rare alibi, it is sounded often in the Tuck Shop, on the front campus, and on the Philosopher's Walk.

Because of the exams on which everything depends, our classes are punctuated by questions about whether this or that will be on the exam. We are too concerned with May to be able to think in November. Some lecturers have been known to give classes a blueprint of the exams to come. Exams are a "necessary evil". We have to get by them.

Essays have come under the same sort of treatment. How many of us write "original" essays? Isn't it much easier to parrot ideas back from lecture notes, and the references handed down by the professors? Easier perhaps to find an earlier essay on the same topic and rewrite it to fit the current mold. And why not? There is so little time to do the research and the thinking for an essay. Unless we spend all our time in lectures, reference reading and assignments, most of us are unable to do much more than take a hasty sideswipe at essays because the deadline draws near. And do not many professors treat the essays only as work done, rather than examine them for quality? Perhaps all of us are faced with the problem of not having enough hours in the day.

But exams and essays are absolutely necessary. How else would a student's progress be measured? The university is too large, we are only examination numbers in the final analysis

Only in the graduate field are orals and theses the basic measurements of education. But how many of us who can pass exams handily are capable of facing up to a rigorous oral? In other words, how many of us know anything, even if we can pass examinations?

In the six or eight weeks from the end of March to the middle of May, all education stops. We memorize and summarize instead. We study exam questions so that we can at least plan out an attack on the exams. If we do not pass exams, our university existence runs down.

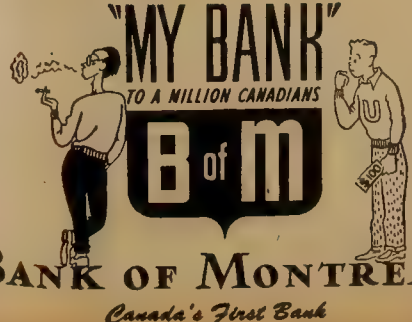
OFF-CAMPUS EDUCATION



On the senior year and graduate level, particularly in honor courses, the Seminar looms importantly even if infrequently. One student suggestion of the ideal educational method is to expose a small group of students to a discussion between two professors. This is not the tutor-led group idea, but that the men would talk and discuss, and perhaps after a baffling introductory phase, the students would begin to catch on. This is an impractical idea to put into force because of reasons of economy if nothing else. But in a small way, it is even being practised by a few enterprising men on this campus.

The discussion is the essence of education. And even in lectures, the digression often is the true bit of education. But are we patient enough, especially with the spectre of passing exams hovering near, to want to indulge in the digression? Or do we feel somewhat unhappily that there are quirks of particular professors that have to be suffered?

A party, held in an apartment where parents will not ring the curfew, can be an educative Morey's. Bull sessions, with beer in hand, and some thought and ideas to toss about can be education. Even if this is punctuated by an obvious and direct interest in an obliging and fundamental young blonde, the atmosphere can lead to an exchange and re-examination of ideas, others and yours.

I have talked about the failings of the university to provide for the educative process. Perhaps the most important thing is that anyone claiming a right to that kind of education, must have something to contribute himself. At least he must be armed with some thinking or experience. Otherwise, no matter how many opportunities for discussion and participation are provided, whether formally on the campus, or informally until three a.m. off-campus, there would be little education.

STREETCAR COLLEGE

The Degree

Is ours a "streetcar university"? Do we come to university just for facts or to learn to be useful parts of a community and intelligent components of a free society?

The ideal, we feel, would be the latter alternative. Education is not just the assimilation of knowledge, but the attainment of wisdom: the learning of how to use those facts to make this world a better place to live in. But the situation is that an embarrassingly large proportion of students at the University of Toronto are coming just for the sake of the degree — or the social contacts — or the prestige of being able to call themselves, with just the slightest shade of superiority, John Canuck, BA.

Ours is a city university. It is sprawled out over a large and incoherent area. It is also organized — or disorganized — under the affiliated college system. These are two strong causes for a deplorable effect: a lack of communication among colleges, faculties and department.

The Engineers don't know how Trinity lives, except in caricature, and the Trinity man's idea of the Engineer is just as stereotyped. Lack of communication between the Science and Arts Faculties is readily granted. But lack of communication among the Arts Colleges themselves exists just as much.

It exists primarily because of the old bear of student apathy. The complaint is that a student going into university has a large variety of activities to choose from — probably close to fifty. In his first year he may plunge into five or six of them, until he realizes that it is more than flesh can bear. Or, he may find the effort of choice too much for him and slink into an academic shell right from the start.

Either way, finally the vast bulk of extra-curricular activities proves overwhelming. The result is apathy, except in the cases of a few well-balanced and more enlightened individuals who stick to their guns and take leadership and active participation in one or two carefully chosen activities. But the sad majority are stumped.

When students are not properly orientated in their own colleges and faculties, it is an unlikely hope that there will be much communication with others.

The large sprawling city university is at a disadvantage, first of all for geographic reasons. The college town setup for an institution of higher learning is ideal, in that it brings students closer together, making the college more central to their lives. In a system where students know each other well, communication and apathy present no problem.

But students have their own interests before they come to college. In Toronto, a city university, with many students living at home, it is very easy to maintain these private interests. They don't mix with other students. Ideas don't get tossed around as much as they should, and when they are, they reach a smaller percentage of the students. The chance to meet others with common interest on the campus and to develop new interests is almost nullified.

The University of Toronto, then, is far from the ideal. Here, most of us do not learn the valuable lessons of living in a democratic community and a free society which the university should offer. Too many introverts and nonentities are being mass-produced. University seems to be, with the majority, a business instead of a life. It is only somewhere to spend the dreary hours between nine and five, in lecture-devouring the study. It is nothing less than a waste of the best opportunity that life will ever offer.

The Students' Administrative Council made an abortive attempt this year, in its Freshmen Orientation Program, to "get 'em young": an effort to show first year students that university can mean more to them than the limits of their chosen course and the individuals in it. Unfortunately, lack of co-ordination made the program rather a flop. But it is an idea that, if properly effected, could go a long way toward breaking down college barriers, and making students aware that the university is more than the classroom.

Elinor Strangways.

"Imagination is a contagious disease. It cannot be measured by the yard, or weighed by the pound, and then delivered to the students by members of the faculty. It can only be communicated by a faculty whose members themselves wear their learning with imagination."— Alfred North Whitehead —"Universities and their Function".

Of Activity

The strong traditions of localism and sectarianism which surround the federated colleges here pull against, and ever appear to be defeating the efforts of that noble band, the SAC, which attempts to organize activities with an appeal on a university-wide basis. Even at the south end of the campus, where it would appear, judging from the pretentious vociferations, there is a pseudo-worship of Bacchus, little desire is to be found for a confraternity of interest with their fellows to the north.

Regionalism remains the key-note of the campus and it is highly unlikely that any signficant inroads will be made by the efforts of those reluctant to accept the fact. Add to this the existence of Hart House, with its social and cultural offerings to a restricted group, and the lack of coordination of the organization of extra-curricular activities is readily apparent.

In a limited field, the SAC has been able to attract participants on a campus-wide scale. But activities which fall in this category are mainly cultural or charitable. The Blue and White Society, champion of the "rah-rah" spirit has had, since its inception as "Joe Potts' baby", only negligible success in creating a varsity spirit. In fact, there have been many exponents of infanticide! This year these exponents were partially successful when they got the pep rallies abolished because they were becoming a real menace to the good name of the University.

These pep rallies, football games, campus shows, which consist of little else than a confusion of noise and motion should not impress the thoughtful student as having much value. Too many such events tend to widen the regrettable gap between students and faculty. It appears that there is a great reluctance on the part of many members of the staff to take the initiative in becoming active participants in the extra-curricular events with which the campus abounds. University students are no longer children, but then they are not quite adults.

They are bewildered by the bludgeonings of adolescence and are struggling to grow up. They yearn to live easily with their fellows and to resolve their ethical confusions. Most students are probably conscious of their short-comings in the social graces and in their ability to put forward an idea clearly and simply. Yet they refuse to put forth the necessary effort required to take advantage of the opportunities for the elimination of some of their difficulties, which the various clubs and societies offer. Yet it is unfortunately true that the many opportunities for eliminating these difficulties offered by the clubs and societies are spurned by the majority of students in the various colleges and faculties.

The result is that most often, only a few are are steady, dependable adherents to the club, and through a natural process these few become the executive and spend most of their time trying, with varying degrees of vigour, to regiment enthusiasm for their program.

It may be that there is among the great majority of University students a preoccupation with ideas of self-advancement which leads to a view that extra-curricular activity is a thief of time. In this respect, self-advancement is sought in terms which are probably too self-centred and too concerned with the Horatio Alger motive of "onward and upward."

This attitude prevents a realization that only part of the process of becoming educated takes place in the lecture room, laboratory, and library. Too late, most students will realize that society demands attributes in the university graduate which can only be acquired by a proper balancing of interest, academically and extra-curricularly.

Extra-curricular activity such as is available on the campus provides such attributes in the form of improved ability in personal and group human relations and in the improved facility of cooperation amiably with others. This means ability to undertake leadership, and also be an effective follower. It means the ability to communicate effectively in both written and oral speech. It means, most important of all, that the student shall gain enough self-knowledge to have confidence and security in his own sense of adequacy of his powers in social and business relationships.

We should realize that we are not at university solely to get what we can in terms of self, in terms of economic advancement, and in terms of grave psychological separation from the background out of which we have come. The words of Edwin Markham, in a simple and homely fashion, testify to this ideal:

> "We are not blind until we see
> That in the human plan,
> Nothing is worth the making
> That does not make the man.
> Why build these cities glorious,
> If man unbuilded goes?
> In vain we build the world unless,
> The builder also grows."

The fast, smooth writing pencil—easy on the hand, no push, no effort. Makes clean, definite marks. Rubber eraser in strong metal ferrule with double yellow bands. 8 degrees from 2B to 4H.

"ELDORADO"

The master drawing pencil, made with Typhonite leads. The first choice of artists, engineers, and draftsmen everywhere. Makes sharp, crisp, even lines, every time—without crumbling. Made in 17 degrees from 6B to 9H.

"THINEX"

Here are colored pencils that really sharpen up. Thin leads of smooth, even texture and surprising strength, with points that stand up. Made in 24 permanent moisture-proof pastel shades.

Descartes Said :

SCIENCE IS TO DOUBT

Cultural Suicide

How many mechanical engineers does it take to make a poet?

A pretty silly question you say? Maybe; but in some ways it points out one of the problems that a modern, scientific world has created. It is a problem particularly evident in the modern university.

Those who begin to saw away on the old log about the sciences and professions not really being a part of the university, those who demand or request or suggest that they should be isolated or at least recognized for what they are ("technical schools"), miss the point.

Science, its study and practice, is an essential part of twentieth century existence. That such study and practice, and all the excesses it has led to, should be part of the modern university is in no way surprising. Indeed, it is probably inevitable that the sciences and professions should have assumed the place they have in the modern university. In many cases the sciences have become the be-all, the end-all, the justification.

Science produces the doers, the practical men, the boys who build dams and bridges, the men who mend bodies, the specialists who grow trees. These men and women are working out certain ideas in terms of their serious practical values. That is something the society can understand fairly easily. If you look at comparative salary lists of those who get paid for the services they render you will soon find that the doers are in demand. They supply what the society wants, in the same way that practical men in any age have commanded a high price.

This is only part of the picture, of course. But these practical effects of science have had a far-reaching effect on the university. We construct more buildings to house laboratories than libraries. Or people. We exalt the practical man of science, even though his values have lately come under close scrutiny.

Because the world is more interested in good plumbing than beautiful literature (for example) we are ordinarily willing to spend a great deal more money and time building ourselves highly paid, highly important, technical crews, than in creating those conditions in our universities where a man may study certain abstract ideas and notions of ideas which might fit him to take long, slow, intelligent looks inside men's hearts.

This has led to a serious problem for scientist and society alike. We are presently training men to be specialists, super-specialists, men who have been able to gain some more or less complete grasp of a small area selected from the vast ocean of potential knowledge.

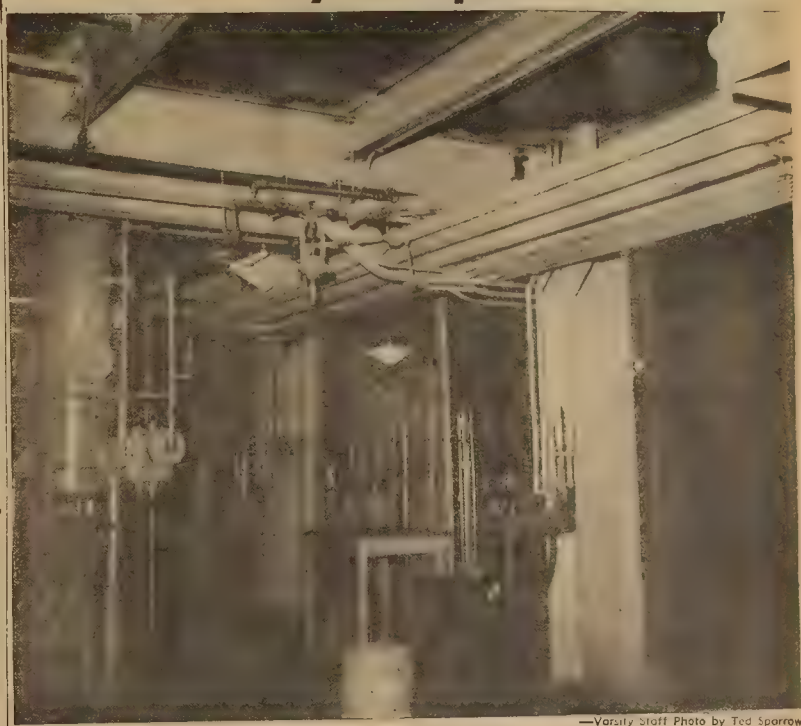
We are not turning out very many "well-rounded" young men. And it shows—moral values are in such a confused state that few young people have any real idea of just where they can start in on life. It is almost axiomatic that a brilliant man in one field can become naive, almost absurd, when he steps outside it. (Or have you missed some of the stories about scientists charged with being "communist"?) The man with a wide grasp of human development, and with the ability to find his way through the overpowering forces created by the wide body of knowledge we collectively possess, is rare. Often he is hamstrung by the mistrust, suspicion, or outright antagonism of a mass of men who can not, and will not, grasp these same ideas and concepts with a similar degree of understanding.

And here we may begin to get some inkling of an answer to our original silly question. It is relatively simple, when you come right down to it: you don't make poets out of mechanical engineers. And you don't train poets, or create the conditions under which they can exist, grow, perhaps even thrive, when too much value is placed on the scientific in your educational systems.

"It has come to be an imminent problem, one which mankind can no longer evade, to invent a technique adequate to cope with the accumulation of knowledge now in our possession. Unless some practicable way is found to master this exuberant growth, man will eventually become its victim. On top of the primitive forest of life we would only add the forest of science, whose intention was only to simplify the first. If science has brought order into life we shall now have to put science in order, organize it—seeing that it is impossible to regiment science—for the sake of its healthy perpetuation. To this end we must vitalize science; that is, we must provide it with a form compatible with the human life which and for which it was made in the first place. Otherwise—for there is no use to entrench ourselves behind a vague optimism—otherwise science will cease to function; mankind will lose interest in it."—Ortega y Gasset—"Mission of the University".

Or, to get right out on the windswept end of our limb: a culture while it may find in science answers to many of its problems and questions, is not exclusively concerned with science. A culture has to do with the men who are part of it. And when you begin, in your education institutions to abstract to the point where a student can forget the culture in favour of an aspect of it, then you create men unable to deal with issues and ideas lying outside their narrow specialization.

You commit cultural suicide.



Science has made the world a more comfortable place to live in. It has pushed back the frontiers of ignorance in sweeping dramatic ways. It is a method toward a completer understanding, or more adequate knowledge of our world. It holds out potentials which almost swamp the imagination.

But science is not sufficient justification for the excesses it has led to. Increasing specialization, the sloughing off of intellectual responsibility, the production of men and women who might be said to be living outside their culture, and all the dangers that lie in such attitudes, these excesses need to be strongly dealt with.

Until they are, the university (including Toronto) is not doing its job.

MARSHALL H. McLUHAN
Professor of English, St. Michael's College

"The report of the Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences" contains no surprises. Royal Commissions are, of course, a principal form of Canadian culture. If somebody totally ignorant of Canada were asked what a Victorian colony would be likely to think about cultural matters in the Marconi Era he could pretty well provide the profile sketched by the Massey report.

Immigrant humility paralyzes Canadian perception, so that native energies can only find full expression in areas remote from official conceptions of "culture." Walt Disney is our only contribution to world culture, a fact which recalls to mind that more than a century ago European audiences were addicted to American frontier wit and fantasy. Edgar Poe's technical inventiveness revolutionized European art, and Pound and Eliot have advanced what Poe began.

In fact, colonies and provinces on the periphery of a core culture have always tended to be prolific in racial inventions in the arts and sciences. Unsettled modes of existence call constantly on resourcefulness and encourage sharpness of observation. So that when the social anthropologists turn to Canada they will give special attention to the cultural contribution of the Massey-Harris Farm Implement industries to unique solutions to a new way of life. Looking at the present Massey Report, they will deplore a conception of culture which forbade the Commission to consider Walt Disney or ice-hockey as Canadian culture, and which, in fact, relegates culture to a "blue law" area. In this way "Culture" becomes attached to the realm of moral obligation and is thus deprived of all spontaneous impulse. Culture is transferred from the intelligence to the will. The consequent anaemia which invades the body of "the humanities" was far advanced in that Victorian England which still provides us with our archetypes of the "higher" things. For English Canada acquired its concepts of culture from England at a most unfortunate time. French Canada is similarly indebted to nineteenth century France. But that period of French life was, in the arts, as magnificently first-rate as the Victorian period was moralistic and uninventive.

Technological change, in short, had upset the balance of English society by 1850, producing a large degree of moral, intellectual, and emotional "illiteracy" which amounted to a critical break-down of communication at all social levels. This situation was faced by Arnold in Culture and Anarchy. But Arnold's report on culture in England while deploring the "besetting faith in machinery" was based on no analysis of the changes that had actually occurred. Had he had the insights and tools of analysis employed by a Siegfried Giedion in Mechanization Takes Command, Arnold might not have fallen into the trap of moralizing about the plight of culture in terms of an antecedent situation. He might have substituted precise diagnosis for moral alarm and exhortation. He might even have seen that the arts, at first banished to an ivory tower by an industrial age, were goin, for good or ill, to transform the ivory tower into a control tower with the help of the very technology which had begun by being so unfriendly to them.

PROFESSOR McLUHAN

Very little reflection will serve to establish that esthetic experience on this continent, as contrasted with Europe, has technically been acquired not from contemplation and analysis of linguistic and plastic forms but from landscape. And the landscapes of this continent are at once a challenge to ingenuity and a promise of power. The eventual control of the geography has brought into existence a great variety of roads, vehicles, factories, and dams which are themselves the main objects of esthetic appeal to young and old. So that our central esthetic satisfactions are related to the precise contours of engineered objects which must be regarded as works of collective art as much as a newspaper or a movie.

Yet all these objects, as well as the human organization necessary for their creation and maintenance, are officially regarded as non-cultural. And the humanities, as such, are fenced off from these vulgar and popular concerns. Nobody, therefore, can question "the plight of the humanities." The wonder is that anybody can be induced to feel any concern for the plight of so insignificant an entity. For the real plight of the humanities is not the result of ungrateful neglect by benevolent foundations, but is due to their having been cut off from all nutriment to the culture they inhabit. And this starvation is not owing to lack of food but to an inner failure of the assimilative process.

A little historical perspective serves to suggest that the humanities have most flourished when they have provided the skills indispensible to practical careers. The Greek sophists established that encyclopedic training in the arts, and especially in eloquence, which became the royal road to political power. Cicero was in their tradition, and through St. Augustine Ciceronian conceptions of speech culture were cultivated not only during the Dark and Middle ages but during the Renaissance. But the traditions of linguistic discipline were maintained by the Church for the very practical consideration that Scriptural exegesis and pulpit eloquence were built on the same base upon which Cicero had developed the career of the orator.

At the Renaissance the printing press gave the entire program greater vitality by the new possibility of transferring eloquence and literary skill to the unexploited vernaculars. And from the fifteenth to the twentieth centuries the humanities have depended on the careers made possible by literary training as projected by the printed word. But we have now come to the end of the Gutenberg era owing to the advent of a variety of audio-visual forms of communication. And for some decades even the character of printed words has profoundly altered because of changes in the aims and methods of printed communication.

So that there is no question but that the centuries-old literary basis of the humanities is so far disestablished by current developments that the real problem of humanists is to decide how much the values associated with their disciplines can be cultivated in a revolutionary situation. In practise that means that humanists to survive must make themselves indispensable to the dominant new culture. For both the origin and the continuance of the humanities have depended on that; and with no cynical asperity it must be said that no other possibility exists. Thus English has quite recently supplanted Latin and Greek as the general humanistic discipline because our business and professional world still demands a modicum of literary proficiency. But the tape-recorder, for example, has begun to whittle down even that area of demand.

Perhaps it is time to reflect that the values of civilization cannot be said to depend on either the printed word or on literary skill. To argue that they do would, on the one hand, unduly depress the claims of other times before printing to be regarded as civilized; and, on the other hand, would be to adopt an unnecessary despondency view of current actualities. However, it can be argued that civilization depends on the human dialogue of which all past and present audio-visual mechanisms of communication are only specialized derivatives. And to the dialogue the humanist has necessarily to address himself as a technological age enfolds the great audience in passive sleep and entertainment. The tower of sleep or Babel is the negative feature of our culture against which the humanist must struggle as those lost in snow and cold.

But there are many positive features of the new culture which command astonishing vistas for those who can keep awake. The mistake is to suppose that either alertness or immunity to the new situations is to be purchased by regarding these developments as merely deplorable or vulgar. The humanist has either to enter technological culture as a new patrimony, to be transformed from within, or else to accept the sentence of effacement. That is, he cannot maintain antecendent values except by unprecedented modes of activity. But the new culture will accept the old values when they are presented in technical terms. Ours is an intellectual age as much as the period of medieval scholasticism which was also unfriendly to the humanities (from the twelfth to the fifteenth century) and, therefore, it does not take kindly to the moralistic wrappings in which the humanities were involved in the past century. So that the arts must now be restored to their formal technical basis if they are to reciver their appeal and function in a tecnnological age.

It is the merit of the Massey Report that it focusses a variety of the new developments with reference to Canadian life, albeit with the hope that Ottawa will establish a Maginot Line to protect our Victorian values.

These notes, however, are not intended as a review of the contents of the Massey Report but only as an indication of its unrealistic assumptions about the nature of culture and social communication. Therapy based on a mistaken or inadequate diagnosis will merely contribute to our present discontents.

The Games's The Thing? Wherein To Pass!

Three basketball players from Bradley College in Peoria, Illinois were given suspended sentences recently for accepting brides. They had been charged with agreeing to take $1,500 each to fix a game between Bradley and Bowling Green University in Madison Square Garden in March 1949.

Judge Saul Strait, in his decision, laid most of the blame for these men breaking the law on the college. "The three players were corrupted and demoralized by a system which set athletic success above education," he charged.

Judge Strait went on to whiplash the university for allowing the players to take degree credit in courses like: handball, baseball, softball, individual gymnastics, elementary football, elements of golf, outdoor running and so on.

In one case a star basketball player needed one more credit in his senior year, the Judge said, and took a course in Social and Square Dancing. It consisted of attending a coed dancing class two hours a week for eighteen weeks.

The judge also pointed out that the players travelled as much as 15,000 miles during a season and lost as many as thirty classroom days.

But if that seems scandalous enough, the Judge added, President Owen of Bradley College made all the road trips with the team, or met the players at their destination, in one case Honolulu.

Judge Strait continued that once the present had told a player not to honour a subpoena to testify in a Colorado murder case in which he had been the last to see the slain man. The reason according to the judge, was that his appearance would have conflicted with a basketball game.

"The inference is clear," the Judge said, "that the president of the university impressed the athlete that it was more important to play basketball that day than to serve in the administration of justice."

The Boosters' Club of the university also came in for its share in the whiplashing. Judge Strait charged that the club, made up of 682 of Peoria's leading citizens, had often aided the players financially, sometimes to the tune of $100 in cash.

Basketball was so important at the Peoria school, said Judge Strait, that it was a case of the tail wagging the dog.

'Varsity' Wins— For Excellence

The Varsity is the best large college newspaper in Canada, according to the judges of the annual Canadian University Press (CUP) competitions. They awarded The Varsity the Southam Trophy for general excellence of an English language university newspaper with a circulation of 3,000 or more. This was made at the annual CUP conference in Hamilton, December 27 to 29.

"Good balance and competent general coverage presented in a lively fashion placed The Varsity first in a close fight with the Gazette (U of Western Ontario) second and the Manitoban (U of Manitoba) third," said the judges, Walter Christopherson, City Editor, The Gazette (Montreal), Stuart Keate, Publisher of the Victoria Daily Times, Gillis Purcell, General Manager of Canadian Press.

Purcell felt The Varsity took a "sound analytical approach to news—witness The Case-Pro and Con on the invitation to Soviet students—reprinted in toto in many other university papers—and a sense of humor evidenced in the Manitoban issue." "Literate, mature, adult—almost too much so, if you know what I mean," said Keate, adding "It seemed to take a sombre view of life in general and had a tendency to overplay left-wing activities."

The judging for the Southam Trophy is based on three consecutive issues published during the fall, the dates of which are selected at random by the judges..

This is the second time The Varsity has won such an award. In 1946 it won the Bracken Trophy which at that time was given for general excellence. When the Southam Trophy was inaugurated, the Bracken became an award for excellence in editorials alone.

The Southam Trophy was awarded to the McGill Daily in 1948, and held in the intervening three years by the Gazette, which placed second in this year's competition. The Manitoban was third.

The Gazette's presentation and layout were fields in which it led all other papers, said the judges. They felt The Manitoban appeared to have been put together with loving care, and showed the imprint of the Winnipeg Free Press.

They commented that perhaps students deemed education too serious a business these days to leave room to scoff. At the same time, they noted the lack of cartooning in college publications.

The Bracken Trophy, emblematic of editorial excellence, was awarded The Manitoban for the clear-cut, light touch with which they handled appropriate and varied subjects. Federal Aid and the Massey Report were the subjects of two of the three winning editorials.

The Varsity, winners of the Bracken Trophy last year, placed one point behind with editorials described as having significant variety, superior writing and in some cases being very nearly brilliant. The Carleton, Carleton College, Ottawa, was third.

The Jacques Bureau Trophy, awarded papers with under 3,000 circulation was taken for the third consecutive year by The Silhouette, McMaster University, with the Acadia Athenaeum second and The Carleton third.

The Le Droit Trophy for general excellence of French language papers was awarded Le Quartier Latin, University of Montreal, which one of the judges described as narrow in range, but excellent . . . typical of classic student revolutionaries of France. Le Carabin, Laval University, Quebec was second.

The coverage of the activities of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the International Student Service were discussed by the delegates this year so that any news arising from their conventions or conferences can be distributed to the CUP papers.

The Acadia Athenaeum was elected as the executive paper of CUP for the coming year, to succeed the McGill Daily. As executivve paper, the Athenaeum is expected to handle the day-to-day business of the CUP, arrange the various contests, and executes the recommendations passed by the delegates at the annual conference.

Next year the CUP conference will be held at McGill University with the McGill Daily as the host paper. Several delegates commented that with Montreal closing the taverns and clubs early on Christmas and New Year's, Toronto would appear to be a better city in which to spend the Christmas holiday.

M. Gerard Filion, editor of Le Devoir, was unanimously elected honorary CUP president for the coming year. M. Filion is the first French-Canadian to be elected to this position, although prominent French-Canadians including Premier Maurice Duplessis have been nominated in the past. Several of the delegates said that while they did not know much about M. Filion, they had no qualms about voting for the editor of Le Devoir.

Parking Puzzle Perplexes

Although almost twice as many people are driving to the campus as before the TTC strike, university officials are planning no extension of parking facilities.

The man in charge of parking—Assistant Superintendent Alec Russell—says that on Monday university cars almost doubled. Ordinarily about 350 people drive to the campus, he said.

Russell said that at present the university is taking no action to alleviate the situation. A suggestion that the back and front campi be cleared of snow for parking purposes was answered, "It would be nice, but absolutely out of the question."

The campi have no bottom, Russell pointed out. In case of a thaw, the cars would ruin them for any future sports use. And the cost of refinishing a ploughed-up surface would be prohibitive, he added.

Meanwhile, staff and students alike had trouble finding parking spots for their cars. On the campus, cars with permits were parking on both sides of the front campus road—in spite of regulations. Russell said the police were doing their best to keep the inside clear, in case of emergency.

On the streets around the campus, every available spot was filled by nine a.m. The driveway in front of the university's men's residences was filled with cars lined bumper to bumper. So were the lanes leading to Trinity's parking lot. Many students were late for lectures because of the hunt for spaces. Hitch-hikers though reported business better than ever. And many people were heard to say, "I get around faster than when the streetcars were running."

Carpenter Enjoyed Trip Didn't Like Eating Seal

"I thoroughly enjoyed myself up there," stated Professor Ted Carpenter, on his return last Sunday from a five week stay on Southampton Island, 2,000 miles north of Toronto. Flown in by the Defense Research Board, Professor Carpenter spent his Christmas and New Year's studying "Space and time concepts as reflected in the Eskimo language".

His home for the five weeks was split between an igloo and a frail wooden shack. The only other person to accompany him was Morton Teicher, a graduate student in Anthropology. They spent most of their time accompanying the Eskimos on hunting and fishing trips. The "family" group where they stayed consisted of about 20 Eskimos. Because of the kinship problem there, Professor Carpenter had to become the "son" of one of the couples. "It was amusing," he stated, "because my mother was always telling me where to get off."

During one of the hunting trips Carpenter managed to sink the second harpoon into a seal. This feat gives the harpooner the privilege of having the left shoulder. This particular seal shoulder weighed close to 600 pounds; "We ate the damn thing," he stated.

The Eskimos up there are close to extinction; they all have TB and the trapping problem is increasing. A pelt that would have sold for approximately $52 now sells for $3. An Eskimo hunter can hardly make $18 a winter, just enough to pay for his cartridges. The only hope is that some supplies may soon be available from an abandoned army base near their village. Professor Carpenter hopes to return there in a few years to continue his studies.

Campus Show

Daffydil Night

By JACK GRAY

You think you have it tough with strikes and essays and tests and similar aids to modern living? These, friend, are nothing. You should be a campus show reviewer. With the faculty shows now fading in your mind and only the All Varsity Revue to come (in February) the picture is one of more or less unrelieved gloom.

Just before the term ended in December the Medical Faculty presented Daffydil Night, 1951. It was the last of this year's faculty shows and the best. I wish I could make a statement like that without sounding like an insult.

I saw the first show. That was too bad, but most of the things I didn't like about it lasted I'm told. It was too long. It started with a smash number, and quietly went downhill. The first night lacked pace which I understand picked up as the show ran along through its first night but Daffydil still went on for three hours.

In spite of this kind of thing Daffydil was a good show, in comparison with this year's crop. It was tied around a theme (Nicolovitch the great Russian producer, PRESENTS ——). I want to say something about the young man who played Nicolovitch himself, Daffydil's producer, Manny Rotenburg. I wish he hadn't been so modest. I wish he had put himself into more numbers. Perhaps he was pretty busy producing the show, but his two appearances were high spots, and from time to time I kept hoping he would come on again. As a producer I don't think he's so good. But as a performer, Rotenburg stands high on the lists this year.

The singing chorus in Daffydil was very good, but like the show they wilted as the hours moved along. The dancing chorus was the best of the year. They were not only the best, but they had life, and action, and thy smiled. The skits were average, and limp.

Rotenburg and Co. got the show off to a rousing start with Nicolovitch Makes a Picture. This was perhaps the best single number of the show. Next we had a clean bedroom drama, with plenty of things wrong with it (the hero forgot to take off his overcoat when he went into bed, for example (but by and large it was fun if not funny. A submarine Named Desire had an interesting set (the inside of a submarine) and that was all. Knights of The Pool Table tried to acnieve the Runyon tradition, but apart from a pleasant ending it had little to recommend it. One skit, All Quiet, or, Boom, the graduating year number, drew on the medical school background for much of its humour and managed to be funny, interesting, and on a higher level than the rest of the skits. It gained from Rotenberg's General Lues von Herheimer, but could have used some cutting.

The best thing about Daffydil this year however was not its humour but its musical numbers. There were two of these, Carnival Knowledge and Tut Tut King Tut or Tomb It May Concern. In the words of music department Carnival stood out, with We Know What It's All About (Jerry Drexler) and I Need Somebody Like You (Goodman and Rotenburg). The Daffydil Chorus Line was superb in this number and are certainly the best of the year. Galdwell, Page, Tench and Blodgett Hayseeds were good; Caldwell won hands down. Helen Spicer and Ted Blodgett stood out in the I Need number, while Nancy Hazel and Sue Vousden shone in a dance routine. One delightful bit of humor was provided by Tom Bell's "Double Jointed Fanny."

Tut Tut King Tut did not have the same high level of entertainment as the Carnival number but it did have its high spots. Lyrics to the songs were good, and The Arabian Days also managed to produce a little music. Stan Bain and Stan Greben were responsible for the songs. The outstanding group in the Tut number however was the water bearers, Auerbach, Dobbin, Evans, Good, Gussack and Quilt, in unusual an assortment of bearers as we have seen in years.

The entr'acts, a traditional high spot in Daffydil shows, were not. But one number, Boutonniere, with Bev Clarke on the vocal, came down into the audience and was charming.

In a year of campus shows that has produced little that remains in the mind, Daffydil stands outs. But it could have been a better show. One criticism we picked up from a medical student was that it could have been more medical. Be that as it may, Daffydil was pleasant entertainment, even if it did go on and on and on.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"For nineteen and a half centuries the Christian churches have laboured, not without success, to remove the unfortunate impression made by their Lord and Master . . . that He ate too heartily, drank too freely, and kept very disreputable company, including grafters of the lowest type and ladies who were no better than they should be."

NOTICE

The Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have invited the University of Toronto, to nominate candidate, or candidates for the scholarships, each of the yearly £450 per annum for two years, possible additional allowances, to be offered by the Commissioners to award in Canada, in 1952. Information regarding these scholarships may be found on page 272 of the current Arts calendar. Applications for the scholarships, accompanied by theses or evidence of the candidates' ability for original research must be received at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, not later than February 15th, 1952. Attention is drawn to the fact that the Royal Institution of Great Britain Science Research Scholarship has been terminated and will not be offered in 1952.

Mock Session Will Discuss Financial Aid

A bill recommending that two members of the Independent party be seated will be introduced at the session of the Mock Parliament this Thursday. The session will be held at 8:00 o'clock in the Ontario Legislature. Rev. M. C. Davies, Speaker of the Ontario Legislature will act as Speaker, Clare Bacchus said yesterday at a meeting of the Mock Parliament Committee.

A measure advocating increased financial aid to universities will be the main business of the session. David Fry is the Prime Minister of the House. John Medcof is Leader of the Opposition. He said that the measure is debatable on two issues: 1. the question of fees and 2. the advisability of private universities.

Prime Minister Fry said that the motion is a plank taken directly from the platform on which 36 Progressive Conservative members were elected to the House last November. "It is a debatable issue," he added, "and we hope it will attract attention both on and off the campus."

The bill is a CCF measure, Walter Parker of the CCF party charged. "We are suspicious of any Tory government bringing in such a bill, and its intentions of carrying it out," he said.

Although the bill seems to be attacking a vital problem, it does not actually propose measures which will relieve students of the burdens of fees, Shirley Endicott said. She was stating the position of the campus LPP club.

Great Hall Meal "Peak Of Week"

Co-eds will get a chance to dine in Hart House on Tuesday, January 15 at SHARE's campaign dinner. The dinner will mark the peak of Campaign Week.

Guest speakers on this occasion will be His Excellency Mohammed Ali, Pakistani High Commissioner, and His Excellency R. R. Saksena, Indian High Commissioner to Ottawa. They will speak on the current need of interest on East-West co-operation in connection with the educational aspects of SHARE.

Special invitations were sent to members of the Board of Governors, the Senate, the Students' Administrative Council, interested members of the Faculties, Faculty and College presidents, and other noted campus personalities.

According to Tim Armstrong, SHARE Chairman, the response was encouraging so far. Tickets are available at the SAC office for $3, with all proceeds going to SHARE. Armstrong feels that "The event is significant in three ways. First, it will launch the campaign and, we hope, give SHARE the support of a number of outside groups. Second, the event will be significant as an example of co-operation between the Dominion of Pakistan and the Republic of India. We feel that such an event is a good example of what Universities can do in promoting understanding and goodwill. Thirdly, and probably most important, is the fact that the banquet, as a benefit banquet is an excellent source of revenue for SHARE.

Three of Toronto's Austrian guests who gave a concert at Convocation Hall last night are with Chris Erdi of the University of Toronto. The Austrians are Dr. Susanne Polsterer, director of this Goodwill Tour to North America, Elizabeth Stiasny and Fritz Friersinger, two of the performers.

AUSTRIANS

Tanzen Singen Lachen Springen

"Sprechen Sie Deutsch- oder Parlez-vous francais?" These two questions were heard frequently this past week-end. The University of Toronto was host to 19 students from Austria. The Austrian group was in Toronto to present a concert of folk dancing and folk songs last night in Convocation Hall as a gesture of good will.

This is the third Austrian Goodwill Tour to North America. Acquaintances were renewed, people and places in common were discovered and many new friendships made. Toronto students and their guests compared notes on skiing conditions in the Alps and the Rockies. Fritz Feirersinger, a student in institutional management at Vienna, complained that our ski runs are too short. The best skiing on the continent is in Stowe, Vermont, he said. The group spent some time there last month.

Fourth form German is inadequate for conversational purposes, many Toronto students discovered. Fortunately most of the Austrians spoke intelligible English. "Je t'aime" was an expression frequently heard. It was used with various inflections in the manner of "Deuxieme Etage" which delighted the Austrians.

The tour has been organized by the Bureau for Student Tours and Exchanges, Vienna, and has sponsors from many parts of the world. The concerts of folk songs and dances help to pay the expenses of the tour.

The colorful peasant costumes worn during the concert are on loan from provincial museums of Austria. The students also wear a national costume, described by one of them as his "Second-Sunday Best". The grey suit with green lapels and its distinctive wooden buttons made the Austrians readily identifiable. All Austrians have these suits which are worn on special occasions.

Dr. Oskar Bock, lector at the University of Vienna, is leading the tour. Aiding Dr. Bock in the direction of this series of concerts is Dr. Susanne Posterer. A native of Vienna, Dr. Polsterer acts as art director, Mistress of Ceremonies, and Performer. She is an experienced actress and also a Ph.D.

The group arrived in Toronto early Sunday morning. In the afternoon they attended a tea given by the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students committee of Toronto. This was the first opportunity for really testing one's German. The Austrians met many students from Varsity and compared notes on courses, exams, food, clothes and similar related topics. While in Toronto, the Austrian students were the guests of Varsity students.

CUP Will Offer Contests, Prizes

Photographers, essayists, and cartoonists on Canadian university campi will be able to have their material appear in print before approximately 70,000 university students as the result of a series of contests being sponsored by the Canadian University Press. At the recent CUP conference in Hamilton, the Acadia Athenaeum was given the job, as the CUP executive paper, of arranging contests in these fields for Canadian students.

It is hoped to have the contests sponsored by outside firms or groups, otherwise prizes can most likely be furnished from CUP funds.

The photography contest will be for pictures taken by undergraduates and published in CUP papers. Each paper will submit a fixed number of pictures each month and the winner will be called the "CUP Picture of the Month". Because of technical difficulties it would not be possible to have the winning picture printed in all 21 CUP papers, but a mat service could be arranged which would allow any paper to print the picture at a low cost.

Approximately the same rules and regulations would apply to the cartoon contest. The essay contest would be for essays submitted on a given theme, in either French or English, of a short, humorous nature. One of the criticisms given by a group of judges who examined the university papers submitted for the annual CUP contests was that there was a great lack of humorous writing in all the papers. The delegates to the CUP conference decided that an essay contest might help to encourage humorous writing by Canadian undergraduates.

Forestry Award Won At Varsity

Award of a Forest Industries Entomological scholarship to D. R. Macdonald has been announced at the University of Toronto. The Forest Insects Control Board interested the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, the British Columbia Lumber Manufacturers' Association and the British Columbia Loggers' Association in sponsoring these scholarships. This is the fifth session in which the award has been made at Varsity.

Ross Macdonald, 23, entered the Faculty of Forestry from Etobicoke Collegiate in 1948. During the summers he has been employed by the Dominion Department of Agriculture on field studies connected with a number of entomological problems in various parts of Canada and the western United States. Now in his fourth year, he plans to do postgraduate work in forest entomology.

Lit Issue Deadline Extended

The deadline for material for The Varsity Literary Issue has been postponed one week — to January 17. This was necessary because contributions this year have reached an all time low. Interest, which has been failing for the last two years, seems to be on its deathbed now.

Essays, poetry, photos (gloss finished in 8x10 size), will be accepted at The Varsity office until the 17th.

Five O'Clock Stars Brough

Dr. George Brough, pianist, will give the first Hart House Wednesday afternoon recital of 1952 today. Last term, Dr. Brough was heard as accompanist for Donald Brown, and he now makes his appearance as soloist in his own right.

Dr. Brough came to Canada in 1945 from England, where he obtained his doctorate of music from Oxford University, and his fellowship of the Royal College of Organists.

The recital begins at 5:10 p.m. in the Music Room of Hart House. All members are invited to attend; no tickets are required.

T.T.C. STRIKE

Campus Carries On

"The time limit for books coming into the University libraries after the Christmas holidays has been extended until further notice," said W. S. Wallace, head Librarian of the University of Toronto on Monday.

Because of difficulties in arranging transportation to the University as a result of the TTC strike, Mr. Wallace said that students returning these Christmas books late would not be penalized.

Books taken out overnight should be returned to the library the following day even if they do not arrive before the morning deadline. Wallace said that the books should be returned to the library in time to go out again at three o'clock, and that if the excuse for lateness was a valid one, no fine would be levied.

The main library will close at 6:00 p.m. instead of at the usual 10:00 p.m., since the staff working at the library cannot get transportation to their homes at that late hour. However, the reading room in University College and the Law reading room in the main library will remain open in the evening.

Aside from the changes in the library schedule, the University as a whole functioned smoothly and normally on the first day that it was affected by the TTC strike. According to J. C. Evans, University Registrar, there have been no more absentees than there are in any other normal school day. Several of the staff members at Simcoe Hall thumbed rides to work but "the offices are fully manned and all are present and accounted for."

Final exams being written in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering and in Occupational and Physical Therapy will go on as planned.

The Hart House tuck shop will be closed at 5:00 p.m. for the duration of the strike.

"The Varsity has been affected as drastically by the TTC strike as any organization in the city, except possibly, the TTC employees and employers themselves," said Editor Barbara Browne yesterday.

"With a maximum of co-operation from campus organizations wanting publicity and efficiency from the staff, we should be able to publish the regular eight page issue. It will be difficult for the whole staff, of course, but difficulties are hardly ever insurmountable."

To ensure the student body of the University that The Varsity will be on hand to greet them each morning a list of emergency deadlines has been posted at the door of The Varsity News Office and will be in effect for the duration of the TTC strike.

Normally, all news stories and features come in at all times in the afternoon and evening before the next day's issue. Four runs, exactly on the hour, between 8:30 and 11:30 are usually enough to get the eight pages out to Oshawa for printing.

Since no buses will be running for an indefinite length of time, copy will have to go to Oshawa by private vehicle with final deadline at 9:30. Hence, the revamping of deadlines.

The earliest of these deadlines is as 4:30 p.m., two days before the issue comes out. The Book Page, the Entertainment Page and Science Notes must be in by then. Features, Balcony Viewpoint and all early news has a two o'clock deadline, the afternoon of printing. Late news must be written up as soon as the information is gathered.

"Coming Events" and "To-day" forms should be handed in by two o'clock, if it is to be printed in next day's issue. Those who want to get material of any sort into the paper are requested to contact The Varsity office about it as early as possible and definitely before two p.m.

Tomorrow In Israel By Lehrman

To the students of current affairs there is probably no experiment of statehood to compare with that of the formation of Israel. This month will see the publication of the first comprehensive and objective account of the development of Israel up till now with a description of the problems she will have to face in the future. The author, Hal Lehrman is a newspaperman of some repute who has been awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship and a grant from the American Council of Foreign Affairs for his detached reporting both of Israel and on the conditions in Russian sattelite countries.

Lehrman, who visited Toronto recently, states that the most striking thing about Israel in contrast with the countries that surround her, is her adaptation of western methods and a western way of life. The Israel Parliament impressed Lehrman with its democratic procedure. The Prime Minister, David Ben Gurion, feels that an unwritten constitution best serves the interests of a state which is just beginning to find itself and takes his example from the organic development of the British Constitution.

Lehrman reports that free-enterprise is the order of the day in Israel and lamented the fact that most Westerners think that Israel is a socialist state. The communist influence in Israel is very weak, and Mr. Lehrman describes the whole trend of the new state as 'democratic.'

In his book Israel: The Beginning and Tomorrow (McLeod, $5) Lehrman gives a more specific account of the immediate situation in Israel and provides an historical perspective for the problems that confront the new state. Israel: The Beginning and Tomorrow will be available in Canada on the 24th of January and is recommended to students of Modern History, Political Science, and those who have watched with interest the exciting development of Israel's experiment in statehood.

Near East Comes West

Hal Lehrman, an American journalist, was in Toronto last night at a press conference arranged by his publishers for his new book on Israel which will be coming out at the end of the month. Lehrman has spent six of the last 10 years in the Middle East and behind the Iron Curtain.

Ave Atque Vale

By ANNE CARNWATH
Book Review Editor

Issues of the Trinity Review, Acta Victoriana and the Undergrad hit the campus just before the holidays and the sober moments of our Christmas were spent contemplating the predicament of College Magazines on the campus. Next week we will deal with the Trinity Review, but it seemed appropriate to bundle Acta and Undergrad together because they differ so much in their ideas of what a College Magazine should be.

The Undergrad stands out as a strictly "literary" effort. Only the except from a speech by Principal Jeanneret in the opening pages would ever lead you to suspect its college affiliations. Articles on Film, Canadian Poetry, the use of words, Art, and the use of imagery in literature are to be found, along with some undistinguished poetry and three short stories.

We cannot help but admire the attempt of the editors to keep their magazine off the stamping ground of local gossip and traditions and up in a literary atmosphere, but we wonder if it's really worth it after all when the material itself hardly deserves the ride. We think that the standards set by the Undergrad could only be maintained by a campus literary magazine. If such an animal existed then Olga Skey would not be an embarrassed diamond in the rough.

Acta Victoriana, on the other hand, gave in long ago to the fact that one College rarely had enough people interested in creative writing around at the same time to produce a genuinely literary magazine. Vic Then and Now, The Bob Revue, What Vic Reads, the status of women on the campus and the Vic Football Team all have a place inActa and make it the fine little "college Mag" it is. We even began to wonder after reading this issue why it continues to publish creative writing at all, for its poetry was even less than undistinguished except for Allan Evans' short contribution. There was only one short story which was, fortunately, well written and managed to give the issue some literary prestige. Of the sort we give a retired pilot who takes us up for a short jaunt on a Sunday afternoon to show us he can still fly. . . .

Lost Voices Sought Sings Grass Harp

THE GRASS HARP by Truman Capote Ambassador, 1951, $3.50.

It was with mixed feelings of anticipation and apprehension that I awaited Truman Capote's second novel. The emotional strength and poetry of his first, Other Voices, Other Rooms promised much; yet I wondered if following the pattern of some other American authors, he would fall into cliches and dull repetition. However, my fears were belied. The Grass Harp is as striking and original as the first. The theme basically is the same as that of Other Voices—human isolation—but this time he approaches it in the comic manner.

It is a charming fantasy of five people who move into a tree house, each seeking in his loneliness some voice in the void and the effect their stay in the tree house has on their lives. They all emerge with a greater realization not only of themselves but of the nature of human relationships. Capote stresses the value of one's subjective life and the necessity of sympathy from others. This may sound rather banal but it is due to simplification which necessarily strips away all the overtones. However the novel is not as serious as the theme may suggest. Much is pure exuberant fun and satire. Capote has a keen awareness of the incongruous. But constantly, the comedy is coloured by the pathos inherent in the underlying theme, a pathos always implicit, never exaggerated or maudlin. The total effect of the Grass Harp is that of Moliere's Le Misanthrope, the elusive mood of the tragic-comic.

Capote is, to use a phrase that has been bandied about and misapplied too often, a poet in prose. It is a poet's world he conjures up—out of this sphere, strange, whimsical, a world inhabited by odd characters, Dickensian in their grotesqueness and chemical purity. He has a finely attuned ear for verbal music and rhythm. Perhaps what is most attractive about his style is the use of imagery as a structural device. Throughout the Grass Harp, there is an effortless flow of fresh images, drawn from one restricted side of experience, thus producing a firm, even texture. The images are new, witty, and clever, but it is not that demanding type of cleverness that attempts to squeeze out a grunting recognition. Two unusual and distant things are suddenly conjoined, giving the reader that indescribable pleasure of sudden illumination. At climactic points in the novel, where, in the exposition of complex subjective states, direct description would be completely inadequate, Capote reverts to the style of the imagistic poets, employing extended images to convey his concepts as well as the emotion.

Strictly speaking the Grass Harp is not a novel but a novelette. As yet, the twenty-six-year-old Capote seems to lack the maturity and sustaining power for a novel. However, within the bounds of the novelette form, he moves with ease and self-assurance. He realizes its fine qualities, the restraint it imposes on over-elaboration, yet the effect it leaves on the reader of fullness, a total unity of mood and atmosphere.

Maugham's Bed-timer Solid Book

Somerset Maugham has decided not to write any more short stories during his lifetime and has compiled a definitive collection of the short stories he has written up till now. These stories, which will take three volumes in all, have been arranged according to locale and length, and volume one opens with the famous tale 'Rain'.

Maugham will go down in literary annals as a story-teller in the true sense of the word, whose talent lies somewhere between that of a magazine story-writer and that of a genuinely 'literary' writer. The present collection is a solid piece of entertainment and recommended for bed-time reading.

Charmante Paris Still Vives Encore

EFT BANK, RIGHT BANK by Joseph Barry. George J. McLeod, 1951, $4.00.

One of the oddest, and most endearing characteristics of Paris, for those of us who have never seen her, is her tendency to take on the personality of the person describing her. Serious observers bring us an elderly Paris full of gloom, Communism, and existentialist taxi-cab drivers. The less conscientious show us art, the Seine, the last Bonapartist—and existentialist taxi-cab drivers.

Joseph Barry must be a man of astonishingly wide appreciations, for he brings us both views of Paris, with a satisfying leavening of common-sense and irreverence. And, far from confining himself to the two banks of the Seine, he follows several famous Parisians to other parts of France; Le Corbusier to his futuristic Marseille apartment-house, Henri Matisse to the chapel he is designing at Vence, and Picasso (and son) to their studio at Vallauris .

Though all three excursions are fascinating and necessary, Paris herself is sufficient to occupy anyone for two hundred and sixty-seven pages, and Barry returns to discuss Colette, Jean-Paul Sartre, the latest —isms, fashions, and the flea-market with taste and wisdom. His assessment of Sartre is especially interesting, and his discussion of the sinister character of the Paris concierge is hilarious.

Barry is neither the "and-now-we-come-to-the-beautiful-Place-Vendome" type of Paris commentator, nor the excited chronicler of high society. In the main he steers a disconcerning path between high-and-low-life, though he includes learned dissertations on such desperate subjects as "feelthy postcards" and the relative lasting powers of various recent French premiers.

He understands and describes France and the French with clarity and humor. Many American commentators on France have allowed themselves to be deceived and frightened by the apparent inroads of Communism into the French political scene. Not so with Joseph Barry, who as a resident of France has a better position to observe than the most discerning travelling correspondent. He states, with facts and the backing of his own clear-headed observations his belief that Communism will never dominate France, and his interviews with various Communists of all social levels graphically illustrate the divided allegiances of French Marxists.

Even the shortest browse through "Left Bank, Right Bank" ought to be enough to convince you that Barry is a writer of sophistication and intelligence. As such, it is unfortunate that he has concluded this delightful book with such an usatisfactory chapter as "The French-man", which reads rather as if it had been put together from old memo-sheets with the publisher breathing fire at the author's elbow. However, no book is without its faults, and "Left Bank, Right Bank" has so few as to make it, if not the best of sellers, at least a success d'estime in a hard field to crash.

Eliot Needs Attention To Evaluate Pedestal

THE T. S. ELIOT MYTH by R. H. Robbins. Thos. Nelson, 1951.

T. S. Eliot presents a problem which needs attention from everyone interested in the position of a writer in society. Here we have a poet whose reputation was established in the twenties and who has subsequently turned to Anglo-Catholicism and devoted the major part of his writing to the interests of this faction.

If Eliot held a minor position in public life, Prof. Robbins would not be as interested as he is in attacking Eliot's position, but Robbins feels that Eliot's influence is too wide, and the obscurity of his poetry only adds to the esteem in which people who have never understood him told him and tend to accept his ideas on religion and education. Literary critics have been so absorbed in tracing the symbols Eliot uses that they have failed to discuss critically the convictions and ideas which Eliot is promulgating

Eliot is accused by Robbins of advocating education for only the select few, of holding racial prejudices and of supporting fascist ideas. These accusations have all been made against Eliot before but no one has been as thorough as Prof. Robbins is in tracing these manifestations in Eliot's writing.

The great charge made against Eliot, however, is that of what Prof. Robbins calls anti-Humanism. And here it is that we run into the fundamental divergence of opinion which make it impossible for a person like Robbins to tolerate Eliot, or for Eliot to take Robbins' accusations seriously. When Eliot says, "I do not mean that our times are particularly corrupt; all times are corrupt," and "I doubt very much whether what I am saying can convey very much to anyone for whom the doctrine of Original Sin is not a very real and tremendous thing," it becomes obvious that his attitude to man is irreconcilable with that of a person like Robbins who believes that man's task is in the world, here and now, and to whom the doctrine of Original Sin is only a block in the progress of man as an enlightened human being.

Yet in spite of the fact that Robbins attacks Eliot for not holding different opinions than he does, Robbins is quite justified in deploring Eliot's use of his reputation to propagandize and influence others. A comprehensive and critical approach to his philosophy of life has been sorely needed for some time.

Basket Blues Lose In U.S.

The Basketball Blues continued their losing streak in games with American Colleges over the holidays, going down before the Rochester U. squad 89-45 before Christmas, and dropped games to Buffalo State Teachers and Alfred last Friday and Saturday.

One good thing came about in the match at Rochester, at least—the bucket men started scoring. Bud Natanson scored 13 and his sub Ray Monnot got 9. The team's biggest threat last year was Natanson under the hoop; anytime last year when he scored less than 18 points, he was having a bad night. Previous to the game at Rochester last month, a scoring punch from the keyhole was generally lacking.

As for the rest of the team that night, the hours at the express office must be pretty tough. Nobody else could find the hoop more than twice, and Rochester showed no mercy.

The games at Buffalo State and Alfred were played without either Natanson or Monnot, who are busy writing exams. The team did not fare too badly considering that the height of these two men (6'7" and 6'6" respectively) is very much depended on in the Blues' style of play. The other tall men, Lou Lukenda and Art Binnington, both of whom have come along slowly this year, filled the gap very well. Lukenda was top scorer against Buffalo with 14 points, and Binnington was highest scorer the following night with 12 points.

Toronto had the score tied at Buffalo 49-49 at the end of regulation time, but lost out in overtime 54-51. At Alfred, which claims to have the best team in their history, the Blues were butchered 68-45.

Though this was the team's only game with Alfred, they have home games with Buffalo State and Rochester next February in which to make up these losses. Alfred beat Rochester earlier in the season, and Rochester beat Colgate, so the Blues' opposition is not getting any worse as the season goes on.

Bob Masterson and Dalt White were down in Buffalo last night, scouting the Buffalo - Niagara game. The Blues have played both these teams, and play a return game with Buffalo next month.

The team takes on easier opposition this Saturday in Curry College, in the first Athletic Night of the year. McGill beat Curry 59-46 last month.

Bud Natanson

Bud Natanson has been the Blues' top scorer so far, with 85 points in seven games. His 36.5 percent shooting average is also tops for the team, as are his 35 field goals and his 29 free throw attempts.

Sr. Vic Wins Shutout Spoilt By Late Goal

A second period rush that netted them five goals gave Sr. Vic a 7-1 triumph over Sr. Meds in noon-hour hockey yesterday. Paced by Wally Stothers' hat trick, the Vicsters outclassed their opponents completely and it wasn't until the dying moments of the game that the doctors were able to get the puck past Sturgess in the Vic goal. Marshall added a pair of markers and Andrews and Walton had singletons. Captain McGillvary scored the only goal for Meds.

The first chapter was scrambly but fast with the Scarlet and Gold having at least a territorial edge. Wally Stothers opened the scoring at the six-minute mark when he gathered in Machin's pass. Varga of Meds drew the first penalty but Vic could do no better than hit the post. The passing was not very sharp but defensive play was steady. Organized attacks were lacking on both sides and fourteen minutes went by before Meds got a shot on goal. Andrews put Vic two ahead on a pass from Fenning in the last seconds of the frame.

Two early goals salted the contest away in the second frame and they added three more later on for good measure. A sustained attack in the opening minutes resulted in a goal for Marshall as he batted in Littlejohn's rebound. At 3:30 Stothers counted with Fenning making the play. Eight minutes later, Wally completed his hat trick, shooting Gibson's rebound into an empty net. Woolton of Vic and Longo of Meds engaged in a wrestling match and went off. They were joined in the sin bin by Zatelney for holding. Marshall and Walton had goals back to back to complete the scoring for Vic. In the dying seconds, McGillivary raced up the ice to net Meds' only goal and spoil Sturgess' shutout.

Meds & Vic Cop Openers In Senior Basketball Loop

The holiday season must have been particularly tough on basketball players if the two opening games in the Intramural loop are any indication. All four teams showed considerable lack of form and the need for some practice time. Competition should get a little stiffer within the next few weeks however, when all the squads will have a game or two under their belts.

Jr. UC Wins Over Vicmen In B-Ball Tilt

In a rough but exciting basketball game yesterday UC Juniors whipped Jr. Vic 34-18. Although the score was only 22-16 for the winners at the end of the second period a power-packed finish left them far out in front.

A total of twenty-one personals and five technicals were called during the game; Herb Noble of UC fouled out early in the second period and several others were ready to follow him by the final whistle.

Lionel Schipper was the top scorer for UC, dropping in 10 points; the losers had Wally Walace with 6 to spark them in the tight first two periods.

Sportswoman

The women's intramural hockey league faced-off yesterday, when St. Hildas II's took POT, 3-2, in a noon-hour fracas at Varsity arena.

The Saints chalked up an early lead, netting two to POT's one goal at the end of the first period. Physios evened the score in the second frame but could not keep the puck out of their end and St. Hildas banged the disc home to take top spot again. The third period saw POT try for a tying goal with Mary Lou Lyons just missing repeatedly and the Saints' defence carried the game through to the end.

Heather Macpherson was outstanding for the winners netting two goals with Joan Sterling sinking the third. Molly Bark and Mary Bowden shared the honours for POT.

St. Hildas I's won their first game with UC I's by default.

Varsity Second At Detroit Meet

The Varsity swimmers turned quite a trick over the holidays by copping second spot in the AAU Meet at Detroit last December 23.

With 15 teams entered, including Wayne, U.S. Navy, Detroit Turners, London Y.M.C.A. Detroit emerged first with forty-four points, with Varsity in the second slot with twenty-six. Toronto's swimmer, George Stulac (brother to John) placed first in the forty-yard free and the hundred-yard free style, posting times of 18.8 and 54.3. Bill McElroy, Backstroke flash for Varsity, won the 200-yard back in 2:24.8. Johnny Bate, third man on the Blue team, placed sixth in the breast-stroke event. The three men, combined together to place third in the medley relay.

Senior Vic vs. Trinity A

Sr. Vic scored a 23-17 victory over Trinity "A" yesterday in an exciting well-played basketball game. Trinity forged ahead 10-1 in the first stanza but saw their lead fall under a strong Vic offensive in the second period. In the last period Vic threatened at times to make the game a run-away.

Bruce Rogers was the outstanding player on the floor as he swished 10 for the winners. The other Vic points were spread among the rest of the players which indicates the Vicsters have a well balanced outfit.

Gord Montizambert with 6 and Dave Moore with 5 led the losers in a good effort. Although both teams were hitting the hoops for long range they were very ineffective under the basket.

Senior Meds vs. Senior UC

Senior Meds took control of their scheduled league fixture against the UC Seniors right from the opening whistle and came out on the top of a 30-17 decision that saw some rugged play and ample free throws. The Doctors had their shooting eyes pretty well tuned up, and scored 15 points in the first stanza without the Redmen notching a single counter.

UC finally woke up to the fact that it was in the middle of a basketball game once the second stanza got under way, and although they only outscored the Medsmen by a single point from there on, they at least prevented the contest from turning into a complete route.

The Doctors managed to connect on six free throws out of ten tries. UC made four out of eight foul shots good for the point. High scorer for the Medsmen was Smith with 6 points while teammates Coopersmith, Gamble and Hirano each notched 5 points. Glick and Housely netted three points apiece for the losers.

Last year's Intramural champs, the UC squad will have to do a lot of work to come up to the form that won the pennant for them last season.

Michigan Takes Blues In Two-Game Series

The Hockey Blues lost both games of their two-game series with Michigan at Ann Arbor the week-end before the Christmas holidays, December 14 and 15. They dropped the first 4-1 to the powerful Wolverines, all but three of whom are Canadians. The Blues, who always go down to Ann Arbor on this now-traditional series minus a few of their regular personnel, also kept up a solid tradition by having a bad night the first game.

The next night the Blue and White came a little closer but still emerged on the wrong side of a 6-4 decision. Red Stephens, Al Conboy, Don Rope, Jack Wheldrake and Joe Kane shared Varsity's scoring honours.

About half the team went up to Fort William to play as a Varsity-Queen's combine. Eight Queen's players and seven Blues comprised southern Ontario's college team, while Port Arthur and Fort William combined for the north. The southerners dropped both games, the first by a narrow 8-7 margin and the second by 9-5. Don Rope led the Queen's-Varsity combines with a hat trick the first night. Al Conboy also scored three goals over the two nights while Wheldrake, Adams, and MacKenzie added singles. Keenleyside, Slighter, and McCaughey were the Queen's marksmen.

Counting these two games in the north, the Blues' record to date, including exhibition and league games, is none too impressive. In fact they have dropped seven out of eight contests. However the Queen's-Varsity combination really has little bearing on Varsity's personal record. Also playing under American rules (as Michigan) is always a handicap a Canadian team.

The Intercollegiate league resumes this weekend in Quebec City and Montreal when the Blues take on Laval and the U. of M. The locals unfortunately will be minus three of their stars. Joe Kane entered the hospital Friday night for a throat operation—Fish Arrowsmith is recovering from an attack of pneumonia while Norm Fox is out of action with torn knee ligaments. However, it is expected that all three will be ready to open the home season here in two weeks' time.

By DAVID PEDDIE

To sit through a play that does nothing but talk glibly and openly about sex for two hours without approaching any closer to the facts of sex than a few sly kisses, or any closer to the important and genuine emotions attendant on those facts than the sentiment of righteous indignation, is, I find, downright frustrating, especially when the whole thing aims, so obviously, at nothing more. F. Hugh Herbert's "light, gay comedy" THE MOON IS BLUE, which is playing at the Royal Alex this week did, I must admit, make me laugh, but it was only because of my boyish enjoyment of any risque joke. THE MOON IS BLUE has finally cured that, since it is nothing but a collection of all the risque jokes ever told, complete with a naive virgin, a cynical roue, and an apartment with etchings, elaborated, of course, with a plot and tolerably witty dialogue. I actually found myself bored. As a joke it was just too long.

As a play it has even less to offer the audience, for the plot has been used a million times (there was even a play written about the plot called BOY MEETS GIRL) and unfortunately — or perhaps fortunately — there was no compensating action. All they do is talk. For a moment I thought the play was suddenly going to surprise us with some genuine feeling and life when the immoral middle-aged cynic asked the silly young girl, in all sincerity, to marry him. She hesitated a moment and then lost her nerve, started making jokes and never again referred to it seriously. Actually it was Mr. Herbert who lost his nerve; he couldn't face writing a real play and once that moment of doubt was decided and gone the play skipped lightly through all the routine bedroom-farce jokes and situations. The end came with the boy and girl, in the only believable scene in the play, counting their prospective family—to see what it would cost to get them all up to the top of the Empire State Building—a childish thing to do, but it had the redeeming quality of being in keeping with the characters, and the rest of the play generally.

Hiram Sherman, who played the rich old lecher, had the dubious honor of taking the last curtain-call. Supposing the applause had stopped; he was lucky that Toronto has learned politeness these last few days. If the straight-faced, monotonous, but kindly and gentle, southern drawl that Mr. Sherman used in every situation and for some often very witty lines, is an example of the actor's art, then I advocate closing the theatres and promoting circuses.

Fortunately for us there were others in the cast. James Young, the nice young moral and upright architect who starts the whole thing by picking up the "professional virgin" Patty O'Neill, gives a competent although far from outstanding performance.

It is to Marcia Henderson, the silly, talkative girl, that most of the credit must go for making THE MOON IS BLUE even slightly believable. Not only was she stronger and more commanding than either of the men, but she tried to bring the play down to its proper human level from the heights of "sex for sex' sake". She did not try to look devastatingly pretty but attracted solely by her personality. She is much younger and presumably less experienced than most professional actors, but I would far rather see such honest attempts than all the southern drawls south of the Mason-Dixon.

A final word to the wise: last Monday I was blessed with both free tickets and a car. Without both, and I say this without reservation, I would have to be very tired of life before I would accept THE MOON IS BLUE as a substitute for a good lecture—and I hate lectures.

UC Singers In Concert Four Long Weeks Ago

The UC Winter Concert of last Dec. 13 was, on the whole, a thing of little distinction. The almost empty theatre may not have encouraged heights of performance, but there is little to justify the presentation of something obviously unfinished to a paying audience.

The University College singers, for example, were very weak in male voices, and did not sing well either in sections or as an over-all group. Their words were usually hard to make out, and their rendering of all-too familiar Christmas carols not half as interesting as William Robinson's excellent piano accompaniment. Conductor Graham Jackson's lack of stage-presence was painfully apparent at the end of each number.

Richard Kountz's "The Sleigh" was cute, but few of the other offerings merited much attention. No doubt it was fun singing together, and one's powers of music appreciation are unquestionably sharpened by such an experience. But the public need not be told that this is worthwhile musical fare.

Similarly, Miss June Rowat has a trained,, if not mellowed, soprano voice. And her performance was in no way helped by the loud, fussy, and careless accompaniment of Graham Jackson. Yet her uncertainty in the upper register and her struggles to meet demands as yet exceeding her grasp should not have been brought upon the merciless boards of the Hart House stage.

Again, Walter Babiak's viola and violin playing did not seem to exploit the tonal or technical possibilities of the instruments. His uninspired competence in Caesar Franck's "Sonata for Violin and Piano" was easily outshone — in fact, almost drowned out — by the impressive piano work of James Momanamy.

The redeeming item of this concert was the playing of Miss Naomi Socol. Her stage-presence was refreshing, and her control of the piano, unmistakable. Chopin's "Scherzo in B flat Minor" was full of convincing fire, though at times the base seemed to drown out whatever the right hand was doing. For a deserved encore, Miss Socol played an Israeli "Shepherd Dance."

SCIENCE NOTES

Unmotorized Seals

By JIM ANDERSON

I would that my heart could utter the thoughts that arise in me concerning transportation. Perhaps it would ease troubled thumbs if we considered briefly the comforting fact that the movement of living creatures from one place to another has long interested and baffled observers.

Since prehistoric times, man has been forced by overpopulation, dwindling food supplies, and adverse climactic conditions to change his habitat. From his origin in Central Asia, mass migrations occurred over four principle routes reaching Europe, North America via the Behring Strait, the Far East, and Africa. Aryan migrations into Europe came in the three waves of Celts, Teutons and Slavs. In recent years, the greatest human migration involved the Engineering hordes descending upon Toronto from Ajax.

Inhabitants of the sea undergo a seasonal change of environment. Seals, for example, breed in cold regions in the spring and rest for the remaining part of the year in the warmer regions of their range. Ages ago, at the disappearance of the great Russian Ocean, some seals were caught untrousered within their summer limits of travel and thus are surprisingly found in the Caspian and Siberian inland Seas.

Whales, whose home address is in the Arctic, may winter as far south as California and Portugal. Certain fish that depend on plankton for food change their home as they follow their living market gardens through the sea. All would agree that no commuting Torontonian undergoes greater frustration than does the salmon in its well known journey to the upper reaches of the great spawning rivers.

Even certain species of the fragile butterfly make intentional migratory flights in large numbers. The dazzling Painted Ladies and Clouded Yellows of North Africa journey to Europe and often cross almost a thousand miles of open sea to reach Iceland. The common Monarch is our only butterfly with a return migration. Regularly, it winters in the southern States and returns north in the spring, laying its eggs en route. The wanderings of butterflies are filled with hazards as strong winds may blow them far out to sea and thousands perish on the way.

Probably the most closely studied migration habits are those of birds, whose seasonal flights recur regularly and instinctively. Their stereotyped pattern is repeated in an uncanny manner through succeeding generations. Studies involving the banding of waterfowl in North America have shown they they adhere closely to their complex ancestral migration routes of which there are four main pathways. These are along the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, centrally, and following the Mississippi River network.

Describing these migratory journeys is easy, but explaining them is another matter. A quest for food cannot be the answer, for if this were so, insect eaters would remain all year in the warm lands where their food is plentiful. It may be that some ancient cause has implanted this migratory urge within a species. One theory is that ages ago, birds were driven south by the desolation caused by the advancing polar ice cap. At its recession they returned to their northern homes, but in some unexplained manner, an instinct or hereditary pattern had become part of them. The result is their relentless unlearned life of commuting.

And they do it without white arm bands.

The E. J. Pratt Memorial and Prize in Poetry

The University of Toronto announces the establishment of a new award in creative writing. It will be known as the E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry, and will consist of a gold medal, valued at $100, and of $100 as a cash prize. The award has been made possible through the gift of an anonymous donor who, believing that good poetry is the best assurance of a vital language and a healthy culture, hopes that the award will be a stimulus to poetic composition.

The donor has asked that the award be named after Professor E. J. Pratt, Professor of English at Victoria College and Canada's most widely known and most distinguished poet. In this way the donor hopes to pay tribute to Professor Pratt's eminence as poet and teacher, and at the same time indicate that the award will be given only for work of high excellence. The E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry is at the present time the only all-University award for creative writing.

At its meeting on December 14th, 1951, the Senate of the University of Toronto passes a statute establishing the E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry. The following regulations are to be observed in making the award:

The award is to be made annually by the Senate on the recommendation of a Committee of Award to be named by the President and to consist of not fewer than five members.

The award will be open for competition to all students proceeding to a degree either graduate or undergraduate at this University.

The award will be made to that student who writes the best poem or group of related poems of approximately one hundred lines in length.

No previously published composition shall be eligible.

Two copies of typescript, under a pseudonym, shall be submitted to the Registrar of the University on or before April 1st. They shall be accompanied by a separate envelope containing the pseudonym, the name of the candidate, and his course and year.

One copy of the prize-winning composition shall be permanently deposited with the Registrar of the University, but copyright shall remain with the author.

No award may be made in any session in which the Committee so recommends, but in that event two awards may be made in a subsequent session.

This award is tenable with any other award in the gift of the Senate.

This award will be offered for competition for the first time in the session 1951-1952.

The medal will be presented and the cash value paid in full to the winner as soon as practicable after the award is approved by the Senate.

The Big Losers

Through a long and very stormy history, trade unions have established their right to use the strike as a last resort in gaining their legitimate ends. Today, few would seriously question that right. Many will argue that the privilege is often abused—they do so with some justification. But then, privileges of one sort or another are constantly abused; that alone is hardly enough to bring about their revocation.

We grant people the right of free speech without first requiring them to show that they can speak sensibly.

In the case of public utilities, however, a strike assumes tremendous importance. Inevitably and immediately, a vast number of people are affected. For that reason, additional discretion must be exercised by both the management and the union concerned to avoid strikes. It can fairly be said that the TTC and its employees have not made a habit of presenting their internal problems to the public via a strike—in the past.

Whether or not the present strike is justifiable is an open question. Certainly the union could be criticized for the irresponsible way in which the strike was foisted upon the public. But the strength of their case in relation to their employer's is not at all clear.

For example, the TTC, in their full page add which has been appearing in the daily newspapers, claim that the additional cost of the union's demands would exceed $7,000,000 per annum. On the other hand, union spokesman James Robertson claims that this figure is based on the 1949 contract rate and that there has been a 16 cents an hour cost of living plus some fringe benefits.

Again, the TTC claims that the total package of union demands amounts to 57 cents per hour. Mr. Robertson says that "the whole package would amount only to 16.26 cents per hour."

The TTC has stated that the granting of union demands "would mean an immediate increase to a flat 10 cent fare. Mr. Robertson says emphatically "no". He claims that "most of the money from a fare increase would go for other purposes than paying us higher wages and benefits". In short, the subway.

Determining the relative merits of union and company arguments is about as difficult as judging the relative weights of tennis balls in flight. It cannot be done expertly by the spectators, but will have to be considered by an impartial board.

This, of course, should be done quickly, before some of the more excitable elements of the public succeed in calling in the army. At present, the public is happily engaged in using their thumbs; some attempt at settlement should be made before everyone becomes either enraged or adjusted to the new situation.

Here again the TTC and union leaders are at logger heads. The TTC refuses to mediate; the union will not agree to arbitrate. It was the TTC and not the union which refused to accept Mayor Lamport's offer to mediate. In view of Mayor Lamport's statement—

> After examining the TTC balance sheet I cannot see that there is any possibility of increasing the TTC offer without increasing fares, and I will not support any move that would increase fares.

the TTC's refusal seems out of place.

Some agreement as to a board of arbitration or preferably mediation is immediately necessary. For, as the Detroit Strike seemed to prove, it is the street car company, and its employees, which will suffer the most from a prolonged strike.

People are like ants, sometimes. They meet an obstacle and simply walk over it, leaving it in a trail of dust. To some extent this may happen to the prostrate TTC and friends.

Streetcar University?

The University of Toronto has sometimes been called a "streetcar university". For the present, however, the title with all its odious implications will have to be dropped. The tramlessness of the city has been visited upon us.

But students, like the citizenry in general, have been taking the matter very much in their stride—even to the point of being strike-happy. There is, of course, nothing quite like a crisis to foster the illusion of independence, to boost the urban ego. Possibly, it is the last remnant of the pioneer spirit that makes almost everyone enjoy being thrown back on his own resources—occasionally, at least.

The present emergency is still in its titillating stage. Each morning provides a full measure of enjoyment for the hopeful pedestrian, if not for motorist. No longer does transporttation mean the weary plodding to bus and streetcar lineups. No longer is it necessary to fight the good fight against the red rockets and their inhabitants.

There are tricks to the new trade of transportation. "The Telegram" has thoughtfully provided little pink PLEASE squares, for the diligent to paste on cardboard. Then, some play the viclim with a vengeance and ostentatiously shove white armbands into the face of a passing car. And then, there is always the thumb.

Possibly, it is the motorist, for all his co-operativeness and kindness, to the less fortunate, that suffers most from the strike. The recent traffic jams assumed such an immensity that the days of the TTC seemed like something out of the Golden Age. The driver's paradise of tram free streets has not been all that could be hoped. In fact, the results seem to prove that the essence of paradise lies in its exclusiveness.

But tomorrow may be better.

CUP

It Works

What is CUP? Varsity News Editor Ian Montagnes describes the organization, and some of its potentialities, as well as limitations.

A lot of space in today's paper is filled with news about the Canadian University Press. It seems CUP has awarded a trophy to The Varsity, that CUP is sponsoring a contest for cartoonists and photographers, that CUP has something to say about responsibility of student newspapers. This is fine for The Varsity, the students, and freedom of the press. But the question still remains: what is CUP?

Canadian University Press can be—and too often is—glibly described as a press association of Canadian campus newspapers—a miniature Associated Press, Canadian Press, Reuters, or what have you. But there is an essential difference: The big news agencies are closely linked by teletypes, big money, and a large central bureaux; CUP is held together by the far more intangible bonds of the friendships which grow up between students pursuing the same interests. But more of this later.

The organization dates back 14 years—to New Year's Day, 1938, when the editors of 12 campus papers met in Winnipeg to discuss an ambition they had held for some time: the establishment of a nation-wide university news agency. For two years the fledgling agency was under the wing of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. After that period of incubation it took wings and became an autonomous organization.

Since then it has grown to include 20 newspapers, and to extend its services far beyond the basic one of news exchange. Its surveys, (such as the recent ones on university arts and morals) try to present a Dominion-wide picture of campus life. It awards trophies to the best newspapers in the various circulation classes. The recent conference at Hamilton revived the defunct picture exchange service. And possibly most significant of all, planned a series of contests which will bring the benefits of CUP directly to the students.

This is what CUP does. But who belongs to it? and how does it function? The member papers stretch from the Ubyssey on the west coast, to the Dalhousie Gazette in the east. They range in number from the 10,000 daily circulation of The Varsity, all the way down to the 1,600 weekly circulation of the Xaverian, at St. Francis Xavier College, Antigonish, Nova Scotia. Some papers consider international news as important; others play up local dances with big pictures and varicolored headlines. Some of the editors are young and inexperienced; others are veteran newsmen who have come back to college for a few years. The approach of every newspaper differs from every other one, due to individual characteristics of the editor, the paper's tradition, the university.

Most of CUP's news is handled by an exchange of newspapers by mail. A special editor at each paper goes through the copies of other publications looking for newsworthy material. Should a big story break—for instance if a university president is shot—the news is sent across the country on a relay system of telegrams. The use of Canadian Press teletype wires for CUP news is now being investigated. And at the recent conference, finis was written to an ambitious scheme utilizing amateur radio—not only because of technical difficulties, but because of frowns from the legal authorities.

That is the organization of CUP. But what holds this wide-spread diverse organization together? Interest in the news of other campi is a strong cohesive, but not the strongest; even on those papers which use it most, CUP material is still regarded as "filler items". Far more important are the common interests held by the editors of student newspapers across the country. The annual conferences conduct the necessary business of the organization it is true. But most important, they bring the member staffs together in the flesh, and by adding to friendships already made in print and in the mail, give CUP the extra stimulus which really keeps it going.

In the basic purpose of news exchange, CUP is doing good work, and is still progressing. In another—and possibly more important—aim, it has not met with such marked success. Its founders had hoped to see it "consolidating student opinion and abolishing sectionalism". But the organization itself still lacks a national outlook, and regionalism is strong. This was graphically illustrated at the Hamilton conference in the nominations for the executive papers and honorary presidents. "We have never had a French-Canadian honorary president", remarked one delegate. "Although the executive paper has been in the central region several times, it has never been down east," remarked another. And still a third, supporting the University of Montreal as the executive paper, exclaimed, "There has never been a French-Canadian executive. This is not a favor we ask, it is only justice!" As long as these voices are heard at CUP conferences, the true purpose of CUP cannot be achieved. Regionalism can only breed dissension, it cannot bring unity into a national organization.

It is was on this gloomy note that the conference closed. CUP now stands in a precarious position. This conference made decisions which can greatly strengthen and extend its services. But should sectionalism and distrust continue, CUP can only remain as an easy supply of fillers.

90 Seats—or 92

PARL'T SEATS NOT SURE

Must Approve Bill Ere Independents Can Sit or Speak

In again, out again. That describes the plight of the two Independent members of the Mock Parliament to be held tonight.

Never officially recognized before the election, at first their votes were counted as spoiled ballots. Then a change of heart on the part of the Political Science Club, which runs the Parliament — and headlines announced they would be included. Now it looks as if they may be out after all.

Meanwhile, the Independent members (if they really are members) charge that the whole issue of their recognition is being made into a cheap political issue, and add, "any remarks made about it at the Parliament will probably descend into the field of vilification of personalities."

As matters stand now, whether or not they are to have seats will be decided in a minor bill at the opening of the Parliament. The bill will be proposed by the Progressive Conservative Government, which holds 36 seats in the 90-seat legislature.

The Liberals — who are the only party to officially oppose the seating of the Independents — have 23 seats. And there are some rumors of a split in the ranks of the Liberals. The CCF — with 22 seats — is the big question mark which may swing the issue one way or the other. Many observers feel the Independents will gain their seats.

The Independent Party came into being the day before the elections last month, after a letter to The Varsity from George Brigden and Vern Turner, both IV UC. Their party polled 35 votes in the election — enough to win them two seats. At first their ballots were going to be counted as spoiled — but they pleaded their case and won.

All four political parties are reported to have agreed in a meeting of the Mock Parliament Committee to support a motion recognizing the Independents. This motion was to have been moved by the Progressive Conservative Leader David Fry, and seconded by opposition Leader John Medcof.

In a letter to the editor today, Medcof asserts that at no time did the Liberals support the Independent recognition. Now he has insisted on passage of a bill before they get their seats, since the move will affect the constitution of the mock Parliament.

The Independents blame the change from a simple motion to a bill on "certain interests that fear frank and non-party criticism on the floor of the House." And they said, "By making a bill out of the original motion, the parties have just generously agreed to give each other more time to spout the usual line."

Medcof has decided to oppose the seating of the Independents because they failed to get recognition before the election. "If they enter by the regular legal means, getting recognition at Simcoe Hall, they are welcome," he said.

Prime Minister David Fry said his party recognizes that university education leads many people to a position of political independence which they feel morally obliged to accept, and that a Mock Parliament is not representative without them.

Debate Fees System's Merits In Bill On University Finances

The first Mock Parliament of the 1951-52 session will be held tonight in the Legislative Assembly of the Parliament Buildings. It will begin at 8:00 p.m. sharp, and will run until 10:30, when it is expected the discussion on the two bills will be ended.

The main bill of the night which will be brought up after the one on the much discussed Independent question will be one to increase government aid to universities. This is an Act being brought in by the MacDonald-Cartier Club for the establishment of a University Grants Board for the increase of Government Bursaries for higher education." Their bill provides for the setting up and staffing of the Board, the extension of funds for Universities, and a stipulation that no control be exercised by the Federal or Provincial Governments concerned.

The Liberal amendment provides for the elimination of the Fees System, substituting academic qualifications as entrance requirements for University. They state that the Government must pay all fees, and provide bursaries for those requiring assistance. Copies of the complete Act, and the complete amendments will be available at the Mock Parliament.

Said David Fry, Prime Minister of the Mock Parliament, in stating his case for the bill, "We feel very strongly that the University requires additional government support. At the same time increased Government aid should not bring increased Government control," he said. "We feel that a University education should be neither free nor prohibitive."

John Medcoff, leader of the official opposition, stated in support of the amendment that though the Liberals thought the Tory measure a step in the right direction, it still ignored one of the most basic problems of the University educational system.

"The test of university admission should be by academic proficiency, not by ability to pay. Ability, not financial position should govern admission to University; DVA has shown the way, and our party wishes to see its benefit continued."

Vic Quiz For Students On New Union, Funds, Studies and Residences

Victoria College Council this week sent a questionnaire to all Vic students. The purpose of this questionnaire is to try and "adjust relations between students and staff at Victoria College on the basis of mutual need," Principal Bennet said in an interview yesterday afternoon.

There is a little wonderment, he said regarding the extent of extra curricular activities at Vic, and the students' attitude towards them. Victoria College will soon have a student union building which will provide further facilities for student activities. The Victoria College Union is considering operating a coffee shop in the new building. "We want to know what use the students would like to make of the new union," he said.

Any action the Council may decide to take on the basis of the information gathered will be in consultation with the VCU, Principal Bennet added.

One-third of the questions deal with the financial status of the student. Questions include: "What is your estimate of your total expenses for a college career?"; Do you depend on a summer job to finance your next year?"; "What share of your university expenses are you yourself bearing?"

"We want to know if there is sufficient provision made for students who may have difficulty in financing their education," he said. Victoria College has its own Bursary fund.

"Is residence life a help in study?" is another question. There are two points of view, one the proximity to the University as an aid to study and two, that there are too many distractions, Dean Bennet said. "We wish to find out to which of these views the majority of students subscribe."

"Some facetious answers are to be expected," he added. "but we hope that most students will answer the questionnaire carefully and conscientiously."

The questionnaire went on to ask "How many hours do you study? and is your attendance at classes rare?" "How many hours sleep do you average per night?"

Scholarships To Canadians German Offer

The International Student Service has announced that two scholarships for study in Germany are open to Canadian students for next year.

The scholarships valued at DM 250 per month are being offered by the Federal Government on behalf of German students. The German student community in its present situation finds it difficult to make any large scale contribution to their colleagues in other countries.

If fees are not remitted, these will be paid by the German Federal Republic. Third class travel from the German frontier to the university, and return, will be paid.

There are no restrictions with regard to race, sex, nationality, religious or political belief. Preference will be given to those already advanced in their studies who wish to spend a specialized year.

UC Singers Stalled By Financial Flop

The bad breaks the University College Music Club got last term have left it in a very bad financial position, stated club president Bill Kotcheff yesterday. A concert of Christmas carols at Hart House at the end of last term drew a very poor crowd, and went badly in the hole. Conflicting activities, especially the Blue and White Christmas tree, also at Hart House, the same night, are blamed for the lack of attendance.

The Music Club is particularly unfortunate in having to pay for three nights at Hart House at seventy-five dollars a night, Kotcheff felt. The club's annual operetta was cancelled by the UC Lit who felt the enterprise was financially unsound, but the Board of Syndics at Hart House is holding the Club responsible for the three nights at Hart House reserved for the operetta.

One of these nights was sold to Daffydil for $25 and a second was occupied with the financially unsuccessful concert. The total loss on these three nights is expected to run about $150.

The future of the Music Club rests with the UC Lit, which previously threatened to disband it next year in the event of a deficit this year. They, however, have indicated their intention to support the club. "The sins of the fathers shall not be visited on the children," said Dave Rose, Lit president. The club will continue with its activities, notably the UC Singers, this year and will not be expected to make up the deficit next year, as previously threatened.

A Clean Sweep

The History Department has been moved to its new site in Holwood House which will now be known as Baldwin House. Here we see a broom and fire extinguisher in the fireplace of the Baldwin Building in preparation for the change.

Historians Leave Aging Residence

On the first day of the Spring term, last Monday, a few unwary students went to their history lecture at historic old Baldwin House and found it forsaken. A large sign posted near the entrance stated that the History Department had moved to the new Baldwin House located at the corner of Queen's Park Crescent and Hoskin Avenue. The renovated building was formerly known as Holwood House, the men's residence of University College.

"I was told about the change last Fall," said one student, "but I didn't think it would be so soon." Last Spring an announcement issued by Simcoe Hall about the proposed change said it was uncertain when the renovations would begin due to the high cost of construction.

"It's a trifle sanitary, and a little pretty too," said M. R. Powicke of the History Department about the new Baldwin House. "The lighting is brilliant and you can see every word you write," he added.

The School of Slavic Studies will be sharing the new Baldwin House with the Department of History but have not as yet moved into the building. Six rooms in the building will be used by the School of Slavic Studies as offices for the staff members and the two lecture rooms will be shared by the two departments. "We have been looking forward to permanent quarters for the last five years," said the chairman of the Slavics department, B. E. Shore.

Of 42 students polled on the campus Monday, none knew of the proposed move of the School of Slavic Studies and 30 didn't know that the History department had moved. The E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry

The University of Toronto announces the establishment of a new award in creative writing. It will be known as the E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poety, and will consist of a gold medal, valued at $100, and of $100 as a cash prize. The award has been made possible through the gift of an anonymous donor who, believing that good poetry is the best assurance of a vital language and a healthy culture, hopes that the award will be a stimulus to poetic composition.

The donor has asked that the award be named after Professor E. J. Pratt, Professor of English at Victoria College and Canada's most widely known and most distinguished poet. In this way the donor hopes to pay tribute to Professor Pratt's eminence as poet and teacher, and at the same time indicate that the award will be given only for work of high excelence. The E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry is at the present time the only all-University award for creative writing.

At its meeting on December 14th, 1951, the Senate of the University of Toronto passes a statute establishing the E. J. Pratt Medal and Prize in Poetry. The following regulations are to be observed in making the award:

The award is to be made annually by the Senate on the recommendation of a Committee of Award to be named by the President and to consist of not fewer than five members.

The award will be open for competition to all students proceeding to a degree either graduate or undergraduate at this University.

The award will be open for competition to all students best poem or group of related poems of approximately one hundred lines in length.

No previously published composition shall be eligible.

Two copies of typescript, under a pseudonym, shall be submitted to the Registrar of the University on or before April 1st. They shall be accompanied by a separate envelope containing the pseudonym, the name of the candidate, and his course and year.

One copy of the prize-winning composition shall be permanently deposited with the Registrar of the University, but copyright shall remain with the author.

No award may be made in any session in which the Committee so recommends, but in that event two awards may be made in a subsequent session.

This award is tenable with any other award in the gift of the Senate.

This award will be offered for competition for the first time in the session 1951 - 1952.

The medal will be presented and the cash value paid in full to the winner as soon as practicable after the award is approved by the Senate.

NY Publisher To Be Guest

Mr. Arthur Hays Sulzberger will lecture on "Power and Responsibility" before a joint meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute and the Empire Club on Saturday, January 12 at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Sulzberger, who has been in the printing business since 1919, has been President and Publisher of The New York Times since 1935. He received his B.Sc. degree from Columbia University in 1913 and has since received several honorary degrees from universities in the United States and Canada.

He is connected with the Rockefeller Foundation,, the American Red Cross, and is a Director of Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co. of Toronto.

Art Contest Postponed

The deadline for the Undergrad-sponsored art competition open to University College students has been extended to January 15, announced Pat Cumine, editor of the Undergrad. The Undergrad is the UC Literary Magazine.

Special Issue of Fulcrum Answers "Varsity", Hoyle

By IAN MONTAGNES

In a special issue entitled "God and Society", Ottawa University's student newspaper has answered The Varsity's recent stand on the CBC Hoyle question.

The Fulcrum's lead article, headlined "Controversy Flares in Toronto", traces the series of editorials and letters which appeared in The Varsity on this question.

Other articles stress the need for religion in education, dismiss atheism and existentialism as "the philosophy of absurdity", and find apparent inconsistencies in CBC policy.

An open letter signed by one of the students at the predominantly Catholic college calls upon all Catholic students at secular universities to propagate the absolute truth, since there is no one else to do it. The same letter urges the banning of all professors whose teachings do not agree with the Bible.

The special issue appears to be an answer to The Varsity's editorial policy, which attacked the line taken by the Catholic newspapers Ensign and Relations, and the United Church Observer. About 1500 copies of the paper were distributed on the Toronto campus by the Newman Club.

The Catholic papers had editorialized against CBC broadcasts by such persons as Fred Hoyle (an eminent Cambridge mathematician and theoretical astronomer), Brock Chisholm (there is no Santa Claus), Anna Freud, and Bertrand Russell. The papers believed such programs should not be broadcast, because their contents were un-Christian. As a result of the criticism, a parliamentary committee investigated CBC policy.

The Varsity attacked this criticism, on the grounds that it was an attempt to limit free speech. The Nov. 15 editorial also commented that the complaints about speeches "indicate the fear of an influential element of Christians of hearing other viewpoints."

The Fulcrum traces the progress of the dispute, which involved several letters to the editor and one editorial reply, in an article which begins, "On November 25, under a crude cartoon of a bathukolpian miss, The Varsity . . .". A search in one of the larger dictionaries finally revealed "bathukolpian" as meaning "deep-bosomed."

In the open letter to Catholics studying at secular colleges, associate editor Laurence Moleski remarks, "Of course you know God exists. And you know that many other things are not merely possible or probable. You know that they are, because there is such a thing as absolute truth. . . . But although these facts are known to you, thousands of your brother students and many of your professors are ignorant of them."

Bathukolpian Means Deep-Bosomed

The letter continues that while these persons can "close their ears to the Church and Christian teachers", they cannot escape the Catholic students with whom they eat and study. "Therefore, you (Catholics at a secular college) are privileged persons; for in most cases, the fundamental truths, if they are ever to be known to your fellow students, must be made known by you. Their ultimate happiness is in your hands."

In an article entitled "God In Education", The Fulcrum's Editor-in-Chief, Philip Nicolaides, states that for the Catholic an education without religion is not only pedagogically unsound; it is radically defective.

He also says secular education (under the guise of academic freedom) permits professors to overtly attack or covertly undermine Christianity and even theism.

Nicolaides urges that "Christians and Jews alike insist that the secular institutions clean house by banning professors whose teachings contravene the natural law as summed up in the Decalogue, and who oppose the fundamental doctrines of natural religion."

In an article on atheism and existentialism, another student remarks (concerning existentialism) "the attention gained by this philosophy is not a sign in favor of the mental or moral equilibrium of contemporaneous society."

Another article goes on to say, "the dissemination of such destructive ideas (as those expressed by Hoyle) is simply the wildest folly; so too is the fatuous idea that such beliefs do no harm as long as freedom and time are granted to other views." In a country where the greater part of the population gets no higher education, it is asking too much of the common man to separate truth and falsehood in these discussions, the article concludes.

Editor's First Duty To Student—CUP

"The premier responsibility of a university newspaper is to the student body, and only after that to the student council which publishes it and to the university administration"—was the unanimous opinion of the representatives of the Canadian university newspapers at the Canadian University Press conference held over the holidays.

The motion was brought up at a round-table discussion on various aspects of the university newspaper. Barbara McNutt, editor of the Argosy Weekly at Mount Allison University, said that the administration of the University is not God and that the university paper should remember this. She felt that the papers should provide constructive criticism, however, and not just pan the administration.

Luc Larivee from the University of Montreal said that authority is needed in any university or society, and that is why the paper is always under authority. He felt that the best thing is for the university newspaper to be completely independent with wide scope so that once the paper crosses these "borders," the staff can be removed.

Dave Grier from McGill said that most of the editors present would agree that it is to the best interest of students to have some organ that can criticize the student council and be both unbiased and objective.

Denis Bousquet, editor of Le Quartier Latin at Montreal, said that the newspaper should present the opinions of the students. This, he said, can be obtained by taking the directives of the student council since they represent the students. Another Montrealer, Luc Larivee, added that while the university paper should tell the students what the council is doing, opinions and editorials should follow the council.

Doug Fitch from the University of Alberta Gateway said that this was the same as saying that parliament represents public opinion which certainly is not true in all cases. Fitch was only recently appointed editor of the Gateway and is the first editor to sit on the newly formed Permanent Advisory Commission at the University of Alberta. This commission is composed of four council members, the editor-in-chief and two other members of his staff. The president of the student council acts as chairman of the advisory commission which has the responsibility of "the appointment of senior personnel, setting of major policy, etc."

Newman Club Start Series

"Celery will be strictly prohibited," said Newman Club President Ronald Williams announcing a new series of Club sponsored lectures concerning "Problems in Philosophy." The lectures are to be held at Newman Club each Thursday at one o'clock. Students are invited to bring their lunch.

The first lecture will be held today when the Rev. Peter Nash will speak on "Science and Philosophy." Father Nash received his M.A. in Classics at the University of Toronto and later received his PhD at the Institute of Mediaeval Studies.

Hart House Film Showing

The Hart House series of regular Thursday film showings resumes this week, with "An Abstraction With Planets", a modern art film, and "Evolution des Fleurs", in color, and in spite of its rather Gallic title, in English. Showings are in the East Common Room. To accommodate both early and late lunchers, one show will start at 12:30 p.m., and another at 1:30 p.m. All members of the House are welcome to attend this and subsequent showings in this series.

Three members of the History department are seen inspecting their new home. Professor G. M. Craig who was apparently too curious and missed the picture said that his first class was not hit by the TTC strike. Four of the six students arrived at 9.00 a.m. — fairly good for the new year and a new building. Those who made it are Professor J. M. S. Careless, who added "About the only things that need redecorating now, are the professors," Professor Chester Martin, and Professor G. W. Brown.

NOTICE

The Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have invited the University of Toronto to nominate a candidate or candidates for the three scholarships, each of the value of $450 per annum for two years, with possible additional allowances to be offered by the Commissioners for award in Canada in 1952.

Information regarding these scholarships may be found on page 272 of the current Arts calendar.

Applications for the scholarships, accompanied by theses as evidence of the candidates' ability for original research must be received at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, not later than February 15th, 1952.

Attention is drawn to the fact that the Royal Institution of Great Britain Science Research Scholarship has been terminated and will not be offered in 1952.

US Prodigal Son? Is Debate Subject

"Resolved that this House deplores the leadership given by the United States of America in World Affairs". Al Strauss, IV UC, will move this resolution at the Hart House debate to be held in the Debates Room on Wednesday, January 16th. The resolution will be seconded by Dwight Fulford (IV Trinity).

Professor F. H. Underhill, M.A., of the History Department will be the Honorary Visitor at the debate next Wednesday evening, and Mr. J. Barton will be the speaker of the House.

"The Colonies ran away from home at an early age, and now they want to come back and tell Mama how to run her business. At this debate we shall decide whether the prodigal has matured enough to be entitled to the fatted calf," said Publicity Director of the Hart House Debates Committee Walter Bloch yesterday.

The resolution will be opposed by E. W. Sopha of the School of Law, and by D. K. Rose, IV UC. The debate will begin at 8:00 p.m. Wednesday in the Debates Room, Hart House.

Literary Deadline Extended

The deadline for entries for the annual literary issue of The Varsity has been extended one week to Friday, Dec. 17, Managing Editor Elinor Strangways announced yesterday. She added that the extension was due to "a new low" in the number of entries.

The Literary issue of The Varsity has been published annually for the last several years as an outlet for creative writers on the campus supplementary to the meagerly-read crop of college magazines. Prizes are awarded for the best entries in the fields of light verse, serious verse, short stories, essays on any topic, chosen by the writer, and photographs. Said Editor-in-Chief Barbara Browne, "We are giving a chance for the creative instincts of this university to manifest themselves. We hope that there are some whose abilities rise above fly-by-night exhibitionism."

All entries will be criticized and prizes awarded by competent judges, whose names will be announced in a future issue of The Varsity. The literary issue itself should be published early in February, the intervening time being needed for the judging, Managing Editor Strangways said.

The Daily To Drop Mon. Issue

Montreal (CUP) — In keeping with a report on student activities at McGill University here, the McGill Daily will be published only four times a week this term.

The new policy was announced in the last issue of the undergraduate paper.

The Managing Board of the paper announced that the Monday issue would be cut. The report on student activities was passed by the McGill Student Executive Council last year.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"The question of the existence of God is not nearly so important as it used to be. Interest is now directed to showing what is meant by the term 'God.' This lends itself to a very wide divergence of opinion, but is crucial to any attempt to reconcile the claims of faith and reason."

Professor Marcus Long, Department of Philosophy, University of Toronto.

ONE-ACT PLAYS

Some Careless Others Skillful

The five one-act plays produced on Monday and Tuesday at Hart House varied greatly both in subject matter and merit.

In Everybody's Husband, Gilbert Cannan has written the ultimate in the Mother-of-the-Bride school of fantasy. In an effort to mask the absence of thought, Mr. Cannan has heaped cliche upon cliche and thrown in four generations of assorted brides and mothers. In a burst of generosity, he has also seen fit to add a brief epilogue ending in the classic line: "It was only a dream".

This little tragedy was given a fittingly tragic production by the Royal Conservatory Drama Department under the direction of Robert MacLeod. Inadequate lighting, unsuccessful incidental music and a motley collection of furniture all contributed to a general atmosphere of depression.

As the dreaming bride, Margaret Griffin seemed insincere and was often inaudible, while of her elders only Dorothy Jones achieved any success in the affectation of age. Indeed, Annabelle McGillvray, both in make-up and acting, seemed more a younger sister than the mother. The only man present, Paul Wayne, was quite justified in his obvious self-consciousness. Three of these players appeared in the Conservatory's last play. It seems more charitable to remember them only for that. Of the play itself: it was only a night-mare.

Unable to secure rights to Victoria Regina, Trinity substituted on old stand-by, The Boor by Anton Chekov. As the protagonists in this verbal battle James Armour and Juliana Gianelli gave polished performances. Playing to a small snowy audience they managed to display a sound comic sense, although the effect might have been heightened if director Martin Hunter had maintained a faster pace.

For How He Lied to Her Husband, Victoria provided an outstanding set and peopled it with competent players. While the young lover was perhaps more Fennington than Shavian, he was consistently delightful. Jo Shone as the petulant but practical woman and James Turnbull as her pompous "second-rate heavy-weight" husband were well cast and thoroughly successful. David Peddie's handling of the violence was most amusing.

The other two offerings were of a much older period and deal with moral issues.

In Everyman, St. Michael's amateur theatre entry, the accent was laid upon the "amateur" rather than the "theatre". This group has hit upon a revolutionary approach in which the prompter speaks each line first. It is then echoed with considerable uncertainty by one of sixteen unfortunate souls, selected at random and forced onto the stage. During a seemingly endless performance the audience dwindled from a restless seventy-five to a snickering fifty. Everyman at its best is a rather dull play, and this is doubtless the reason that none of the cast bothered to read it in advance. Consequently, any remembered lines were spoken without expression. Mary Lonnergan, as Five Wits, deserves special mention for her Herculean effort in learning her lines. Miss Lonnergan has used the one-word-at-a-time system of memorization and delivery so that any conversions resulting from her lengthy theological exposition are likely to be to atheism rather than to Catholicism.

To Hugh Hood and Patricia McDonnough went the sincere appreciation of the audience for their realization that their only hope lay in broad farce and their comic skill. Indeed, for sheer hilarity, the quartet wearing shower-curtains all displayed great possibilities. As for the others — those who were reading did little better than those who improvised.

The prompter unfortunately remains anonymous. Although at times her speech with a bit more distinct, her characterization was without doubt the finest of the play. The director, Miles Kennedy, also unfortunately, is not anonymous. In addition to his poor judgment in allowing an unrehearsed play to inflict misery upon both the audience and the cast he had the audacity to appear before us as God.

The UC Players Guild has rendered Varsity students a considerable service in their sensitive production of Dr. Faustus. This seldom-produced play is great tragedy, written by Marlowe in verse which at its best rivals Shakespeare and which is of a consistently high calibre.

This production was first given in the Women's Union Theatre, November 21. The Hart House performance was improved in some respects — most notably the lighting which, though occasionally inadequate, achieved several excellent effects in its hints of Hell. However the rigours of the long vacation robbed it of some of the original polish and not all the players were in complete command of their lines.

While John Hampson's direction reflected a good understanding of the play, there was little of the necessary conflict and impulse in his portrayal of Faustus. His smooth voice and the fluency with which he spoke verse and even Latin were admirable but yet his long soliloquies seemed to lack variety of emotion and failed to suggest the vitality and impetuosity of a man who would sell his soul to the devil.

As Mephitophilis, Will Crichton was encased in a most appropriate coat of make-up. But while his voice and movements suggested death effectively, he never seemed properly diabolical.

As Wagner, Jack Sheriff, gave a commendable performance while Walter Stanwick appeared to good advantage both as Lucifer and Valdes. Less successful were Harry Giles and John Roberts whose Old Man was most unconvincing. The Seven Deadly Sins were almost all well played with special credit to Harriet Thomson as Envy and to Beverly Simmers for her choreography. Roger Bull's chorus was clearly spoken in a very solemn style.

One clown scene was retained. However, Thomas Daly's performance (in an unexplained tam) seemed too sophisticated to catch the original rowdy enthusiasm.

Finally, to UC, Victoria and Trinity (in that order): congratulations on skillful productions of good plays and intelligent use of the UTDC as a training ground and experimental theatre. To St. Michael's and the Conservatory: a serious warning that an audience will tolerate only so much carelessness. To the UTDC: a suggestion that a minimum standard and board of review to set up to ensure an audience for the fine work that occasionally appears in these bills.

Sonata Program By deKresz Duo

The Toronto Music Lovers' Club is the only organization in Toronto now putting on a series of public chamber music concerts, since the Conservatory's Wednesday afternoon series died. The concerts are given by the Kresz-Hambourg Trio, or individual members of this group.

On Saturday, January 19 at 4:30, in the Museum Theatre, the second in this year's series will take place. Geza de Kresz, violinist, and Norah de Kresz pianist, will play a program of duo-sonatas, including two modern works.

Since the size of the audience is not a major consideration in the operations of the Toronto Music Lovers' Club, unusual music is often heard — music which normally attracts only musical connoisseurs, and does not draw enough of a crowd to make its production profitable.

For the coming concert the de Kresszs have chosen the Sonata in E flat, Opus 18 by Richard Strauss — a drastically modern-sounding work in classical form, though now over fifty years old, and another sonata by Patricia Blomfield Holt, a contemporary composer. For contrast, the other work on the program will be the Violin Sonata K. 454 by Mozart.

Geza de Kresz is a native of Hungary, but has lived for many years in Canada. He already had a wide reputation as concert soloist at the time of his coming to Canada, and for a time he was concert master of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra.

March & Wife At Royal Alex

Monday, January 14th marks the first appearance in Toronto of a very famous stage couple. They are Fredric March and Florence Eldridge, a husband and wife team who have acted together for the last twenty-five years but who have hardly ever gone on tour in all that time, spending most of the period shuttling back and forth between Hollywood and Broadway.

The play they appear in is the most recent one from the pen of the distinguished American playwright Lillian Hellman — AUTUMN GARDEN. This play was a Broadway success last season when these two stars first created the roles they will play here in Toronto.

Before Christmas the theatre was dark for about five weeks, and many Torontonians worried for fear that the old playhouse was closing up, but they have shows lined up for the whole month.

CBC To Be Best Man At Figaro's Marriage

CBC Wednesday Night on Jan. 16 will be devoted entirely to a complete performance of Mozart's comic opera, "The Marriage of Figaro". Nicholas Goldschmidt will conduct the CBC Opera Orchestra and Chorus, and the singers, for the most part, are the same as those who acted this opera on the stage of the Royal Alexandra last year. A good many people have probably wondered why the CBC takes it upon itself to duplicate the efforts of the Saturday afternoon series of opera broadcasts from New York. One obvious reason, of course, is to give Canadian singers a chance to sing opera in Canada and make money at it —a laudable purpose, perhaps, but not a very convincing reason to switch to CBL next Wednesday.

There are other reasons, though. For one thing, unusual operas are performed occasionally (Puccini's "Turandot" and Britten's "Albert Herring" for instance), and in line with the CBCs policy, new and old Canadian works also get a chance to be heard (witness this season's "Deirdre" by Healy Willan).

Finally, in the opinion of this writer, the CBC's radio performances of some of the classical operas, as well as of the modern ones have sometimes been superior to those coming from New York. I am thinking now of the memorable performance of Britten's "Peter Grimes" two years ago, and of the Mozart and Beethoven works that have appeared from time to time. My opinion is not quite as ridiculous as it may sound at first.

The Metropolitan Opera Company —magnificent organization though it is — has broadcast some less-than-thrilling performances in the last few years, After all, a Saturday matinee is only one performance in a whole week of opera to them. To the young singers of the CBC, on the other hand, the broadcast is the occasion of the year, and frequently the results show the excitement and tension of the performance.

Also, performances broadcast from the stage are bound to suffer technically from the movements of the actors, the banging of the stage crew, and the sotto voce comments of the prompter. The CBC operas are generally broadcast from Massey Hall, and the brilliance and clarity with which they come over the air is astonishing.

Next Wednesday's Figaro will be James Milligan. Suzanna, his fiancee, will be played by Marguerite Gignac, the Count Almaviva by Ernest Adams, and the Countess by Louise Roy. Students will recall the last three of these in their respective roles from the performance last year at Hart House.

As at the Hart House concert and at the Royal Alexandra, the opera will be sung in the English translation of Edward J. Dent. This translation is perhaps the most successful of long series of brilliant ones by this author. Without sticking to a hard-and-fast literality, he conveys the spirit not only of the Italian libretto of Lorenzo da Ponte, but also of the caustically witty French original of Beaumarchais.

"The Marriage of Figaro" depends more than most operas on an understanding of the text for its full appreciation. The story is just another eighteenth-century comedy, but the situations of which it is made up are highly significant. Music and words combine to produce a sharply-focussed picture of the glittering display and the sordid realities of an eighteenth-century court.

The bitter satire of the life of the noble classes gave the play enormous popularity in some cities, but caused it to be banned in others. In Vienna, Mozart's opera was the only version that passed the consors. It was first produced in 1786, just three years before the social system it lampoons began to break apart in the French revolution.

Tune in next Wednesday for the music of Mozart, and Beaumarchais' story of the Mariage of Figaro. The Count Almaviva, the enlightened gentleman who has resigned his rights over his female vassals though continuing to exercise them where he can; Suzanna, the present object of his quests; the Reverend Don Basilio, procurer for his lordship; Barbarina, the not-so-simple county maid: Cherubino, the amorous page-boy — all these and a host of others will be there to entertain you.

Christopher Helleiner.

Inspector Calls On This Week In Hart House

When a girl is found dead by her own hand, the wheels of action are set in motion for the play AN INSPECTOR CALLS by J. B. Priestley, which is being presented by the Victoria College Dramatic Society this Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Insp. Goole, a strange and commanding police detective sets to work to discover what drove the girl to such a desperate step, and he is led to the house of George Birling, a prosperous manufacturer.

He interrupts the family at a special dinner marking the engagement of Mr. Birling's daughter Sheila to Gerald Croft, and he proceeds to a cross-examination of the whole family and the daughter's fiance. This questioning shows that each of the people present has contributed in some way to the girl's suicide over the course of a year or so.

We almost expect the inspector to make several arrests, but of course, there was no legal crime involved. However, some of the younger people realize that there has been moral crime. When the inspector leaves they argue with their elders' stand of indifference.

Priestley's play is suspenseful, gripping, and at all times bears directly on the fact of moral crime, that is beyond legal punishment.

Tickets for this production are available at the Hart House box-office and in Alumni Hall at Vic. Performances begin at 8:30 p.m. in Hart House Theatre.

Toronto Music Lovers' Club — An afternoon concert of sonatos for violin and piano, presented in the Museum Theatre by Geza and Norah de Kresz.

Boszormenyi-Nagy Returns

BOSZORMENYI-NAGY

Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy, pianist, who will give next Sunday's concert in Hart House is already well-known to students at the University. Last term he played a recital to a packed house at Wymilwood, and last year he also appeared on the Hart House Sunday Evening Concert Series.

Born and trained in Hungary, Boszormenyi - Nagy succeeded Dohnanyi in the chair of piano at the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest. He held this position until 1948, when he came to Canada to become one of the leading piano teachers at the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto.

During the past three and a half years, Boszormenyi-Nagy has fulfilled many concert engagements in Toronto and in other parts of Canada, including Alberta, the west coast, and the Maritimes.

Boszormenyi-Nagy has also crossed the border into the States for concert appearances, including a sonata recital with the noted violinist Yehudi Menuhin in Chicago. Prior to his arrival on this continent, he made concert appearances throughout Europe.

For his program on Sunday evening in Hart House, Boszormenyi-Nagy will play a number of "Moments Musicaux" by Schubert — short lyrical pieces, probably having their origin in improvisations. In addition he will play the Sonata in F minor, Op. 5 by Brahms —the earliest well-known work of this composer, dating from the early 1850's, when he was still a young and unknown concert pianist.

Tickets for this event are available free of charge to members of the house at the hall porter's desk, or from faculty representatives. Guests, including ladies, may be brought on double tickets. The concert begins at 9:00 p.m. in the Great Hall.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

The basketball team looks like it is getting serious. The black steel gates on the gym doorways are closed now during practices, and would-be spectators have to do their spectating from the track above the gym. Without the usual flock of onlookers blocking the doorway and guys fooling around with basketballs in the corners, the place looks as deserted as Toronto's streets on New Year's morning.

With a record like the Blues' slate of one won, eight lost to date, they should be getting serious. Their one win was their only home game so far; on their tours south of the line they have doubtless been distributing a tremendous amount of international goodwill, but have yet to win a game. They started playing tough teams before they were in shape, and lost by big scores. Before Christmas, nearly half the team were working nights or on shift work, besides trying to play basketball by day. Last week it was the SPS mid-term finals, which kept Natanson and Monnot away. And without those tall men under the hoop, the Blues can't do very much.

They've got two weeks till they open the Intercollegiate season in Montreal on the 25th, when they play McGill, and another week after that before they meet Western, the Intercollegiate champions. Those will be two weeks of hard work, in which some will have to get back in shape after their recent lay-off, and in which one or two late-comers will be trying to crack the starting line-up.

Eddie Brennan decided today to come out again and try out his aching legs. Sidelined till now with shinsplints, he has not been troubled by them lately, and will work out until he can decide for sure whether they will stand up or not. If they do, he will bring back some of the drive and competitive spirit of last year's team which has been lacking this year. He operated well with Natanson — nobody this year has been able to get the ball in to him and then cut in and take the ball again for a lay-up the way Brennan did last year. Having someone besides Natanson who can score when Natanson has the ball will help the big guy a lot too; he usually has two or three guys crawling over him whenever he gets the ball.

Bill Wilson is another member of last year's team who has come out late, and may work back into the starting line-up. Actually, if Natanson, Brennan, and Wilson regain their last year's form, the team should be a little better in scoring than last year's, in view of the improvement of Huycke and Maynerick.

As far as the home fans are concerned, the team will have practically a clean slate when they engage Curry College at Hart House Saturday night, with only one home game played to date. The opposition between now and the opening of the Intercollegiate season should not be as tough as what they have been facing.

* * * * *

The Orphuns played YMHA last night, but our early deadline these days nixes any hope of getting results on night games. The bus strike prevents us from getting late copy to the printer.

YMHA, through recent importing, has what must be the tallest team in Canada. A guy by the name of John Palmer from England, a dead ringer for George Mikan (in appearance) stands 6'11" ", we hear, and a couple of players go around 6'5" or 6'6". The Orphuns tied for first with the Tri-Bells, would probably be a good match for the Blues, with Madden and Russell who are ineligible for Intercollegiate ball and Stulac who hasn't time to practice.

Cage Blues Play Curry At Athletic Night Sat

Pitching Sportshoes

The Intramural sports schedule continued yesterday on the hockey and basketball fronts. In the arena at noon, Vic III defeated the UC III puck squad by a 4-1 count. The Vicsters scoring was evenly divided, with MacDowell, Sheridan, Hinder and Ivey each lighting the lamp once. Stefan was the lone marksman for the losing Redmen.

Vic and UC also met on the basketball floor yesterday afternoon, and the Scarlet and Gold thirds came from behind to hold the UC fourths to a 21-21 draw. The Redmen took an 11-4 lead in the first frame, and increased it to 17-8 by the end of the second session. But the Vicsters came back strong in the last period, outscoring their opposition 13-4.

McIntyre was top scorer in the contest with seven points for the Victoria crew, while Frame with six and Jackson with five paced the Redmen.

In another major league b-ball tilt, St. Mike's B edged Pharmacy A 21-17. The game was hard fought all the way, with the Irish showing a slight edge on the play. Fuhrman led the winners with a nine point display, while McCauly hooped an equal number in a losing cause.

Orfuns Play East York At Hart House Tonight

The Blues take on Curry College as the feature event of the Athletic Night this Saturday. Since the JV's play twice this week as Orphuns in the City League, they will not participate in the preliminary. Two high school teams, Jarvis and Thorold, will fill this part of the bill.

The University of Toronto Orfuns, undefeated in five starts, are trying an iron man stunt in playing two games in as many nights. Last night they met a revamped YMHA quintette and this evening they tackle the East York Grads at Hart House. Currently tied for top spot in the city League with the Toronto Tri-bells, the Orfuns have a good chance of moving out in front if they copp both games.

George Stulac, Jim Russell, and Leo Madden have led the Orfuns to date, and if they can maintain their early season pace Dalt White's crew should come out in front. Stulac was the leading scorer in the TSSAA last year, while Russell was the sparkplug of the St. Mike's Interfaculty Basketball squad. Madden was picked on the all-star team of New York City high schools. The latter two are in a pre course at St. Mike's and so are ineligible for Intercollegiate competition.

Trinigals Beat Vic

From the starting ding to the final buzz it was St. Hilda's all the way in a female hockey fest at Varsity Arena yesterday noon when St. Hilda's I shut-out Vic II 2-0. The score is no indication of what actually took place, and were it not for an unusual talent of Vic goalie Joan Wickware to flip the oncoming puck up over the back of the net, the wailing would have been a lot louder in the Vic dressing room. Trinity surpassed their opponents in both skating and stick-handling prowess and showed evidence of "thought before shot".

The Saints' powerhouse line of Mathews, Macpherson and Ketchum was a constant threat. During the first period the Trinity gals monopolized the play banging in two tallies. The second frame saw plenty of spills and near counters but both goalies were wide-awake on deflections. The Red Scarlet and Gold came back fighting in the third. June Chandler led some spectacular break-aways but was unable to get the disc past Saint net-minder Elsie Bongard and the Trinity defence easily cleared the puck into the Vic zone.

Scotty Mathews sank both Saint goals and June Chandler and Ginny Goulding did their durndest for Vic. With a little more practice the Vic team should gain the coherence it needs. Seems pretty hazardous to all teams in the league when a game is won by default. The team that does show up gets a whole free hour of practice and at this point of the game it is likely to make a big difference.

If the enthusiastic gallery witnessing this tourney is any indication, the interest in women's hockey is very much alive. But as an intercollegiate sport it is as soggy as an old saddle-shoe. Last year the Varsity girls' hockey team won all of their games. Many of the gals that comprised this team are back playing hockey this year. Anne Boulding, hockey star of '51, has departed, but Barb Weatherhead, Scotty Mathews and "B.J." Fraser are all present. There is no doubt that Varsity could again turn out a top team but other universities just don't appear interested. The Golden Gaels dropped out after two decisive defeats at the hands of the Blue girls last year. Neither Western, McMaster, nor Macdonald College have made any advances, in spite of unofficial reports from Guelph.

It's a crying shame, with all the talent going to waste, but until some soul makes a large donation to women's university sports, the gals' hockey this year will be limited to intramural contests.

Under Way Now

Women's intramural hockey games provide plenty of opportunity to watch the finer points of the game displayed in slow motion. The time is 12:30, the place is Varsity Arena. (Bring your own lunch.)

Varsity Boxers On Road US Army Cadets Beware

For the first time since before the war, a University of Toronto team will take on a team from the United States Military Academy, later this month, it was announced yesterday by the Athletic Directorate. Tony Canzano's Blue boxing squad will make the trek to West Point for a January 26th meet against the Army Kaydets, generally considered one of the U.S.' top college fisticuff centres. This meet gained last minute approval from the Directorate in their Tuesday night session, thus saving a US roadtrip for the boxers who had been forced to cancel their originally scheduled Syracuse safari, slated for next weekend, because of too many exam commitments.

Howard Greenly, SPS, intercollegiate 175 pound champ, will lead the Varsity maulers whose showing against the Amerks should be a good indicator on how they'll stack up in Intercollegiate competition. Others heading south will include Nick Betz, UC, in the 130 lb. class, St. Mike's freshman Russ Ryley at 135 pounds, veteran intermediate battler Mike Wright, Trinity, in the 140 division, Roberto Curceiro, SPS, at 147, Norm Green, SPS, in the 155 weight, yet another Engineer Pete Petcoff at 165 pounds, and Roy Stevenson, a first year Skuleman, filling the large brogans of now-graduated intercollegiate heavyweight champ Tim Turner.

Audience Charmed By Spanish Singer

Victoria de los Angeles, the re-crowned young Spanish soprano, made her first Toronto appearance last Monday at Massey Hall, before a small, but justifiably enthusiastic audience. Three encores did not nearly satisfy them, and the cheering and stamping went on long after Miss de los Angeles signified that she would sing no more.

Almost everyone must have read the lyrical descriptions of Victoria de los Angeles' voice in the American magazines and papers. I could scarcely add to them here. Let me say, however, that in addition to her silky-smooth impeccable vocal technique, she has a very remarkable personal charm and stage presence, that make her records seem quite lifeless compared to the real thing.

The program began with three arias from the 17th and 18th centuries by Monteverdi, Alessandro Scarlatti and Handel. Miss de los Angeles took all these very lightly and easily. The full force of her voice was never used, and although the last two were technical display pieces, the lyrical ease with which she handled them made them seem deceptively naive.

A group of Lieder by Schumann and French songs by Faure and Ravel followed. Here more intensity was required, particularly in "Ich grolle nicht" from "Dichterliebe". However, Miss de los Angeles made these songs as simple as possible too. Only in the biggest climaxes and she let her voice ring out, and at every opportunity she kept to the intimate, quiet tone which had characterized her first group. Ravel's setting of a Hebrew hymn of praise was particularly effective, sung in a dispassionate, almost cold way.

The famous scena from Gounod's "Faust" beginning with "The King of Thule" ballad and going on to the "Jewel Song" could not have been better chosen. Miss de los Angeles is the ideal Marguerite. She has the requisitely mellow voice, yet sounds simple and unaffected. For once, one did not have the impression that the "Jewel Song" was put there merely to bring down the house. The entire scene was a wonderful bit of acting, without costumes or sets, and almost without gestures.

The final group consisted of Spanish folk songs. Here Miss de los Angeles' word must be taken as final as regards interpretation. Undoubtedly, she is right and everyone else wrong, for she, after all, is the Spaniard. She sang them without any of the tragic intensity that singers commonly give them, but simply as ordinary ditties, delightful but not profoundly emotional. Even the well-known and, supposedly, bitter "Segudilla Murciana" in de Falla's arrangement, was turned into a simple folk tune.

For her last encore, Miss de los Angeles brought out her guitar, and accompanied herself in a folk song. If anything was required to bewitch the audience further, this turned the trick. Her quiet, intimate voice and equally quiet running accompaniment provided a fittingly unpretentious close to a charming concert.

Christopher Helleiner.

EAC Plans Exchanges To Guelph

Final arrangements for the Student Help For Asian Relief and Education campaign will be made at the External Affairs Commission's open meeting this afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Victoria Alumni Hall.

The EAC will also discuss the two forthcoming joint weekends, where students and co-eds from the Ontario Agricultural College, Ontario Veterinary College, Macdonald College and the University will meet at the Caledon Hill Farm. In charge of the joint weekends will be Dorothy Liebermann, chairman of the Carabin week-end.

Low Score

There will be no more bare knees in the Army. A year old discussion on whether short trousers were practical for summer wear by members of the Army, ended this week with the announcement that any existing authority for the wearing short trousers by troops is withdrawn.

And for several good reasons. Short trousers, Army Headquarters pointed out, while ideal in many instances for training purposes cause more trouble than they are worth.

Good Builds, Personalities Are Paying

Montreal (CUP) — A recent McGill Daily advertisement, asking for male clothing models of "good build, unselfconscious, and having a pleasing personality and mature appearance", resulted in fifty-four well-built, mature-appearing, pleasing McGill University personalities appearing for the ten jobs.

The good builds appeared before the Young Men's Section of the Montreal Clothing Industry Council. After giving their names and telephone numbers, they walked unselfconsciously in a circle and stood with their jackets off, showing their backs and shoulders.

Paid $25 for two evenings' work by the Clothing Industry Council, the ten fortunate job-seekers have the opportunity to purchase any of the specially tailored outfits modelled at considerably less than the manufacturer's cost.

Spreading The Gospel

Newmania ?

In a final pre-Christmas rush of ambition, The Varsity published a theme issue devoted to education. At the time, we admitted that such an issue was intended to stimulate discussion rather than present absolute standards. On such a basis, it appears to have been a success, perhaps more among members of the staff, than the students themselves.

These being the first and sober days of the new year, we intend to indulge in a little introspection. There is rarely a better excuse for self analysis.

Among the vast and varied list of writers and subjects, a few ideas and phrases seemed to crop up again and again. A liberal education came in for a hearty round of applause. Only through a thorough grounding in the liberal arts could we ever hope to preserve our free society, it was suggested.

Student conformity took quite a beating from all sides. Progress requires inquiring minds, but "students have forgotten to question". Another observed that examinations have played a large part in producing minds which simply absorbs facts and refuses to digest ideas.

Of course, the value of intellectual freedom was stressed and there were several exhortations to "look southward angels." Only if the university continues to be "a community in search of truth" can it hope to provide leadership to the community.

While lip service was paid to the fact that the world has changed, and inevitably also, the universities, we wonder whether this fact permeated into our discussion of education. Speaking of Matthew Arnold, Professor McLuhan observed that, in Culture and Anarchy, he fell > "into the trap of moralizing about the plight of culture in terms of an antecedent situation."

Did we tend to do the same thing? We are not often called reactionary but in this case the term might be used justifiably. Perhaps we suffer from Newmania — a laudable disease.

Admittedly, some of the most notable expressions of the idea of a liberal education were formulated in the nineteenth century. The liberal artists of today, however, are possibly overly indebted to their predecessors—they are living on borrowed steam.

Even if yesterday's ideas were equally valid today, they inevitably lose some of their potency through repetition. A considerable degree of shock resistance is built up in everyone's mind. Phrases like "intellectual freedom", "liberal education", "education for a free society", "democracy" and "our way of life" are tossed off at the drop of the hat and received, with all the connotations, as gospel truth. They stand as symbols whose meaning becomes progressively more elusive. Unfortunately, few people analyze the gospel very frequently. Fewer still translate the gospel into modern idiom.

Some of these ideals — our heritage of freedom — and their catch words which supposedly express their substance, may be very fine, but they must be reinterpreted in terms of our times. That is the only way in which they will acquire any meaning in people's minds, and, thence, carry any conviction with them.

In an age of machines and mass communication, the Newman and Mills of the nineteenth century may become displaced priests. Yet up till now they have no worthy successor.

OUR READERS WRITE

The Mock Controversy

Independents

Editor, The Varsity:

We, the INDEPENDENTS owe an explanation to the students on the campus. Anyone who read The Varsity of Dec. 12th expects that there will be two INDEPENDENT members sitting in the House tonight. The Varsity article stated that "at the beginning of the next Mock Parliament," it would be moved, "that the Independents be entitled to . . . two seats in the legislature during the present session." It is now extremely doubtful whether the Independents will leave the gallery.

Designed as a general motion to be passed without debate, the measure has now been transformed by some peculiar partisan machinations into a bill. Certain interests that fear frank and non-party criticism on the floor of the House have backed down on the Mock Parliament Committee's original decision. The right of the Independents to their seats has been made a cheap political issue. By making a bill out of a simple motion of acceptance the parties have just generously agreed to give each other more time to spout the usual line. Any remarks made on the bill will probably descend into the field of vilification of personalities. We hope that this shall not be so.

These are the facts. The Independents speak in good faith and still believe that an attitude of fair play will prevail. If not, the students have been mocked by the Mock Parliament.

Sincerely, the two voices in the Wilderness.

V. G. Turner, IV UC.
G. W. Brigden, IV UC.

Liberals

Editor, The Varsity:

I should like to clarify certain statements appearing in the last regular Varsity. I was reported as agreeing to second a motion providing for the seating of independents in the Mock Parliament. At no time has the Liberal Club agreed to the seating of Independents. The suggested move will involve a change in the constitution of the Mock Parliament. It cannot be dealt with by a simple motion of general interest. Hence I must ask that it be introduced as a minor bill.

There is a large body of non-party opinion on this campus. It should be represented in the Mock Parliament by independent members. The decision regarding admissibility of parties was made and published early in October but this group took no action at that time. They had an opportunity to get their names on the ballot in a legitimate manner. If they had obtained recognition (a simple letter of application probably would have been sufficient) they would have been welcomed by all parties. They had their opportunity and muffed it. If they comply with regulations in the next election they will be most welcome.

This is not a question of whether independents have a place in the Mock Parliament; that is conceded. Still no one should be able to appoint himself to the ballot simply by writing a letter to a newspaper. Rules are made for a purpose. If this group do not abide by them, they exclude themselves from the game.

John Medcof,
IV UC.

Always Space

There is always room for more controversy. And we would like to remind our readers that they can either build fires or add fuel to them in the back page of The Varsity.

Editorial articles for those who have ideas burning holes in their heads, are always welcome. Then, there are Champus Cats for those whose thoughts cavort in a more whimsical fashion.

And, as many readers already seem to know, there are great possibilities in letters to the editor.

Keeping Posted

It's got so bad lately that I am almost afraid to graduate. I had heard from usually reliable sources that not all the outside world was culturally corrupt and wickedly opportunistic like the Bookstore and Gordon Sinclair and Linseed Studios up on Bloor Street and well, for an example, take the TTC. (Ed. note: Take a taxi, you mean.) I had thought that even on the outside there were a few dignified people left who were interested in stamping out the horrid things of life like Dean Ferguson. (Ed. note: please watch syntax.)

One event during the Christmas season showed me how wrong I was. I went down to the Post Office and got a job sorting Christmas cards.

I clearly saw that my duty was to effect a cultural renaissance. I opened up the cards one by one and read the verse inside and every time I saw "season's greetings" without the apostrophe or the words "cute" or "swell" I crossed them out and wrote the word "shame" in the margin with a blue pencil. Well, I was only on that job until noon hour. The supervisor told me that he was suddenly overstaffed and that perhaps I would be happier helping the postman on the routes. I gave him the blue pencil and he promised to check through all the cards because, as I pointed out to him, my fingers would get too cold outside to be able to open all the cards myself.

Well, I went out to a sub-station where I was greeted with all sorts of laughter and good cheer. Apparently, they were expecting me. The supervisor pointed to a pile of magazines and told me to do something intelligent with them. I sorted out all the Reader's Digests and gave one to each postman and told him to correct all the grammar and punctuation. One or two were a bit nasty, but most of them bowed a little or patted me on the head and smiled sweetly at me. Most of them were pretty busy, and brought them back to me but I made them promise to read the editorial page of their newspaper for mistakes in logic.

Well, then we went out on the street to deliver the mail. I was given a load of magazines and sent along Wellesley Street. I called back to my postman that I wouldn't deliver Time, Life, or Reader's Digest because the U of T did not recommend them. He was rather rude about it and told me to burn them in the middle of the street if it would make me happy. I don't smoke so I didn't have a match. I decided to bury them in a snowdrift. (Editor's note: Perhaps after the April thaw, it can be determined whether or not the Reader's Digest has articles of lasting significance.) The U of T has never said anything about the rest of the magazines so I delivered them all: New Liberty, Flash, Screen Romances, Canadian High News, Popular Mechanics etc. By the time I got back to the station, they were overstaffed again, so I went home and sulked.

DEFEAT CAMPI AID BILL

No Independent Members Until Next Year

Govt. Motion For 92 Seats Turned Down

There will be no Independents sitting in this year's sessions of the Mock Parliament. A Conservative government motion was only partly passed by the parliament last night and references to the appointment of two Independents this year were deleted.

Opposition leader John Medcoff of the Liberal Party said that the Liberals endorsed sections 1, 2, and 5 of the governments motion. Medcoff moved an amendment that the act should read to provide for Independent members at the next Mock Parliament elections. This amendment was passed.

The government did not stand in danger of defeat as Prime Minister Fry stated that the Conservatives did not regard a defeat of this motion ae a want of confidence.

Fry stated that the students on the campus who do not feel that they can support any of he four political parties and would vote Independent would be badly underrepresented by only two members. The Conservatives, he added, did not feel that the Independents had to form an Independent Party to stand for election and register at Simcoe Hall.

The Honorable member from Barrat said the Liberals oppose the method being used by the government. He said that free elections should be run according to pre-existing regulations and termed the motion a "typical Tory trick—retro-active legislation."

This friendly looking fellow, who is a cross between a snowman and a hallowe'en character was built by the dental nursing students. Typical of what can be achieved in snow sculpture, it may give students on this campus an impetus to rival some of the New England colleges which are famous for their annual snow-sculpturing contests.

All Sides Criticize Government Bill "Ill-timed, Clumsy"

The Conservative Government of Prime Minister David Fry was defeated last night at the opening session of the Mock Parliament. However all three opposities parties were placed in a tricky position for by defeating the government they also defeated a bill which they had already endorsed. The motion defeated was an act for the establishment of University Grants Boards, for the increase of government aid to universities and to make available government bursaries for higher education.

The act provided for the setting up of Universities Grants Boards in several provinces to administer, assess and apportion all government grants to the Universities. The meaning of the word assess was questioned and declared by the government to mean "to levy or to evaluate" in reply to an opposition question of whether the boards could assess.

In proposing the motion, Fry said that while recognizing the the needs of the universities, the danger of government control of the universities was also a problem.

Liberal member, Dwight Fulford, censured the government for a "hastily-drawn up, ill-timed . . . clumsy" bill and mentioned that more was spent on prisons than on universities. CCF leader Walter Parker criticized the bill for failing to provide for specific finances and for the construction of universities in underprivileged areas.

Parker also questioned the definition of places of higher learning. A CCF amendement called for places of higher learning to be any place "teaching arts, humanities, or physical sciences in their advanced state." This amendment would have added 50 members to the board in Ontario.

A Liberal amendment to the amendment which would have restricted the membership to universities was defeated. Also defeated was an earlier amendment by the LPP party which would have provided for the representation on these boards of farm and labor organizations as well as "the inclusion of any members of organizations interested in peace, excluding the University of Toronto Peace Club as now constituted."

The government objected to amendments by the CCF and Liberal parties which would have abolished fees and would have given the governments any say in how money granted by the boards should be spent. Both opposition amendments would have left the universities with the right to set scholastic standards.

The amendments were passed, but the government motion was then defeated.

Shirley Endicott, leader of the Labor Progressive Party, suggested that what was needed was a policy that did not restrict industry and would allow for education. She claimed a definite connection existed between a government policy restricting industry and another restricting education.

Canadiens May Replace Leafs For Asian Aid Hockey Game

The Maple Leafs will not be staging an inter-squad hockey game for SHARE this year, but there is a chance that Montreal Canadiens may play in Varsity Stadium for the benefit of Asian Aid.

This was part of the report issued by Tim Armstrong, Chairman of the Executive Committee of Student Help for Asian Relief and Education (SHARE), at the meeting of the SAC External Affairs Committee last night.

Armstrong reported that the Leafs had decided not to follow their policy of the last three years of playing an exhibition inter-squad game for charity. However, there is some hope of getting the Canadiens to stage such an exhibition Armstrong said, and added that attempts to get the Leafs would be made first.

Scott Simons, I Arts, introduced the motion that season tickets to Varsity Stadium not be accepted on the night of the SHARE skating party, January 21. The motion was carried to the Students' Administrative Council for approval.

At this point Bud Trivett, II Law suggested that "The tickets for the skating party should be sold through charming young damsels" rather than through the SAC representatives, because the representatives could not devote so much time to the sale of tickets.

Armstrong, continuing his report stated that The Varsity will carry a four-page special insert on Monday, Jan. 14. Campaign posters and pamphlets have been printed, and are being distributed on the campus.

Trivett charged that there has not been enough publicity on the Campaign Dinner to be held in Hart House on Tuesday, and that many students on the campus thought they needed special invitation to attend it.

Armstrong replied, "His Excellency Mohammed Ali, Pakistani High Commissioner, did not accept th invitation until the latter part of December, and so the affair could not be publicized in The Varsity."

Joan Presant, chairman of the National Federation of University Students suggested that since nothing could be done about this anymore, every member of the EAC should sell five tickets.

Dorothy Leibermann, II Pre-Meds said that it was not fair to ask some members of the EAC to sell tickets and that she at the present moment could not even buy one. However, when asked, a number of students indicated they could sell five or more tickets.

Armstrong remarked that the weather prevents SHARE from putting up a large thermometer on the front campus, and suggested, that The Varsity might carry a thermometer in each issue during campaign week, showing the receipts coming in, possibly from all faculties.

Trivett exclaimed, "I once ran the McGill War Memorial Campaign of $10,000 where we had a thermometer and things came in so slowly that instead of being an incentive, it was actually depressing to see it going up so slowly first. This happened, because most of the canvassers tended to hand in their reports late." EAC decided to wait and see.

Receive Telegrams India Lauds Help Of All Varsity Aid

All the Asian universities which were to have received relief All Varsity Aid last year have acknowledged receipt of their materials. This was announced yesterday by SAC Secretary-Treasurer E. A. Macdonald, who showed the telegrams of acknowledgment.

The wires come on the eve of All Varsity Aid's successor, SHARE, which begins next week. The Asian relief campaign which was held last year netted about $8,100; this year's campaign is aiming at $10,000.

The three wires were short and terse, but represented acknowledgment for equipment valued at over $10,000. Among the goods sent to the University of Sindh, in Karachi, Pakistan, were 43 microscopes, valued at $4,000; instruments valued at $1,000 donated by the Engineering Society from their surplus stocks, and $1,500 worth of books donated by students and staff.

Sick room supplies were sent to the University of Jamia, India, along with a mimeographing machine and a special commercial refrigerator designed for their hostel.

And $1,400 worth of drugs were sent to the University of Delhi, India, which also received a mimeograph machine.

Plan Lebensraum Re Student Cars

Arrangements for 200 additional parking spaces on the north end of the back campus are being made through the Superintendent's Office, announced E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC yesterday.

These provisions will be in effect only for the duration of the TTC strike for the convenience of students who must drive to the campus in order to get to lectures. Admission to this improvised parking lot will be by Admit-to-Lecture cards only.

Staff members and the general public will not be admitted to this temporary parking lot which will have no time limit. A space will be cleared at the north entrance to the Hart House lane and will be used as the entrance and exit.

One condition attached to the setting up of these facilities is that parking will be subjected to stoppage on any day on which the ground of the back campus becomes soft or whenever it seems that the playing fields might be injured.

The snow on the back campus was being levelled off by tractors, yesterday. This arrangement goes into effect this morning.

Masthead Meeting

All masthead members of The Varsity are asked to attend a meeting in the editorial office at 3:00 p.m. today. Amongst those expected to attend are: Murray Watkins, Hugh Niblock, Pearl Parnes, Marg Welch, Harry Nelson, Ian Montagnes, Elinor Strangways, Jim Anderson, Bruce Derville, Ted Sparrow, Ralph Wintrob, Mal Crawford and any others whose names have been missed.

High School Kids Swamp Pygmalion Add Extra Show

Wednesday was one of the biggest opening days for ticket sales that Hart House Theatre has ever had, according to theatre business manager James Hozak. He said that the first matinee showing of Pygmalion was sold out on the opening day. There will be two matinees for high school students on Saturday, Jan. 19th and again on the 26th.

Hozak explained that usually matinee performances have been for Shakespeare plays. However, this year Pygmalion is on the secondary school reading list, a fact which Hart House Theatre was unaware of when the play was scheduled. Hozak said that they received so many letters that it was decided to have the two matinees.

Four years ago, Hozak said, Eaton Auditorium had some trouble with high school students attending a Shakespearian performance. In a direct contrast to this, Hart House has always found the high school audiences to be very attentive, often bringing their texts with them, and Hozak said, managing to laugh in the right places.

There will be ten performances of Pygmalion, starting on Friday, Jan. 18. Ticket sales for the performances other than the matinees are also at a record level according to Hozak.

Aid SHARE Show Films From Indians

The SHARE committee reported today that a series of films has been obtained through the High Commissioners to Canada from India and Pakistan.

The films cover the fields of politics and economics as well as cultural life of India and Pakistan, two of the countries to which SHARE help is to be sent.

"Kashmir Conflict", a political film, presents the Moslem side of the current dispute, while the second film in the same topic has been obtained presenting the Indian side.

These films are to be shown daily next week from one to two p.m. both in the East Common Room of Hart House and in Room 1135 of the Walberg Building.

Procedure In House Questioned

The first motion brought before the Mock Parliament last night was a motion by Labor Progressive Party leader, Shirley Endicott that the house should go on record as approving the bringing back of Gen. Kurt Meyer to this country to serve the remainder of his sentence. The motion was defeated.

The House did unanimously thank speaker Davies of the Ontario legislature for guiding the House in correct parliamentary procedure. One of the speaker's rulings was questioned by a Liberal member who quoted a text he had brought with him.

The session was opened by the traditional ringing of the bell, and a new note was added by the 2 Liberal Club members marching in behind a co-ed playing the bagpipes. The Liberals could not take their seats as the official opposition until the CCF party had moved. The CCF party's move forced the LPP members to cross the floor while the House was in session.

Several times members found themselves forced to vote on the wrong side of a motion because they had not voted previously and had tried to abstain. Liberal party leader John Medcoff criticized the CCF party for making such a mistake when one of the votes was being recorded.

NOT CRICKET

(Exchange)—The British National Union of Students has voted in an official debate that the threat to peace comes as much from the United States as from Russia. The vote was 58 to 32 in favor of the motion.

The debate was held at the NUS annual congress at Nottingham, England. Principal speakers in the debate were Konni Zilliacus, reported to be a former left-wing Labor party M.P. and F. O. Darvall, director-general of the British Union.

The AVR

A Corpse Revives

Coming Events

The All-Varsity Revue this year hopes to duplicate or even surpass the success of previous years' productions. That the competition will be stiff is proven by the above photo from the last previous show.

By JERRY BROWNE

Four years ago, a baby called the "All-Varsity Revue" was born. For two years this baby grew, but last year it became a "cold battered corpse," The Varsity cried editorially, "MURDER."

After countless post-mortems, came the decision: " 'Twas but a temporary murder, the corpse must be revived for next year." Jim Guthro, producer, has been given this task.

From the court records come these facts. The All-Varsity Revue was started in 1949. Sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council, this production was to combine the best talent in the University with the best script and song writing to effect a show that was completely undergraduate, from the laziest stagehand to the harried producer. The show in '49 and in '50 were successes. Money was lost on both ventures but "it was an attempt to put on the best show on the campus, not a venture to make profit for profit's sake."

Last year the production was cancelled by the SAC because of dissension and lack of a producer. Two of the issues centered around whether to get a Professional Director to put the AVR on a paying basis since he "would know how to cut corners production wise," and whether the show should be composed of the top acts from the campus shows or be entirely original. Red tape and lack of agreement made the production impossible.

This year, the prospects for the success of the All-Varsity Revue look good. Producer Jim Guthro (also director of the Blue and White Band) seems to have things well in hand. Assisting him are Bruce Snell, singing director, two choreographers and a dance master.

From the pre-production promises released by Publicity Director Jim Bacque, III Trinity; it will be a "Real Revue." "The longest

The All-Varsity Revue is being revived this year after a lapse due to campus apathy in '51. Among the attractions promised to the patrons of this forthcoming show is "the world's longest chorus line". And the quantity is to reinforced by quality; the photo above is one of the chorines from this year's production, using to its fullest advantage one of the plate glass mirrors in Hart House.

Starvation In Indian Homeland Theme Of Banquet Speakers

On Tuesday, January 15th, the High Commissioners of Canada from India and Pakistan are making a special visit from Ottawa to the Toronto campus. Mr. R. R. Saksena (India) and Mohamed Ali (Pakistan) are undertaking the visit in order to speak at the SHARE Banquet, which is being held in Hart House on Tuesday evening, and to give the students first-hand information on two of the countries to which they will be asked to contribute. Anyone who wishes to attend can go to the banquet—tickets are available in the SAC office in Hart House. It was announced at the SHARE meeting yesterday that their speeches will deal with life in general in their respective countries, and in particular the difficulties with which the universities are faced.

The two High Commissioners will arrive in Toronto at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, and will be entertained for lunch at the York Club by Warden Ignatieff.

In the afternoon there will be an informal discussion group in Wymilwood, open to all students, where anyone interested will have a chance to meet and talk to the High Commissioners. There will be ample time for students to question the two speakers on all aspects of life in India and Pakistan.

The Banquet itself will be at 7:30 in the Great Hall of Hart House. Formal invitations have been sent to many interested students, and to people outside the University who are interested in the SHARE campaign.

Tim Armstrong, chairman of the EAC's SHARE Committee, said that the Banquet will be an extremely interesting and worthwhile event. The two guest speakers have reputations as excellent speakers. Their subject, of course, will be of particular interest to the students at this time, as SHARE gets underway.

Armstrong further said that all those who plan to attend the dinner should obtain their tickets today or tomorrow at the SAC office.

Conductor Noted Poet At McGill

Montréal (CUP) — World-famous conductor and impresario Sir Thomas Beecham and W. H. Auden, the great modern English poet, have both accepted invitations to speak to McGill University students here this month.

In an attempt by the McGill Cultural Committee to bring red-and-white students in contact with distinguished lecturers and musicians, the committee invited Sir Thomas and Mr. Auden to speak.

Sir Thomas will speak on an aspect of music, very probably on his favorite composers, Handel, Haydn, Sibelius, and especially Mozart, on January 17, the day after he completes his concert series with Les Concerts Symphoniques.

Sir Thomas has turned out more consecutively recorded performances, covering a great repertoire than any other conductor.

W. H. Auden, who has lived in the United States since 1939, received the King George V medallion for poetry in 1935—the highest poetry award in England. In recent years he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for poetry in the US for his book, Age of Anxiety.

Correction

There has been a general change in the speakers for the Hart House debate on Wednesday, Jan. 16, according to Walter Block of the Hart House Debates Committee. D. K. Rose, IV UC, and E. W. Sopha, Law, will move the resolution that "this House deplores the leadership given by the United States of America in World Affairs." The opposition will be Dwight Fulford, IV Trin., and G. Morden.

Toastless Jam

The TTC strike has brought almost every car in the city onto the road, and a fine sampling of those of the most ancient vintage may be found on the campus. Other citizens also drive to work; the picture above shows the morning jam.

Chapel Service

The Victoria College Union will hold a Chapel Service on Sunday, January 13, at 7:00 p.m. in the Vic Chapel. Canon T. R. Milford, Chancellor of Lincoln Cathedral, England, who is in Toronto to lead the University Christian Mission Jan. 20-24, will be the speaker.

Canon Milford was one of the organizers and members of a group of professors which met in Britain over a period of two years under the leadership of Sir Walter Noberly, whose recent book, "The Crisis in the University" comes out of the discussions of this group.

The topic of Canon Milford will be "Foolishness to the Greeks." Joan Dancy and Duggan Melhuish will be the Student Assistants for the service.

SCIENCE NOTES

Roarin' Aurora

It is unusual for the scientific name of a phenomenon to be more fanciful than its popular name. This is true, however, in the case of the Northern Lights, known technically as Aurora borealis.

This term is applied to the colorful display of light seen in the northern sky centered about the magnetic pole. At times it appears as a still bright arch extending from horizon to horizon, while at others it may resemble long flickering streamers of light.

Northern Lights are seen most often in a zone equidistant from the magnetic pole and passing through northern Canada, Europe, Asia and the tip of Greenland. The aurora may be seen as far south as Mexico, but the frequency of its appearances becomes greatly decreased with distance north or south of the maximum zone.

Usually the color of the displays varies from white to yellow, but shades of green and red are common. The light present is emitted by the earth's atmosphere and not by the sun. This has been decided from the observation that the light from rainbows which originates in the sun is partially polarized by reflection and refraction, while aurora light is not polarized. The shade of color present is dependent upon the level of the atmosphere in which the phenomenon is occurring. In rarer oxygen concentrations, there are fewer collisions between atoms and so more of them return to the stage in which their ability to emit light is lost. During their return to this final state, oxygen atoms emit a red color. Thus, a red colored aurora signifies great height.

By applying photographic techniques of surveying, the height of aurora may be determined. It has been found that Northern Lights occur in the range of 50 to 450 miles above the earth's surface.

Throughout history, the origin of the Aurora borealis has been a mystery. In some localities where its appearances were rare, its presence was viewed as a supernatural omen of some impending disaster. In recent times, a number of theories have been suggested in explanation.

One theory states that the aurora is due to a neutral stream of particles from a small region of the sun reaching the earth's atmosphere. This is based on the observation that the aurora is associated with disturbances in the magnetic field of the earth and usually follows the appearance of sunspots.

Another concept is that streams of neutral molecules are continually being projected outwards beyond the normal boundary of the earth's atmosphere, only to fall back to their original level. However, the action of ultra-violet light from a sun spot eruption causes these neutral molecules to become ionized, electrically charged, and thus influenced by the magnetic field of the earth.

All of which merely proves one fact conclusively. A science column can be written without the assistance of poetry.

Roulette Wheel Price For Arts Ball Tickets

Tickets for the University College Arts Ball will be sold by a roulette wheel this year, according to publicity director Joe Goldenberg. The roulette wheel will be set up in the rotunda at UC on Tuesday, Jan. 15 with various prices marked on the rim. When a volunteer offers to buy a ticket to the Ball, the wheel will be spun and wherever the pointer stops is the price the customer pays. Goldenberg said that this means that a student can get a ticket for a price as low as 29 cents.

Entertainment this year will be provided by Bert Niosi's band and by Jean Cavell, star of Jean Cavell Calling on the CBC radio network. Cavell was the cafe singer in the British movie "Quartet" and was in the first BBC post-war television review. His voice has been described by a CBC spokesman as being romantic and sexy, "he sings like Boyer talks". He is also writing a cook book and collects recipes with the accent on spices. In 1951 he was third in the Canadian Dancing championships after six months of training.

Goldenberg had no comment to make on the problem of corsages (the dance is optional) or a Queen (one is traditionally chosen on the basis of talent and beauty every year at the Arts Ball).

The Arts Ball traces a checkered history back to the Conversazioni which were held until 1897. Dancing was added in 1897 to the program which had formerly included only promenading about the halls of UC to the sound of a brass band with brief pauses for refreshments.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

The turn of the Year is the time to pause and look in three directions: the Past, the Present, and the Future. This New Year survey will be necessary in the extreme; my final analysis of the season's films will come in March since my critical year coincides with the school year.

This past year was an above-average movie year. And for a change, Hollywood took over the top prestige position with such films as STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE, A PLACE IN THE SUN, DETECTIVE STORY, AN AMERICAN IN PARIS. Britain's exports were relatively few and not up to previous standards. In past years, the work of Olivier, Carol Reed, etc., put a big scare in the American moguls and started some chauvinistic resentment in the Oscar awarding. But only the top comedy, THE LAVENDER HILL MOB, and the ambitious TALES OF HOFFMAN reminded us of the glory that was British movie achievement.

The superlative European films didn't show up either, both Italians de Sica and Rossellini being absent, as well as the French. Only "foreign" import that impressed was THE RIVER (at the Towne), made in India by French director Jean Renoir with private American backing.

* * * *

The majority critical consensus that A PLACE IN THE SUN was the year's top film seems valid to me. Maybe Dreiser got short-changed but the George Stevens direction was vivid and sensitive and moving. It was also a happy sign to see that statistically, both A PLACE IN THE SUN and A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE were among the ten top money-making Hollywood products.

* * * *

Coming down to the present, Toronto's downtown theatres are obviously feeling the pinch of the Strike, with the neighborhood bijous getting the big play. The current fare does not seem any too impressive, just typical of the annual post-Christmas let-down.

But a double-bill that is pulling them in everywhere, ROYAL JOURNEY and THE WOODEN HORSE (Victoria-Eglinton), is a pleasant bargain. THE WOODEN HORSE, a British film made in Germany and Denmark, is based on Eric William's report of a fantastic and actual escape from a German prison camp during 1945. Leo Genn, who has been seen in HENRY V, THE SNAKE PIT, and will be seen in ANDROCLES AND THE LION, is the ringleader of the escape plot. His companions Anthony Steel and David Tomlinson, as well as a whole battery of very British and RAF-ish types, are very satisfactory. So effective is the suspense in this masterpiece of understatement, that I did not notice until the very end that no women appear during 95 per cent of the film's length.

But even more impressive than this British job is the co-feature, the National Film Board's ROYAL JOURNEY. I must admit that after seeing innumerable newsreels of the Royal visit to Canada, often several times over, I had qualms about seeing more of the Duke and the Princess, charming folk as they are. But this Kodacolor film, of an hour's length, is an intensely beautiful, constantly entertaining film. In fact, from a Canadian point of view, it is downright exciting.

Of course, you probably have heard about this already, but ROYAL JOURNEY concentrates not so much on the Royal visitors as on the country they saw, and the people they saw. The camera work is imaginative and out-of-ordinary: no flat newsreel shots are these, human interest surges forth. The music and the narration by Elwood Glover (who does not become coy) and a group of representative voices fit in well.

If you have not seen much of this country of ours, ROYAL JOURNEY will stimulate and excite you. If you have, places that you know, views that you cherish will make your enjoyment even deeper. ROYAL JOURNEY has been made by Canada's NFB for export as well as domestic release. It is obviously a heavy investment, miles of film must have been shot to get a film as solidly impactic as this. It should definitely pay off, both here and outside our borders.

* * * *

A different prospect is the currently showing MY FAVORITE SPY (Imperial), the newest version of the Bob Hope formula. Hope has the beauteous Hedy Lamarr as this running-mate here in a vaguely Casablanca-ish spy story which is the thin base for the usual fevered Hope script of gags. Francis L. Sullivan is head villain with an assortment of thugs, headed by wrestler Moose Mazurki.

As usual, we laugh like sixty during a Hope film and the final chase sequence reminds us, anaemically perhaps, of the classic Keystone Cop chases. But as soon as we walk out into the foyer, we find that there is nothing left, and even now it is very hard to remember even one good crack or sequence in the film.

* * * *

Next week, I will complete this New Year survey with a glance on some of the good things coming. From advance notes anyway, 1952 promises to be on par with 1951 as an often-satisfying movie year. It may just be that Hollywood is really trying to meet the competition of television with the kind of films that appeal to the audience that has grown out of the fan magazine stage. It's a nice thought to start off the New Year with, anyway.

Agriculturists Say Not Country Hicks Proof At Caledon

Dorothy Lieberman, chairman of the EAC Weekend Committee, announced the plans yesterday for the weekend (Jan. 19 and 20) to be shared with students from OAC and MacDonald Institute at Caledon Hills Farm.

"Most of us know very few students of the smaller Ontario colleges, and I think that this weekend should be most enjoyable, since it offers a chance for some of us to get acquainted. It is also a marvellous opportunity for people who have never been to Caledon," said Lieberman.

The activities will include skating, skiing, (if possible) square dancing, a sleighride, a movie and an informal discussion. The two big ponds near the farm are reported to be frozen solid, and at this time of year there is always lots of snow. "There will also," added Miss Lieberman, "be lots of cider."

In regard to the discussion, Mr. D. E. Toole, president of OAC's student council, had several suggestions. "Often people are prone to consider 'Aggies' as country cousins with straw behind their ears since they do not understand the importance of agriculture in the country as a whole, so we might very well discuss the relation of agricultural study and research in this country to other phases of business and productive activity (better bring some C and F men along) and the place of agriculture in the whole picture of education." Another suggested topic was the problem of whether students should be required to have an arts BA before entering professional courses.

There will be ten OAC men on the weekend, and a group of girls from MacDonald Institute. MacDonald is a college of home economics in Guelph, loosely connected to OAC.

Toronto students interested in going to Caledon for this weekend are asked to leave their names in one of the two SAC offices, as soon as possible. The group will leave, probably in cars, on Saturday morning (Jan. 19) and will return early Sunday evening. The entire weekend will cost four dollars.

chorus line in the world" is forecast by Becque. Then, as all publicity directors will do, he coyly refused to divulge how this longest line in the world can possibly fit on the smallest stage in the world.

From this same source came, "We hope to avoid all forms of smut, crudity and machinery. We are catering to an audience which we know is capable of appreciating the finest in musical entertainment."

Bacque mentioned that there will be a "cast of hundreds." All the scripts and songs are original and written by undergraduates. The two hour long production will feature three big musical numbers interspersed among 17 skits. And it has the world's longest chorus line.

Vienna Visitors Captivate Crowd

Folk songs and folk dances, premiered with informality and gaiety at the concert, "Visitors From Vienna", succeeded in giving the audience a glimpse of the atmosphere and culture of Austria, when members of the Austrian Goodwill Tour performed last Tuesday, in Convocation Hall.

Dr. Suzanne Polsterer, as narrator, began by explaining the simple story around which the concert was built. This concerned a girl (played by Dr. Polsterer) who took a boy (Franz Plasnik) away from another girl (Marie Waindel). The songs and dances had nothing to do with the story, but they were made more amusing by the pantomime that went on continually among the principal actors.

The songs themselves were of many different Austrian dialects, and included a lot of yodelling, which was excellently done. To have yodelling with a harp accompaniment may seem bizarre, but the effect was very pleasant indeed. The harpist was Fritz Kreisinger.

In a scene depicting Vienna, Elizabeth Erfurt was wildly applauded for her "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, and sang, as an encore, a song from "Fledermaus." She was accompanied on the piano by Otto Wallinger, who was in charge of all the accompaniment in the performance.

The most intricate dance was done by the three major characters, the boy and the two girls. They held hands and tied themselves in knots, in time to the music. Then, without letting go of each other, they untied themselves again. The dance was fascinating, and grew more and more complicated as it progressed.

At one point, a maypole was brought onto the stage, and supported by two boys while the rest danced around it, holding on to the ribbons which were attached to the top, and thus weaving patterns with them.

Some of the dances were done by boys alone. In one of these, they attacked a log with a large saw and hatchets, in time to the music. They were all quick, clever, and precise.

Varsity At Laval To Avenge Loss

The hockey Blues resume their schedule tonight when they take on Laval University at Quebec City. Laval defeated the Blues in the only other meeting of the two teams this season. Tomorrow night the locals will travel back to Montreal for their first meeting with the powerful league leaders, the Montreal Carabins.

There are several player changes for tonight's game as well as other line changes. Jim Wilkes has been brought up from the Intermediates as a right wing replacement for the injured Norm Fox. Phil Arrowsmith and Joe Kane also were not scheduled to play this weekend due also to injuries.

The Blues' first line of John Adams, Don Rope and Jack Weldrake will be intact but the other two lines will witness changes Jack MacKenzie has been moved up to a forward position in an attempt to secure more scoring punch. He will play centre between Al Conboy and Ernie Frey. The third line has Gord Bennett at centre flanked by Pete Vernon and Jim Wilkes.

Red Stephens has been shuffled back to defence and will likely line up beside Paul Prendergast. Al Fasan and Gerry Fitzhenry will form the other defence duo. Doug Orr and Jack Ross are expected to again share the goaltending duties.

At present with the league race very close it is imperative that the Blues emerge from this weekend with at least an even split in their two-game stint. A double defeat would seriously jeopardize their chances of retaining the intercollegiate championship. Handicapped by the loss of their three veteran performers, the Blues will have to display some of the fight and hustle that was notorious with last year's squad.

Pete Vernon, playing his third year on the Blues, has been moved to the new line of Gord Bennett, Jim Wilkes, and himself. His experience should be a steadying factor, with two rookies on the line.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

When the indoor trackmen run the Interfaculty Indoor Mile this year, they will have to run a mile for a change. This unfortunate turn of events applies to all distances from the half-mile up. Unless somebody has a whale of a season, those beautiful records that were set last year are going to stand for a long time.

The reason for this discouraging turn of events is that the Athletic Association has decided to remeasure the track to see just how unrealistic the records in the longer distances really were. It was found that by measuring six feet out from the inside, which is roughly where the races up to and including 600 yards are run, the length obtained was 155 yards. This is just about the figure that all the distances have been based on in the past. Most of the longer distances are run closer in, since the slower the pace, the less the runner has to veer out on the corners. So, from now on all distances of 880 yards or over will be measured along a line three feet out from the inside.

This will make the 880 about 20 yards longer than it was previously, the mile about 40 yards longer, and so on. New records were set last year by Murray Gaziuk in the 600, the 880, the 1000 yards, and the mile, all well under the old records. It will require a monumental effort to do much to them this year.

The meets start Monday, with the 50 yard dash (novice and open) and the 600, at 5 o'clock. The 100 and 880, 220 and 1000, and the 300 and mile will be held on succeeding Mondays.

It is expected that if the Athletic Directorate considers the effort of the season's trackmen worthy, a team will be sent to the Michigan State Relays, and possibly to another indoor meet in the States. A team is always sent to the International Indoor meet at Hamilton in March. Although the competition in track down under is usually too much for us to expect our entries to win, place, or even show, it has been the Athletic Director's policy to send any team down to American games or meets that looks like it might do credit to the University.

* * * * *

Teams have been or will be sent down to compete with American colleges this year in every sport except football. Arrangements have been under way to arrange a match with Harvard, but due to rule differences and the fact that U.S. teams book their schedules anywhere from one to three years in advance, games with American teams in football are difficult to arrange. We think one game a year with teams like Harvard, which does not stress sports as much as most, would be a good thing. At any rate, no dates can be set for before 19[illegible].

Orfuns Beat East York 53-31 After 74-70 Loss To YMHA

The last place East York grads showed why they are in last place, as the Orfuns waltzed to an easy 53-31 victory at Hart House last night in the first game city league double header. It was the Blues sixth win in seven starts, and their only was a 74-70 setback, suffered two nights ago at the hands of the YMHA crew. The didn't play up to their usual standard but that was good enough to outclass opponents.

Jim Russell was high scorer for Varsity with thirteen points. Mike Baida and Jim Stevens scored seven points apiece. For East York, Tom Shultz was top man with eleven. The Orfuns played smarter ball from the opening whistle rolling into an eleven to four lead after only three minutes of play. This was a complete reversal of form from their defeat the previous night. Leo Madden looked particularly good in the first sank a good percentage of shots.

As the first quarter ended Blues were completely and outfighting their rival Russell being left in the several occasions. At the frame, the Blues' lead ha to 24-8.

The second session was even, mainly because the crew were fumbling a chances, and the half end the Blues holding a com 35-12 lead.

Hoopla, Dance Mat Matches Highlite A Nite

Basketball and wrestling will be featured at the first Athletic Night of the new year in the Hart House upper and lower gyms tomorrow night. Blue wrestlers will come to grips with the OAC squad that beat them out of second spot in the Intercollegiate race last season by a single point. The lower gym will be the scene of two basketball games, a high school contest with Jarvis meeting the quintet from Thorold, Ontario, and an Intercollegiate class battle between the senior Blues and Curry College.

The OAC squad features a few pretty tough characters that are bound to give Varsity contenders a tough evening. Bob Steckle in the 191 pound class and Larry Burt, a heavyweight, who will be matched against Doug Hamilton and Harry Robinson respectively of Varsity are giving Blue coaches good grounds for concern. Frank Pope, who will meet Tom Natashita of Varsity in the 137 pound class and Jack Bennet of the Aggies are also tough characters.

Dancing, water polo and football movies are also on the agenda.

Fine Netminding Helps Mikemen To 3-1 Victory

In a wide open, hard hitting contest yesterday, in which tempers flared to the boiling point on several occasions, St. Mike's A's beat U.C. I by a score of 3-1. The double-blue squad seemed to have the edge through most of the game, but even when the team did lag, the superb goal-tending job turned in by Grossi in the nets managed to keep them above the Redmen.

St. Mike's notched two of their three tallies in the first period, the first by Hunt who tipped McDonald's shot from the blue line past Smelle at the nine minute mark, and the second by Tom Kane who beat the U.C. goal-tender cleanly on a fifteen foot shot. Penalties in this period were one apiece to McFarlane of U.C. for tripping and McManamy of St. Mike's for playing with a broken stick.

St. Mike's scored first in the second frame when Duffy skated through the whole team, drew the defence into the corner and flipped the puck to Jerome, who in the clear, made no mistake and beat Smelle cleanly. As in the first frame, tempers flared repeatedly and penalties went to McMillan and Tindall of U.C. as well as McDonald of St. Mike's. With about five minutes remaining, Ian McDonald sunk the lone U.C. tally on a screened shot from the blueline. This ended the scoring but the pace never slowed down and almost developed into fisticuffs on several occasions in the last five minutes. Best for U.C. were Fullerton, McDonald, "Basher" Buley and "Hustlin' Herbie" Tilson. Kane, Duffy and Harwich stood out for the double blue squad.

PHE I trounced St. Mike's firsts 7-1 in a one-sided hockey tilt at the Arena yesterday. The Physeders displayed some of the best form seen so far this season.

The winners scored five goals in the first period, and added two more in the second. The final frame was scoreless, but the PHE girls monopolized the play. Alma Hatch played well for the winners, while Fraser starred for the Irish.

landscapes, which form the st part of the paintings, tend to be rather conven- in their search for the pic- que. This is best illustrated e five paintings by Dr. Har- Agnew on the one hand and Erichson-Brown on the other. are two trends to be seen e work of Dr. Agnew. Some ese paintings—"Lower St. ence", "Fishing Cove New- land", are very effeminate ir false lushness and the lack straint in colour subtleties; s like "October in Newfound- are quite virile, straight- rd and well disciplined. But these are picturesque in the d card sense. Mr. Erichson- n well represents the other —the raw, stark, Canadian resqueness of the Group of n.

included in this show are paintings by C. Comfort and two by John Hall. These are, of course works of professional artists. Prof. Comfort is capturing the mood of Canada inherent in her landscape, John Hall is exploiting his sensitivity to shape, movement, nature, and colour.

True portraits by J. M. P. Hume and W. Cecil Henry are very competent even after the exhibition of John Alfsen.

C. H. Best's "Clouds of Fishing Boats," and "Bay of Fundy at Twilight" show a strong emotional impact, directness of approach and a violent response to visual experience, all of which successfully counteracts even his shortcomings in technique and a very limited valette.

D. E. Gardner is the only experimenter in the group. The "Pines of Snow" and "Call of the Loon" show not only his understanding of nature but also his firm belief in strength of visual representation which can not only represent visual but also audible experience.

Perhaps the most mature paintings by non-professionals are "The Red Door" by W. A. Norfolk exhibiting a great appreciation of form and organization in space, and J. R. Chapman's "Soft Exit" which is an inferior composition projected onto the first plane of the canvas. The interest is concentrated on the textures of the surfaces and the mood as a whole.

This year's Senior Show is definitely the best one in years. It is to be hoped that future shows will live up to this standard and will reach the high level that none of un undergraduates remembers.

On the whole, it is a quiet conservative show by the mature element on the campus. It remains to be seen what the restless undergrads will produce.

The show will remain in the gallery until—January 19, 1952.

DRAMA

An Inspector Calls

In any amateur college show, one finds the greatest difficulty in avoiding the mud-slinging of a great number of people. The only thing that makes the outlook suggest a rosy-fingered dawn, is the remarkable inconsistency of the people who love getting their hands in the mud. Some forget that plays are presented to please an audience, not just to promote college spirit. Others there are who moan the childish efforts of the actors, or the even more puerile plays that drama clubs so often choose instead of one of the world's masterpieces.

Victoria's production, AN INSPECTOR CALLS, can, I venture to say, be criticized at every stage of its production. The play has much of the trickery common to J. B. Priestley. It has also, however, the dubious advantage of being cleverly and simply written and, for a change, more genuine human situations than is usual for Mr. Priestley; I say dubvious advantage, because the Vic players chose to make these situations — situations such as exist in any family—seem completely improbable. In voice, gesture and facial expression they invariably portrayed the wrong emotion.

Many of the faults can I imagine be attributed to the director Donald Glen, for I suspect also that the players could have used another week of rehearsal—perhaps two. It was noticeable in the actors, whose movements were for the most part mechanically awkward and wrongly timed. They were also unsure of the delivery of their lines. To the director too must surely go the blame for the loudness of the production. Everyone seemed to be shouting at everyone else, and as a consequence the actors had no way of getting madder than they already were, and for the audience the play was something to be kept at a distance; they just couldn't warm up to this production.

Of the actors, George McCowan showed evidence of some stage experience. It is unfortunate that he was not given the privilege to turn the part of the Inspector down, however, for he seemed either miscast or told to do it in a way unsuitable to the play. He was hard, cold and indifferent when he should of been quiet, unassuming, and in command of the situation more by the strength of his personality than the sharpness and incisiveness of his voice.

Douglas Quirk had moments when he seemed to understand the character of an older and pompous man, but the ham in him wouldn't let well enough alone. He insisted on bombast and caricature rather than a real person. His wife, Mrs. Birling, played by Barbara Walker gave the play its only moment of genuine feeling when she discovered that her son had been hardly the young lad she had thought him to be. For a split second some of the more self-conscious members of the audience forgot themselves and their giggles.

As for the Birling Children, played by Gloria Gillies and Ken Breen, the former's voice screeched and sobbed too much; the latter's voice betrayed too unsure a knowledge of the lines. The same was true of Jack Rutherford's portrayal of Gerald Croft, Sheila Birling's fiance, but he was shrewd enough to cover up his mistakes and present a sartorial brilliance.

A good deal of praise should go to Wilf Pegg who designed a fine set in the proper elegrance of the period.

No Subversives

Humor in Canadian university newspapers would seem to lead the same nebulous existence as the Trans-Canada highway. From coast to coast, there is neither a distinctive student humourist nor a paved highway. At least the judges of this year's Canadian University Press found its lack the "one outstanding shortcoming".

"Where," asked Walter Chistopherson, city editor of the Montreal Gazette, "is the probing tongue-in-cheek student appraisal of current events that can analyse a statement or a situation with unawed perspective?" Where, indeed? Often we have pondered this very same question on long evenings in the editorial office.

At times we have even contemplated running the Champus Cat head, without benefit of typographical elaboration.

Admittedly, there have been a few bright spots here and there, a whiff of brilliance now and then, but the moments are all too fleeting. But why? Where is the irrepressible humour of youth."

The late George Orwell, once observed that

> "A joke worth laughing at always has an idea behind it, and usually a subversive idea."

Possibly, then, it is simply the happy fate of the universities to lack subversive students. Or maybe the subversives are just too subversive.

After Pearl Harbour

(Reprinted from The Daily Californian)

Ten years ago today the world came down upon our shoulders, and the Japanese attack upon Pearl Harbor baptized America in a new tradition.

Militarism has become an American trait. During the decade that we reached our social maturity, war has been made an almost necessary aspect of 20th-century living.

Think about the change in attitude toward large armies and continual armament and rearmament.

This attitude may well be a necessary product of the errors of that very day on which this new tradition came into being. If there is to be another war, we do not want to be caught again. We will be prepared.

We may grumble about taxes continually going up and complain about the extent to which we aid probable allies, but it is also obvious to us that these actions are necessary if we are to avoid another Pearl Harbor.

The logic is irrefutable in the light of past experience, but the growing militarism is something to be wary of. And we are militaristic. The current favorite in the 1952 presidential race is a general. The greatest political controversy of the last few years centered around a general. Military men more and more are becoming men of importance in the political and social fields.

What is more, the attitude toward such a thing as Universal Military Training has changed from one of distaste to one of acceptance and practicality.

In August, 1945, the war ended that began with today's anniversary. For a short while it seemed that the controversy was over, that men were going to unite in some great work for peace. There was the happy possibility that we would be the fortunate generation between wars.

But the peace between the Atomic bomb and the Korean conflict was a fraud. If Pearl Harbor was a baptism in militarism then Korea has been its confirmation.

The "quick emergency" of a decade ago ended. The civilian soldier came home. But today we are re-militarized. We, the civilians of today, can think of ourselves only in terms of the soldiers of tomorrow. The army has joined death and taxes: it too is inevitable.

Our new tradition is an answer to the times; let's hope it is not a permanent one.—Al Manzano.

The Path To Asi

The following article by Ralph Wintrob, CUP Editor, attempts to describe and analyze World University (International Student) Service, the agency through which all the funds raised by next week's SHARE campaign will be raised.

The $11,000 that the forthcoming Student Help to Asian Relief and Education campaign will attempt to raise next week will be handed over to the International Student Service or World University Service, as it is now called, for distribution.

What is WUS? How does it function? How does it put money to work to better university conditions throughout the world?

WUS is the agency that has been established for 25 years to help universities in need of assistance throughout the world.

About thirty countries are represented in WUS, which has its headquarters in Geneva. Besides these national committees WUS also includes representatives from Catholic, Protestant and Jewish international student bodies, as well as other organizations and individuals who can be of assistance in WUS activities.

The WUS program falls into two categories: material and non-material. The latter includes such projects as arranging international conferences. For example, last year it organized a conference in South East-Asia to assess the difficulties and needs of the area as well as to establish permanent channels of contact that had never existed there before.

But with the main focus of attention on this campus with actual material aid, just how does WUS function? SHARE, together with WUS, chose six universities to help in South-East Asia from a list of proposed relief projects outlined in the Mutual Assistance Report.

To have a project listed on this report is a long and complicated process. First, specific requests for assistance are presented to the WUS international assembly, held annually, or the international office. The requests are analyzed and checked by qualified representatives, on the basis of need, expediency, and value. They are then listed in the mutual assistance report, from which WUS carries out its aid program.

Immediately following the war, the major part of the funds were directed towards work in Europe. In the past few years, however, South-East Asia has assumed greater importance and now receives the major share.

The amount of money that can be sent to one university is not great, and the administrative staff is not adequate to supervise projects. For this reason WUS concentrates on universities that they feel are equipped to be given assistance and use it competently themselves. In other words: help to those who can help themselves.

In practise it works this way. Where hospital space and docters are available but drugs and other vital medical equipment are non-existent, WUS will provide the necessary materials to help the hospital begin to function properly. It may be a medical school with hospital attached or an infirmary for students who need treatment themselves.

The theory behind this plan is to bring students and faculty together in a common undertaking for their own ass

No strings are attached to the a only idea that WUS tries to get ac the feeling that people throughou world have a common interest state of universities everywhere. not, in other words try to propag political or religious views or expe thing in return.

However, WUS does not function of the Communist countries, and no resentatives of Communist student are represented in WUS except Yu via. Through the Communist-dom International Union of Students, a sidiary body called International Stu Relief does the same work. IUS out of WUS shortly after the last

To get down to the national leve Canadian universities have WUS com tees, which are more or less co-ordi by the national office in Toronto committee functions in its own way as with all student organizations strength varies from campus to c pus.

At the University of British Co bia, for example, interest perhaps highest for WUS work. The whole stu body approved a levy of one dollar for WUS that is included in their Last year this amounted to $6,342. M that money is used for exchange sch ships between UBC students and thos other countries, signifying the espe the WUS program that is considered important there.

Besides the efforts directed toward lief work and assistance of students Displaced Persons camps to study are established in this country. Can WUS also concentrates its efforts on International Student Seminar, summer for the past four years 100 dents from countries in every par the world have had the opportuni live together for six weeks to exch ideas. All the money for this pro comes from sources other than stu campaigns.

Considerable criticism has been le against WUS because it was not doi job adequately and because too m money was being diverted to admini tive expenses. Last year the local committee suffered an eclipse as All sity Aid took over in a concerted e to raise money for university relief for the whole campus.

But still WUS is the agency thr which money for relief is sent. Wh this? There are other ways to help dents in other parts of the world. can work through government chan through UNESCO or even directly.

One reason for this is that it is an ganization primarily of students faculty assistance work. In the s place it is a well-established orga tion that is equipped to handle aid jects and has been operating in field for a good many years. Then it is already functioning in the area needs help. Finally it is concerned with the student community of the It is on this concern that the valu importance of WUS rests.

Radio Outlet For U of T

Editor, The Varsity:

The largest university in the British Commonwealth should own a radio station. We believe that this is feasible not only as regards the required student interest but also as regards the costs of construction and maintenance.

Queen's University, with an enrollment of only 2,000, owns and operates an A.M. station. We have obtained information from their station manager concerning costs and personal requirements and we were amazed at the ease with which both these were met. Surely a university with an enrollment of 12,000 can cope with a situation easily handled by a university one-eighth its size.

At present the Varsity Radio Club is limited to the 15 minutes a week broadcast time with a mere 15 minutes a FM. There is also a half-hour CKEY, but this is not open to participation. The CJRT allotment quate only to produce frustration participants and listeners. Six Grads Seated Plus One Ex-Student

By HAROLD NELSON

Of the 90 seats in the University of Toronto Mock Parliament held last night it would appear that there were at least six graduates sitting and one student who left the University at Christmas time.

The Progressive Conservatives filled their 36 seats with undergraduates, according to David Fry, president of the MacDonald-Cartier Club. Liberal leader John Medcoff said the Liberals seated "one or two recent graduates from graduate studies" with the remainder of their 23 seats being filled by undergrads.

The CCF had at least one member from Osgoode Hall, Stanley Long, a third year student, along with two other graduates, and the LPP seats were filled by seven undergrads, one recent grad, and one student who left the University at Christmas, according to Shirley Endicott of the campus LPP Club.

Claire Bacchus of the Political Science Club, sponsors of this year's Parliament, said yesterday that there was only a general understanding among the party leaders that undergraduates and recent graduates in Graduate Studies should be seated. As for the sitting of graduates, the question is reported to have been raised earlier by CCF leader Walter Parker, and an understanding that the clubs should be allowed to give seats to graduates so long as this privilege was not abused.

This is the first year that the Mock Parliament has been run by the Political Science Club. In the past, according to Medcoff, the constitution of the Mock Parliament restricted membership to ::Students paying fees to the Students' Administrative Council." If this ruling had been applied this year all graduates would have been ineligible to sit in the Mock Parliament. This ruling would also eliminate CCF leader Walter Parker, who is an occasional student. However, Parker says that he can remember seeing graduates amongst the members of the Mock Parliament two years ago.

The Liberal Club was the only one of the four political clubs that was able to fill its allotted seats from amongst the club membership. The other clubs filled their seats by accepting students who supported party policy.

Varsity Pucksters Fall 4-3 to Laval Tie Carabins 4-4

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Varsity Hockey Blues twice threw second period leads in their weekend doubleheader with Laval and Univrsity of Montreal, losing 4-3 to Laval and tieing the Carabins 4-4. In both games the Blues built up leads in the first and second periods, but lost them in rough third periods. First-line centre Don Rope was the chief marksman for the Blues, getting two goals in each game and adding one assist for a total of five points.

Quebec, Jan. 11 (Staff) — Laval University came from behind a 3-2 lead established by Toronto in the second period, to win their second straight game from the Blues, and land in second place, one point behind the University of Montreal. Tall Claude Roy passed to Roland Dubeau, who scored the tieing goal and scored the winning one himself on a pass from Jean-Marc Lagace, who had broken past the Toronto defence at centre ice. The Blues suffered from an overdose of pnalties, getting 10 to Laval's six.

The game was very evenly played all the way, and though it did not lack the roughness that usually occurs when Ontario and Quebec teams play, the zealous refs kept it in check. He called both Rope and Adams off for boarding the same man, though Rope did not appear to have made any contact. Larochelle scored the opening goal against the shorthanded Blues two seconds later from a face-off in their own end.

Jack Wheldrake caught the far post a few minutes later in some rapid passing from Adams and Rope. Rope got the next as he took the puck from a Laval defenceman on the Toronto blue line and went down alone to score. Dubeau tied the score at the end of the period when he poked the puck from under goalie Ross' leg in a pile-up at the Toronto net, but Rope put the Blues ahead in the fourth minute of the second frame with some beautiful stickhandling to get past Laval rearguard Ray Laroche.

The third period defies explanation. Both teams got good breaks as opposing defencemen missed checks

7-Colored Ticket Sale On Jan. 21

All-Varsity Revue exchange tickets will go on sale January 21 reports Marvin Goodman, Grad Studies, who is in charge of the ticket sales. Exchange tickets are used to facilitate the selling of tickets and assure an even distribution.

Seven colours are used, one for each night and one for the matinee. The purchaser gets the number of exchange tickets for the night he wants and during the week of February 4-9 exchanges them for reserved seats at the Hart House Theatre Box Office. Exchange tickets will be on sale at the Hart House SAC office, the UC SAC office, the VCU and the Engineering stores.

Prices will vary from $1.25 Monday to Thursday, to $1.50 Friday and Saturday nights. The Saturday matinee will be $1.00.

25 Western Student Unions Form Secretariat In Holland

As a result of four Canadian resolutions, plans for an international secretariat have been set up to coordinate the work of 25 national student unions which met in Edinburgh this month.

The secretariat, to be located in Holland, will be purely an administrative body, with no executive powers at all. Its chief job will be to make sure the various national unions are carrying out the projects they undertook at Edinburgh, and to advise them if necessary.

It was set up on the lines suggested by the Canadian delegation to the conference, which met from January 3 to 8 in the Scotch capital. The National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) was represented by its president, Jean de Margerie (Laval), and the Chairman of its International Activities Commission Syd Wax, (Toronto). Wax returned from the conference late Thursday night.

JEAN DE MARGERIE

De Margerie is now on his way to attend a Pan-American student conference in Brazil.

This conference is a follow-up of one held in Stockholm, Sweden, last year, at which 18 non-Communist unions met to plan practical activities for international student co-operation. This year attendance was extended to include representatives from South-East Asia and South America. Also present were observers of the exiled students of Czechoslovakia and the Ukraine, and delegates from Yugoslavia, Israel and Australia, as well as the countries of Western Europe and North America.

At Stockholm the national unions undertook responsibility for a number of projects, including investigation of improved travel facilities, student exchanges, a mutual aid program, and sports contests. Few of these have been completed. In an applause-greeted speech at the conference, Wax laid the blame for the failure of many of the projects on the fact that no secretariat had been established.

Although there was general agreement on the need of a secretariat to strengthen co-operation, the national unions at Edinburgh did not immediately agree on its duties. The Scandinavian bloc and the British, in particular, insisted that it be strictly limited in its powers, Wax said. This attitude dated back to Stockholm, where opposition to the formation of a new international student union was so strong that even the idea of a secretariat was defeated.

The secretariat will be responsible to a Supervisory Committee of five national unions, which shall in turn be responsible to the annual international conference. This committee, which will be elected annually, consists this year of France, the USA, England, Holland and Sweden. It will meet periodically, and will keep a critical eye on the secretariat, Wax explained. If necessary, it can even fire the secretary, he added.

SYD WAX

Early in the conference the Canadian delegation insisted that any secretariat must be non-political, non-discriminatory, and non-reactionary. This was later echoed by a joint Yugoslav-British motion.

The new body will be able to represent the combined student unions in negotiations with other international organizations. But in accordance with its limited powers, it can deal only with those bodies specifically named by the annual conference. These include UNESCO and World University Service (WUS), but not the Communist - dominated International Union of Students.

It will be financed by voluntary contributions from the national student unions which use its services. A levy of one cent per student was suggested to raise the $7,500 budget for the secretariat's first year.

Debaters Question US Foreign Policy

"We intend to counter the callow student jibes with the real facts of American accomplishments in the post-war world—the Truman Doctrine the Marshall Aid program, the Atlantic Pact, the Four Point Program, the arms assistance program, and the Korean peace operation."

So said Dwight W. Fulford, who will second the opposition at next Wednesday's Hart House Debate. The motion will be "Resolved that this House deplores the leadership given by the United States of America in world affairs."

Elmer W. Sophia, who will move the resolution, stated: "I cannot help but feel that the Debates Committee has worded the motion a bit too forceably. I intend to merely record my objections before the House to the black and white diplomacy practiced by the US State Department. Of course the Communists are just as bad, being religious fanatics."

John H. G. Morden, leader of the opposition, could not be reached at press time, but a member of the Debates Committee expects him to take the line that "the young giant, which is the United States, has reached normal maturity, and has effectively shouldered its world responsibilities. It is a leader which we in Canada can follow with pride.

"What has happened to 'the American dream'?" asked David R. K. Rose, who will second the motion. "No one can deny that the United States of America has accepted tremendous responsibilities in assuming world leadership. But has this not been determined by necessity, by the fight for self-preservation, and by the consequences of her own mistakes?

"My colleague, Mr. Sopha, and I hope to prove by an examination and criticism of the so-called 'American Foreign Policy,' and by an analysis of the domestic scene, that America's leadership is inadequate in many respects, too extreme in some respects, and non-existent in the rest."

'Self-Criticism Needed' - - Publisher Of 'Times'

Speaking at a joint meeting of the Empire Club of Canada and the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday night, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, president and publisher of the New York Times, called for a closer "self-examination and self-criticism" of the policies of the Western countries. "If we constantly criticize Russia we will have no time to criticize ourselves," he said.

Sulzberger was talking on "Power and Responsibility" at Convocation Hall. He added that not only does the West need "a revolution in our policy but also in our thinking about the responsibility of power."

Sulzberger believed that "all our tribulations are not a result of Russia, but that some are a result of our own miscalculations and even a few of our own foolishness."

He went on to say that in view of the large scale defence plans "it was not possible not to interfere in the affairs of other nations." "If the Germans do not help to defend the West, then Canadians and Americans must cross the sea to do so, and this is intervention — at least, to the German."

The real question, Sulzberger felt, was "will our moral strength keep pace with our physical strength? How will we react when we are really strong to the constant provocations of the Russians, to our high taxes, to Russia's foxy wars, and to Vishinsky laughing all night at our disarmament proposals? This is more relevant in 1952 and '53 than it was in 1950 and '51."

However, Sulzberger emphatically believed that the West would match its physical strength with its moral. MacArthur's dismissal, he said, is further proof that the West will "deal with the problem short of war — a major war."

Equally emphatic, Sulzberger rejected any concept as to the inevitability of war. "To those people who constantly say maybe tomorrow, maybe next month, or maybe next year, I say why not yesterday, or last month, or last year, when they had a better chance."

"We are trying to create a police force to convince criminals that crime does not pay," he declared. "We are building police stations all over the world. There is never going to be total peace." In the question period that followed, Sulzberger claimed that the West does not intend to smash the Curtain, but that the Russians could not be trusted so long as they keep hiding themselves behind the Iron Curtain and away from "their friends."

UN Club Resumes With Hendry Talk

This Thursday will mark United Nations Spring term opening. Members and newcomers will meet at Wymilwood from 4:10 to 4:35 for an informal "get-to-acquainted" period.

Professor Charles Hendry, Director of the School of Social Work, will address the group. Professor Hendry, first Canadian United Nation fellow in social reconstruction, has recently returned from field work for UNESCO. Having been a leader in this field from its inception, Professor Hendry will be ready to answer all questions raised by the group.

In announcing the plans for this term's activities, the executive outlined a six week program in which the Club will hear speakers and conduct discussion groups on the "Egyptian annexation of the Suez Canal Zone". This program will lead to a Model Security Council session on the evening of Fe. 12.

During the discussion groups, members will divide into 11 panels, each studying the point of view of a member country of the Security Council on the Egyptian problem.

At the final discussion group, when the members are familiar with the problem, the entire group will endeavour to arrive at a resolution which will contribute to the solution of the difficult problem confronting us in the near East.

Then on February 12, representatives of the member countries will debate this resolution from the point of view of the country represented. In this way, it is hoped that a real contribution to the progress of United Nations may be achieved.

Chemical Specialist - Speaker

Dr. David L. Thomson, dean of the McGill faculty of Graduate Studies, will be the guest speaker at the annual students' night of the Chemical Institute of Canada at Malloney's Art Gallery tomorrow. The meeting will be conducted by the three chairmen from the Industrial Chemistry, Food Chemistry, and Chemistry Clubs on the campus.

Dr. Thomson will speak on recent advances in protein chemistry, but a spokesman for the Chemical Institute has said that the talk will definitely not be a talk for specialists by a specialist. He said that Dr. Thomson is noted for his ability to make very lucid any subject that he is speaking on and has a photographic memory from which he can provide a large fund of information.

The Chemical Institute is a nation-wide organization of professional and scientific men in the field of chemistry. The Institute has student memberships and encourages students to attend its meetings.

Survey Site For Library

"To establish the exact location of the present library and other buildings and roads", was how Mr. G. K. Maxwell, assistant superintendent, defined the survey conducted just north of the library last week.

The survey is the first step towards an enlarged library. $500,000 was donated by Dr. Sigmund Samuel for this purpose, and the rest will be provided from the University Building Fund.

STUDENT HELP TO ASIAN RELIEF AND EDUCATION

SHARE

SHARE SUPPLEMENT

SHARE STARTS TODAY

Symbolic Initials

By DR. A. B. B. MOORE

President, Victoria College

The campus of the University of Toronto is confronted this week by an important and significant word —SHARE— representing an appeal for Student Help to Asian Relief and Education.

No more appropriate term could have been chosen to represent this project. The very word "share" is written into the constitution of a responsible society. We would like to think that the society which we cherish is a responsible one and that the World Community which we desire to see established will partake of the same character. No citizen and no organization of citizens within a community which depends for its very existence on a sense of responsibility desires to think and live without intelligent and conscientious sharing. The state of the world which confronts us may seem to be far removed from these conditions which we desire and individual efforts may seem to be too insignificant to affect the total situation. Yet that should be no excuse for evading responsibility and failing to give the which is in our power to give.

SHARE, therefore, becomes a practical channel for an expression of our individual responsibilities toward the World Community we wish to create. Through this means we touch the life of universities in Pakistan, India, Thailand, Indonesia and Assam where their needs are greatest. These needs are of the most urgent and practical kind. They are as practical as the health and housing of the students. They have to do with administrative and library facilities and also with scholarship opportunities. To give to SHARE is to provide hostel accommodation for students whose health is now imperilled by the conditions in which they are compelled to live. To give to SHARE is to assure that students in Asian universities receive necessary drugs and medical supplies. To give to SHARE is to provide those facilities which will help to meet library deficiencies and to offer opportunities for wider education. There is no more appropriate group in our Western Society to be faced with these needs than our university community. While we have our own difficulties in carrying the load of university education, they are as nothing compared with the enormous burden which the Asian student is compelled to carry if he is to receive even a minimum [illegible] training.

Universities are sometimes accused of living apart from the rest of the world, in a sort of "ivory tower" existence. Here is an opportunity for the university to step into the stream of community life where the need is greatest. Through SHARE our thinking about responsible democratic society becomes realistic and visible. The sum of $11,000, which has been chosen as the objective for the University of Toronto, is little enough to express our concern for fellow students in the World University Community. I am sure that this week, as members of the staff and student body of this great university are confronted by this appeal, they will over-subscribe the objective. Let's do our share for SHARE.

The Value of Share: Union Of Two Worlds

By TIM ARMSTRONG

Today, SHARE is born on the Toronto Campus. In 23 colleges and faculties, preparations have been made to canvass each of our 11,000 students for aid to South East Asian universities. In the shadows of the Park Plaza an efficient organization begins its large task of contacting 11,000 students. From headquarters in the Little Red School House, the Engineers, with traditional skule drive, are launching their part of the campaign.

From UC to Forestry, from Trinity to Meds, squads of canvassers will spread through their colleges and faculties, asking every student for a minimum contribution of $1.00.

In the five days ahead we can be sure that this this question will be repeated again and again: "Why should I give ", and it will be a legitimate request. This is why I'm digging down deep for SHARE; maybe you feel the same way.

The first fact is simply that students in India, Pakistan, Indonesia and Thailand are taking it on the chin. Earthquakes, communal rioting, floods, rising prices and falling production, class conflict, and the Communist threat absorb the time of their harassed governments. [illegible] are unavoidably neglected. The [illegible] student accommodation is inade[illegible] is poor, and there is a ge[illegible] equipment. And we compa[illegible] dent unions and hypothe[illegible]

Secondly, I believe that w[illegible] cultural, [illegible]mic and poli[illegible] SHA[illegible] We have liberal in[illegible] govern[illegible] techniques of social welfare and technology of production which have enabled us to enjoy the highest standard of living [illegible] the wor[illegible] of our way [illegible] want to [illegible] that all peoples [illegible] of the result[illegible] Canadian democracy. I [illegible] gest that [illegible] on anybody [illegible] people mus[illegible] develop in its own [illegible] genius, and express its moral and cultural values in its own way. What I do suggest is that at a time when Asian nationalism is at last being realized, we should provide them with standards by which to judge the successes of the economic improvements and schemes of their own administrations. It is their right, their duty and their responsibility to shape their own future — but let's make them aware, by our guidance, understanding and support through SHARE, that places like Hart House and the Wallberg Building, the Health Services and the Banting Institute are products of our way of life.

Thirdly, I want to review the thoughts and problems of these people. I think that the partnership between Asian countries and the West needs a two-[illegible]affic of ideas which will disintegrate our [illegible]morance of each other's philosophies, [illegible] ideas and political objectives. Too [illegible] tends to be placed on the one-way [illegible] of technical and financial assistance, while the advantages of an intake of ideas from Asia are [illegible] neglected.

Finally, I'm getting just a little tired of the charge that I am a member of a body which is accused of suffering from "student apathy". It is conceivable that some of the activities this fall interest only a [illegible] group of people. Not everyone can be expected to be enthusiastic about the pro[illegible] student visit, plans for a student [illegible] or even the very commendable Carabin [illegible]. We have an academic task here which ma[illegible] essential that we choose our extra-curricular activities carefully. However, SHARE is an activity which is the direct responsibility of everyone. It is All Varsity in the true sense. I'm confident that the student body of the University of Toronto, when faced with a job to do — a job of saving lives and spreading understanding — will give its full support.

..Refugee students from Punjab have to take turns going to the "dining room" with the limited space available, while the lectures go on. Bathroom facilities as shown here are miserable. The ISS hostel for refugee students is pitifully small for the needs of the students. May students are accommodated in the "tent city", which has been added to the ISS hostel, to take care of all refugees. Books, medical supplies, mimeographing, etc., are urgently needed.

SHARE hopes to prove, through its efforts, that Canadian university students realize the problems of their Southeast-Asiatic fellow students, and will lend them a hand to help themselves.

STUDENT HELP TO ASIAN RELIEF AND EDUCATION

NOTICE

The Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have invited the University of Toronto to nominate a candidate or candidates for the three scholarships, each of the value of £450 per annum for two years, with possible additional allowances to be offered by the Commissioners for award in Canada in 1952.

Information regarding these scholarships may be found on page 272 of the current Arts calendar.

Applications for the scholarships, accompanied by theses as evidence of the candidates' ability for original research must be received at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, not later than February 15th, 1952.

Attention is drawn to the fact that the Royal Institution of Great Britain Science Research Scholarship has been terminated and will not be offered in 1952.

The Larger Fellowship Background Of WUS

SHARE is the committee on the campus of the University of Toronto which collects money for the relief of students in less favored parts of the world. It is a committee of the External Affairs Commission of the University of Toronto, which in turn is a member of the International Student Service. It would be well now, as our campaign opens in the University, to review the historical background of the Student Relief movement, and examine the ideals towards which is has worked, in order that we may better understand what SHARE is doing, and why we should support it. The following is quoted verbatim from the Program of Mutual Assistance, which is the booket in which conditions in universities all over the world are described, together with a listing of the particular things, such as drugs and books and student accommodation, which are needed in the particular universities. This is the booklet from which SHARE chose the universities towards which it will be directing its efforts.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND: After the first World War relief needs among students called into being European Student Relief. A project of the World's Student Christian Federation, it was based on the principles:

THAT relief was to be administered on sound economic lines;

THAT, except where students were physically unable to work, money should not be given outright, but funds should be used as capital to start self-help enterprises;

THAT relief was to be administered impartially without regard to race, nationality, creed, or any other criterion than opportunity and proven need;

THAT relief should be given with a view to developing human personal contacts.

Fearful of the indifference of students in favored lands, the slogan of E.R.S. became "They would care if they knew and now they shall." Students around the world responded to the appeal. From working together in the great common enterprise of human survival they began to want to know each other. Out of this impulse grew the conferences and other meetings which began a program of international education as an integral part of the relief enterprise. In 1925 European Student Relief became International Student Service for relief and international education. Between the wars, as relief needs declined, the ducation and cultural program expanded through conferences, seminars, study tours, and work camps.

Then in 1939, a second time for the generation of those who created European Student Relief, war engulfed the continent, and, with it, the lives, libraries, equipment and buildings of another generation of students.

In 1943, born of the unbounded needs in the devastated countries of the world, World Student Relief was created to coordinate the work of ISS, Pax Romana (Catholic), and World's Student Christian Federation (Protestant). World Student Service Fund had been created in 1937 to assist Chinese students and professors in the evacuated colleges and universities of China.

The appeal has never been for "charity" but always for a sharing of the resources which, by accidents of history and geography, are found in disproportionate abundance on this continent. This appeal has always been for the relief of need wherever there is an opportunity to met it. This appeal has always assumed, as an integral part of the sharing process, a maximum of the "human encounter" out of which will grow a deeper understanding of the ways in which the defences of peace must be constructed in the minds and hearts of people everywhere.

As in the days following World War I, students and members of faculty and administration in the United States and Canada are confronted with the inescapable responsibilities of great and favored nations. These include the welfare of their colleagues who are ill-housed, whose libraries are poorly equipped or non-existent, who need a supplementary diet in order to continue to share in the advancement of knowledge, but who, above all, since they have been forced to accept so much help from others, need the opportunity to reciprocate in ways which provide for mutual international understanding.

In 1945 WSR expanded its operations to include India, Burma, the Philippines and the Netherlands East Indies. The history, as always, began with the visits of international staff members whose chief task was to start indigenous relief committees related to WSR on the international level. The staff members were themselves Asians, a factor which contributed to the positive response from Asian students. In the summer of 1946, for the first time, the WSR governing body met in its annual session with representatives of both its European and Asian sections to draft the PROGRAM OF ACTION for 1946-1947.

This bald statement of historical fact only hints at the world situation which made the meeting both possible and necessary; staff travel was now resumed in a world so recently closed by war into embattled compartments; European receiving nations like Denmark, Norway and Holland had made a magnificent recovery and were now contributing to WSR, making possible an eastward geographical shift in the relief program; long-term constructive projects had become possible, replacing some of the first-aid emergency ones; students in the needy countries were displaying extraordinary energy and ingenuity in solving the terrible problems which faced them; they had opened hostels and canteens, started mineographing co-operatives to reproduce lecture notes as a substitute for unobtainable textbooks; had made grants to destitute students; had started clothing, laundry, shoe-repair co-operatives to "mend and make do" — these were some of the ways in which students in receiving areas were helping themselves; but more important than any other single factor, behind the expanded program of WSR was a growing conviction that helping the world toward peace meant helping the whole university community.

This meant no less than the restoration of war-devastated universities; the expansion of education in areas where it was available only to a few; the development of mutual relationships in which there are educational as well as relief exchanges; and finally, the recognition, born of world disaster, but grown into universal hope that "peace must be founded, if it is not to fail, upon the intellectual and moral solidarity of the world" from: A PROGRAM OF MUTUAL ASSISTANCE for 1951-1952.

SHARE Targets Universities We Will Help

Dacca University

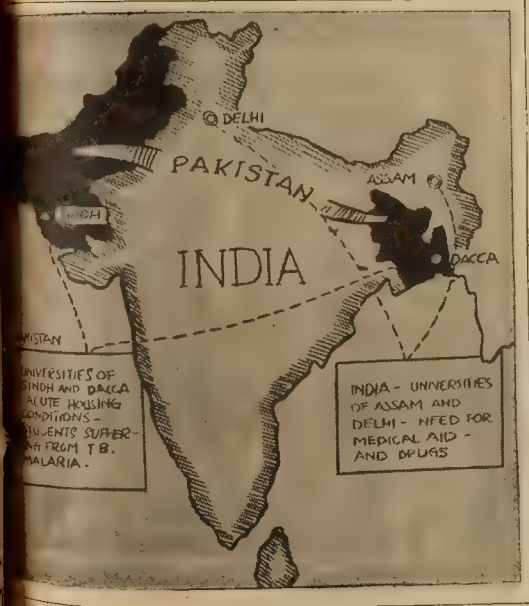
Dacca University is the central university of East Pakistan, to which all other Colleges in this area are affiliated. The University of Dacca corresponds to an Arts College in Canada, and the professional colleges (medical, engineering, agricultural) are affiliated to it. The student accommodation problem here is one of the worst in all of South-East Asia. There are 7,000 students altogether in the university, of whom 2500 are in residence." Only 25 percent of these are able to find University accommodation of any sort. The remainder live in bamboo huts, in slums, on the streets, sleeping wherever they can until they are told to move.

A letter replying to a request for information about hostel accommodation states that "funds for the construction of student accommodation will always be appreciated." This is the natural understatement of a person who does not wish to impose his problems upon others. But the problem is there. The need for student residences is desperate, and SHARE has budgeted $1,500 to be sent to Dacca to aid the students who are forced to live and study under such appalling conditions.

University Of Sind

The University of Sind is one of those to which AVA funds and assistance were sent last year. It is in West Pakistan, and its problems are complicated by the reorganization of the universities in that area. The University of Sind is being moved from Karachi to Hyderbad on the delta of the Indus, and a new university is being established in Karachi. As is true in all the Universities of South-East Asia, student health is a very grave problem. Generally poor living condition aggravate the situation, making medical supplies of prime importance to the university authorities. The following is quoted from a report of the International Student Service: "Students are suffering from pleurisy, malaria, dysentry and TB. The first effort towards improvement will be an examination and mass screening of all the students. Drugs, practically non-existent in this area, are urgently needed, as well as all the facilities for hospitalization." SHARE will provide some part of the medical supplies which are so desperately needed.

University Of Assam



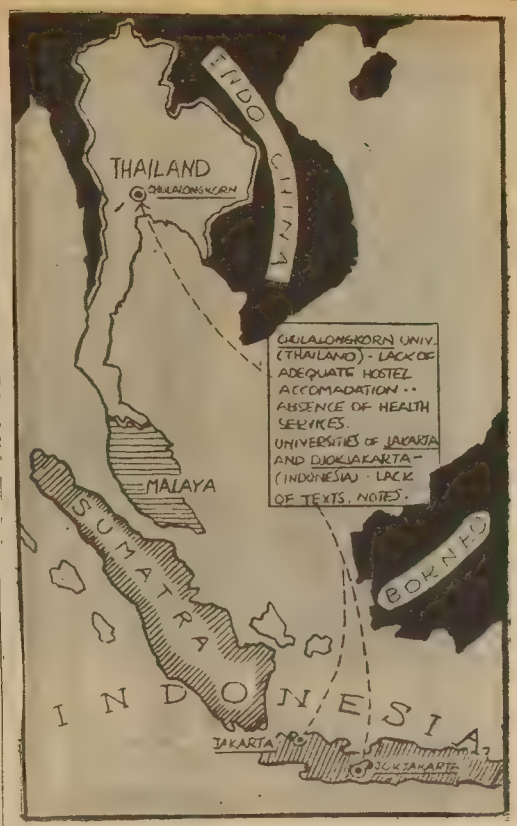
Assam is situated in the north-eastern corner of India, bordering on Tibet, China, Burma and Pakistan. An area of very great natural beauty, it has recently suffered the terrible devastation of earthquake and flood. These twin disasters, the floods coming in the wake of the earthquake, killed thousands of people, and left thousands of others homeless and destitute. Many university students who had been assisted financially by friends during their years of study suddenly found themselves helpless when those friends lost homes, property, in fact their entire means of livelihood. The students were left with nowhere to go and nothing to live on.

..This whole upheaval has caused a very serious problem in the field of student health. Without any proper shelter or food, they are very susceptible to disease. Many are suffering from TB, and it is these particular students in Assam that SHARE intends to help. In the Reid Chest Hospital (a Tuberculosis clinic) there are 75 beds, all full, and 200 names on the waiting list. These students are in desperate need of drugs and all forms of medical equipment. We are going to help them. SHARE has budgeted $600 for aid tho these students who are suffering from TB.

University Of Delhi

The University of Delhi was founded in this city in North-Central India in 1922. It consists of sixteen constituent colleges (located in different places in the area of Delhi). The Colleges have been allowed to develop both as separate institutions and as members of a large university community. The set-up is similar to ours here in Toronto. The facilities of the various are inadequate, with the result that they are unable to handle the thousands of students who want a University education.

Teaching staffs often work double shifts, teaching one set of students during the day, and another in the evenings, but even this drastic arrangement has not solved the problem. Three colleges for refugee students have been set up in an attempt to handle all the students. Some are accommodated in dormitory buildings, but many of the students live in tents on the grounds of these "Camp Colleges." Medical clinics have been set up in some of the colleges of the University, and they are conducting compulsory examinations of all students. The University needs help in this work, and in establishing additional clinics to look after the needs of students in other colleges. SHARE will send drugs to Delhi to assist the overworked doctors and nurses in their efforts to improve the standard of student health. They need $750 worth of drugs as a minimum. We must fill this need.



Indonesian Universities

At present there are two universities in Indonesia. Ont, the Federal University, is centered in Djakarta. The second one, the "Gadjah Made" University in Djokjakarta was last year accredited the National University. In each of the centres there are tremendous needs. The majority of the students work to support themselves, and in service which they owe to the government. They accept these national duties as their share in the social development of the country, but it is hoped that as soon as the general situation improves they will be free to devote all their time to their studies.

One reason why Indonesia was chosen by SHARE was because of the determination, expressed by Mr. Sashitaathadja at the annual WUS Conference last July, of the Indonesian students to become themselves contributors to the international program within three to five years, in spite of their present difficulties. One of the most difficult problems which is faced by the students of Indonesia is a chronic lack of text books, in fact of any books at all.

Liabaries are either non-existent, or else are are filled with empty shelves. Already the problem is being met by copying thousands of notes on mineographing machines, but more machines are needed. With $1.025 we can buy at least two, and perhaps three mimeographing machines with necessary supplies for delivery in Indonesia.

Thailand Universities

The students of Thailand suffer from a lack of adequate hostel accommodation, ignorance of nutrition laws and absence of adequate health services. Students here, as in all other areas of South-East Asia, are living on a daily diet which has a calorific content which is below the recommended minimum level. Only the Chulamongkorn University has a small and inadequate health service. Plans are being made to establish a student health centre, and to organize nutritional health education for the students. SHARE will help in this effort by supplying $250 worth of drugs.

Campaign Focus: Personal Canvass

Today is the first day of the SHARE campaign. This year the campaign is a personal canvass of every student in the University, supplemented by several special events. In this way it is a departure from the procedure which was followed last year in AVA — by which the collection of funds was carried on over a period of several months, the money being collected by means of many special AVA events. This year SHARE is being concentrated into this one week — during the next five days everyone on the campus will be canvassed, through his or her own College or Faculty.

As soon as the canvass has been completed, SHARE is through for the year. I feel that there are definite advantages in conducting the campaign in this manner.

The chief reason for which I favor the personal canvass type of campaign to raise money for students in other parts of the world. When we give money to help others, what is required is an act of charity by each one of us. Charity, if it is to be truly sincere, requires a sacrifice on our part when we reach into our wallets. I do not think that we should expect to receive anything back in return for our dollars except the satisfaction of having supported a worthwhile cause. SHARE is making no attempt to supply a good time for anyone on the campus.

When we all look back on this week, we will not remember a series of affairs at which we all had a good time. We will remember rather that we made a truly sincere sacrifice to help those who do not have all the advantages which happen to be ours. And this is as it should be. SHARE will not be the occasion for a good time for all. It will be an occasion for us to give up a little, and this after all is charity in the truest sense.

Another very important factor in favor of the personal canvass is that every dollar which is given to SHARE is a dollar which will help Asian students. This is closely linked to what I have said above. If we in Toronto were to organize all sorts of functions to raise money, we might collect a great deal from ourselves, but a large proportion of the money which each individual student had spent on the special events would be swallowed up in the unavoidable operating costs which would be incurred by the events. The only expenses which must be covered out of the SHARE funds which are collected this year are the publicity costs, and the cost of shipping the materials from Toronto to the universities in South-East Asia.

And these are expenses which would have to be covered in any sort of fund-raising drive. By using the personal canvass type of campaign, the SHARE committee has ensured that an absolute maximum of the money which we as students give to it will actually be spent to help the students of Asia. This is well worth remembering as we enter SHARE week.

These are some of the reasons why I favor the type of campaign which we in the University of Toronto are conducting this year. I am sure that we are capable of responding generously to the appeal which is being made on behalf of students less fortunate than ourselves. Let's prove this to ourselves. Let's SHARE.

Organization — Many Means — One En

Where does the SHARE committee fit into student organization? What structure has been used in planning the canvass of 11,000 students of the U or T? How have the organizational problems in some of the colleges and faculties been met? These three qustions should be clarified for thos who are still in doubt.

The External Affairs Commission of the Students' Administrative Council was formed this year to handle the work of NFCUS and ISS. This merger was effected to prevent the threat of duplication of work. Thus a local body is doing the work of two national organizations.

The work is divided up among nine committees: the Student-Faculty Committee; the Exchange Committee; the University Entrance Information Committee, are examples. SHARE is the name adopted by this year's Campaign Committee. As in the other committees, a chairman was appointed for SHARE, and a body of fifteen other persons, including members of EAC and interested formed the central committee. The work of this body has been both administrative and executive.

The main problem of SHARE was to find the most efficient and effective way of delegating the responsibility for 11,000 contacts. After much discussion, it was decided that each of the 23 colleges and faculties of the University could handle their own canvass. The SHARE committee then would be responsible for three main phases of the week-long campaign. First, the contacting of the 23 colleges and faculties to sell the ideals of SHARE, and to assist and suggest about canvassing problems.

This was achieved by contacting the 23 student presidents in two open meetings. In these initial contacts, their support and advice and criticism started the ball rolling. The presidents took the results of these meetings back to their executive bodies, received their endorsement, and appointed a responsible member of their student body to run th campaign in their part of the Campus. He, in turn, chose a group of canvassers to help him during the SHARE week.

To further assist in organization, a ten-man public relations committee was set up. During these past six weeks previous to Campaign week, these people have toured the Campus, talking to student executive bodies, mass meetings of canvassers, and open meetings of interested students, selling the idea of mutual student assistance of an International basis. This public relations committee included Fraser Mustard, David Fry, Bob Johnstone, Dwight Fulford, Art Pennington, Al Langford, Ken Jarvis, and others.

SHARE'S second job was Campus-wide publicity. Through the media of signs, posters, pamphlets, movies and The Varsity, SHARE was introduced to the Student Body.

SHARE's third task was to organize special events which had two main advantages: (1) additional sources of revenue, (2) publicity value. Events like Grey Cup parking, a skating party, Hart House noon movies, a band contest and an inaugural Campaign Banquet were planned.

In summary, the responsibility for SHARE breaks down this way. The SHARE executive committee is central. It derives its authority from EAC, which in turn is operated through the SAC. SHARE's contact with the student body is effected through 23 college presidents, their separate SHARE chairman, and his or her committee of canvassers.

Response from the people in charge in the various colleges and faculties has been co-operative and enthusiastic. Each college has had a different organizational problem. For instance the Arts colleges, with their huge number of conflicting and overlapping timetables, have had a more complicated task than Engineering or Meds. Here are some examples of what has been done:

SPS: No fewer than forty canvassers are prepared to contact Skule men. They have been provided with a mimeographed thumbnail sketch of SHARE's names, targets and affiliations. Last Friday the entire group was addressed by SHARE public relations man David Fry, and given final instructions by Skulemen Doug Sherk and Ron Turner.

Medicine: In terms of organization, the problem of carrying out a personal canvass in Med. is not too involved. Fraser Mustard has arranged to have each of the six years addressed by a member of SHARE'S Public Relations Staff. Contributions will be taken as students leave the lecture halls. SHARE's success here will depend on the effectiveness of advance publicity, and the ability of the speaker to convince the students.

Trinity: Years and courses have been divided and sub-divided until each canvasser is responsible for ten fellow students. The canvass here is independent on specific time nor place. Each canvasser has five days to get his quota.

UC: Chuck Hanley, Ralph Wintrob, Jack Robson, Barb Screaton, Dave Rose, and Marg Fleming have come up with a canvassing plan which takes advantage of the three main centres of U population: the Main Hall, the JCR and the residences. Plans have been made to set up a loudspeaker in the main hall.

A number of Colleges and faculties have come up with special events of their own. The School of Nursing is planning a White Elephant sale. Dentistry is putting on a skit and arranging for a special film showing. The Engineers are responsible for the band contest. Bring your flute and your ear plugs.

Blues Paste Curry 79-37 As Lukenda, Brennan Star

By BOB GODSON

A capacity crowd of cheering spectators saw their Blue Basketball team put on their best display of the season Saturday night at Hart House. The return of Eddie Brennan was all Varsity needed to register their highest scoring performance in swamping the tall, but outclassed aggregate from Curry College of Boston by 42 points.

The final score of 79-37 might have even been higher, the way Lou Lukenda and Art Binnington were finding the range. Lou was high scorer for Varsity with 15 points and Binnington and Brennan were tied with 12 points apiece. Ralph Brown, however was the top scorer on the floor. The Curry ace held his team together even up to the last minute for they threatened to fall apart many times and hooped 19 points.

The Blues had a scoring spree in the second half that has seldom been seen in the Hart House gym. Ray Monnot, who played a fine game at centre, replacing Bud Natanson scored all his 11 points in that half. Gary Glover broke out with 9 points, 6 of them coming in a row in the third stanza.

Up until the last four minutes of the second period Curry remained in contention, tying the Blues twice at 6 all and 13 all. Don Fawcett, who was very sharp under the basket, scored two quick baskets to bring the Blues from behind in the early minutes and they were never headed from then on.

Captain Bill Huycke again showed as the most consistent player on his team, scoring nine points, and did some fine checking especially when he stopped Jack Atwood from scoring on a clear breakaway.

Lukenda led the scoring with five field goals in the third quarter as Varsity pulled away from their 29-19 lead at half time to 51-31 at three-quarter time. Binnington hit for two and Fawcett one basket in the final 39 seconds. However Vorsity failed to hit 80, a score which they richly deserved.

Lineups

Curry College—Cole 8, Chirichetti 2, Atwood 2, Brown 19, Petrowicz, Gonski 6, Belliveau.

Varsity—Fawcett 6, Lukenda 15, Binnington 12, Monnot 11, Oneschuck 4, Mayberick 1, Wilson, Glover 8, Huycke 9, Brennan 12.

FENCERS SPLIT

The U. of T. fencing team split two matches in the U.S. over the weekend. They beat Detroit U. 14-13 on Friday, but lost 19-8 to Wayne on Saturday.

Icemen Lose, Tie

but Laval scored on theirs, while on four clear rushes Vernon, Frey and Bennett fired into Vezina's pads, as the Laval goalie sprawled to the ice on every occasion. If any of them had been able to raise the puck he would have had a sure goal.

Montreal, Jan. 12 (Staff) — After piling up a 3-0 lead in the first two periods, the Blues had to settle for a 4-4 tie, Saturday, as Montreal Carabins got hot about midway through the game. To some extent their comeback was just the law of averages, as they outshot Varsity all through the game, 43-18 in regular time and 5-3 in the ten-minute overtime period. Goalie Jack Ross played sensationally, and deserves most of the credit for the tie which keeps Varsity out of the cellar in the standings. However, Montreal showed a decided improvement after Quesnel scored in a scramble in front of the net at 11:04 of the second period.

MacKenzie, Vernon and Rope gave the Blues their lead. Rope scored again late in the second frame from a faceoff in Montreal's end, but a moment later Vernier fired one which ricocheted off Fitzhenry's stick into the goal, as he tried to clear. It was tough for Fitz, who checked and cleared well the rest of the game.

runeau scored in the third when Fitzhenry was off with a roughing penalty, and Hotte scored again. Overtime play was scoreless.

Asiatic Affair

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock

Asia Lisa

The modern world sometimes seems to be no more than a pocket book edition of its former self. Not only is it more widely available to the common reader, but also it seems simpler, if more formidable and more comprehendable, though less controllable than formerly.

Possibly the simplicity of the plot, which divides the world into two vast forces, is deceiving. Asia at least has a complex role to play.

No longer is she the Happy Hunting Ground of empire-builders, the gold mine of foreigners abroad. The old order has changed. One by one the native states have thrown off (or are in the process of doing so) the old regimes, either peaceably as in India and Pakistan, or violently as in Indonesia.

Asia's new position has allowed her to play the coquette with the communists on the one hand and the democracies on the other. For Asia is a modern Mona Lisa; her smile is enigmatic. Even when she seems definitely wedded to one side, as in Communist China, the mystery still remains. How far has China given herself up to Russian Marxism?

Indeed, how far can any country adopt the political creed of another? Different traditions in politics, religion and culture preclude the possibility of thorough-going change. External influences may affect the development of a country, never revolutionize it. Only ideas are really revolutionary.

At present, the Asiatic countries show little disposition to accept the democracy of America or the communism of choose where they will from other ideologies — without out-Russia. They want to seek their own destinies, to pick and side interference. In the present state of world affairs, this might be wishful thinking.

But it is no less wishful thinking on the part of the West to want to convert Asiatic countries to democracy — as we know it. Rather, we must supply, wherever and to whatever degree possible, the material needs necessary for Asia's success in nation-building. Political strings only arouse Asian ire at the present time.

It is one thing for Asia to be poor but proud; it is another matter entirely for her to starve to death. The latter Western countries must prevent.

SHARE Begins

Today is the opening of the SHARE campaign. Student help for Asian relief and education has, of course, been mentioned before, but not until now has it officially descended upon the campus.

Many students will wonder why they have been singled out to contribute to the welfare of Asian students, when they themselves are barely able to afford a university education. $11,000 is a lot of money from a student's-eye-view.

Today's four-page insert should explain something of the extent of Asia's needs, and the difference between Asian needs and our own wants are about as vast as the division between starvation and stomach-rumblings before lunch.

The student's view should go beyond what he sees immediately before him and should extend even to the realm of imagination. For students are students whether here or in universities of south-east Asia. We should adjust our spectacles so that we can understand this.

Immigration

A Canadian Vesuvius

The following article by Michael Hind-Smith, Grad. Studies, is the first of two on Immigration — Canadian lava.

The sensitive seismographs of student politicians have fluttered of late over the eruptions of the Radio Gods of the Parliamentary Committee and the CBC's Davidson Dunton. But these delicate instruments may well break a spring or two at the distinct rumblings of the latest and most spectacular political earthquake to disfigure the pleasant Canadian countryside. This one—immigration—is a more tangible affair than the airy dispute of the liberals of the air (happily this could be little "l" or big "L") with those who would suppress freedom of the air. It hits where most Canadians are more sensitive than they are to "intellectual dispute" — that is in the belly of employment and standard of living, both guarded treasures of all Canadians.

Immigration is a truly Canadian problem — one that has spread its lava over the Canadian people long before freedom of expression came to be an issue with us, or indeed before radio itself was invented at all — regardless of whether one accepts the view that Marconi or the Russians had the first copyright on it. The issue at stake has occurred with almost monotonous acrimony.

As long as Canada has continued her leaps and bounds expansion, demagogue politicians and sane men alike have asked—"Do we want more people?" and "Will our own men be employed still if we import labourers from Europe?" Arguments social, economic, political and sheer hysterical have been bandied forth in reply—as often as not hopelessly biased by the economic milieu from which they come.

The issue was pointed up recently on the highly-publicized arrival on the West Coast of a group of two hundred Germans as immigrants. "Why," cried delegates to the recent Congress of Labor Conference in Vancouver, "should our Canadians go out of work while these non-union, non-Canadians get all the jobs?"

The period from the end of the war has been one of spectacular influxes of people from Europe referred to by the new-citizenship conscious as "new-Canadians". The latest census figures point to immense population increases, 41% in B.C. over ten years, and over a million more people in Ontario. With Dominion unemployment figures standing (at that time) at 134,000 there seemed to be much to support the cry of organized labour. Does this however mean that "expanding Canada" has reached optimum population in 1952 which would permit no more expansion?

Surely not. Our economists tell us of the need for people in Canada, indeed the two hundred Germans obtained work within a matter of weeks. Are we to conclude then — a heresy to organized labour — that high-priced union labour has priced itself out of the competitive market, that employers, hard-pressed by rising costs, have seized upon mass-immigrant labour as the answer?

Where do the line-up stand on this? On the one hand the rank and file of organized labour, though the top-flight leaders have not pressed this view, cries for relief from the pressure. On the other the Government, through Department of Labour and Immigration Department schemes is bringing in more labourers, as in such cases as nearby Ajax where hundreds of recent immigrants await settlement. Alongside this, influential industrial and agricultural concerns in B.C., the Prairies and Northern Quebec and Ontario are still absorbing considerable numbers in many immigration projects.

This is a Canadian dilemma. On the one hand stands a Europe crowded, and in many cases impoverished, in need of "lebensraum". We hear the last-ditch appeal of the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees (successor to the I.R.O.) for New World countries to absorb refugees. On the other a Canada, with relatively wide immigration laws (requiring one year sponsorship for European immigrants) sparsely populated and in need of large scale industrial and agricultural development.

Are we to judge on economic standards? Will Canada's standard of living increase or decrease through immigration? (Economist Mabel Timlin in "Does Canada need more people?" puts up a convincing case for increased productivity through increased population.) Or is it to be socio-political? How, for instance, will French-Canada react to a policy which sees each new arrival carry the odds numbering of French-speaking stock one step further?

Or are we to stand or moral grounds? Upon the new universal criterion we may certainly be criticized. In the light of the new "worldism" based on the Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations can Canada justfully bar entry on any grounds but proof of the detriment to the interests of the Canadian people, something already largely disproved by the economists themselves?

Or is Canadian non-signature of the Declaration of Human Rights more than a legal-constitutional impasse, and in fact a sympton of national psychological reluctance to accept the cares of a world of which Canada is more a part than most Canadians are prepared to realize?

One thing is certain. The cauldrons of the Gods are boiling for a major blood-letting at the reconvening of parliament. The Government has charges to answer — from labour, from immigrants, from U.N. This is a Canadian Vesuvius. Does not the old proverb warn — "If our house is built of straw it will burn quickly"?

Technical Aid Plan Outlined

t it hadn't been for a howling ard, representatives of the adian student body might fin- have met with executives of International Union of Students month, in a preliminary meet- about the long-sought Unity ting. But bad weather forced the plane in which the Can- delegates were flying to talk Joseph Grohman, President of the Communist-dominated organ- ion.

The two delegates of the Nation- Federation of Canadian Uni- ity Students (NFCUS) were President, Jean de Margerie aval), and the Chairman of its ternational Activities Commis- n, Syd Wax, of Toronto. Both re in Europe to attend the Edin- gh conference.

Back in Canada, Wax told how and de Margerie had contact- Grohman on their arrival in ndon late last month, and re- ested a meeting with him in dinburgh, London or Paris. ohman replied that he and his ends couldn't get visas to leave echoslovakia — but invited the Canadians to Prague, instead.

The two flew to Paris, where the nadian embassy OK'ed their p b hind the Iron Curtain, with rning to phone when they ar- ed. But on the flight to Prague, e weather grew worse every ile. Finally a few miles from ague, the pilot was forced to rn back.

This made it impossible to meet ohman before the Edinburgh nference, since no other plane s leaving for Prague for two ys and train travel took 50 urs, Wax said.

The French, meanwhile, com- ented on the proposed meeting, You Canadians must be either ols or children to think it will do y good. It is completely un- alistic."

And the French, English and edish national unions have an- unced they will not attend a ity meeting unless Yugoslavia present. Yugoslavia was thrown t of IUS after Tito broke away om the Kremlin.

The unity meeting was inteded to ovide a last chance to find ounds for co-operation between e IUS and the non-Communist

U.S. Beckons Ali —Enver Will Sub At SHARE Dinner

A sudden appointment as Ambassador to the Uited States will prevent His Excellency Mohammed Ali, High Commissioner from Pakistan, to participate on tomorrow's Student Help For Asian Relief And Education (SHARE) campaign dinner. Mr. E. H. Enver, his secretary, will represent Pakistan instead.

Mr. Enver graduated from the University of Lahore with honors. Mr. Enver became organizing secretary and editor in chief of the official organ of the Punjab Moslem Student Federation in 1944. In 1948 Mr. Enver joined the Pakistani foreign service and concerning himself primarily with foreign affairs and Commonwealth relations stayed in Karachi until he came to Canada in 1949.

Blizzard Prevents Landing

A program of mutual technical aid between students of different lands was one of the main topics of discussion when representatives of 25 national student unions met in Edinburgh early this month.

SMAP (Student Mutual Assistance Program) has been in operation for one year, since the Stockholm international student conference. And at its first birthday, delegates to this year's conference found its progress "not unsatisfactory."

The purpose of SMAP is to equalize educational facilities throughout the world. For example, the British union, after nine months of investigation, is sending three or four students particularly interested in special aspects of student work to West, and possibly East Africa for three months next fall.

South African students have set up scholarships for five "non-European" students at Witwatersand University, in direct opposition to a government regulation forbidding such facilities to non-Europeans.

The Norwegian national union has collected enough money to grant an Indonesian student a scholarship covering all costs (plus pocket-money) for four years of engineering at Trondheim University. When this was announced in Edinburgh, the Indonesian delegate explained this was particularly valuable, since there were only 400 engineers in his entire country.

An international reference library, supplying information on every phase of student life, is one of the American contributions to the program. Facts on everything from health services to sports facilities are available at 48 hours notice.

Chief criticism of SMAP at the conference was the slowness with which contacts had been made between the national unions who wanted to give help, and those they wanted to help. The abscence at Stockholm of delegates from remote areas caused much delay, the report added.

The conference recommended the exchange of national and international student teams to help other student organizations in the fields of housing, health services, field work projects and medical students, and cultural exchanges. It also suggested scholarship exchange programs. international seminars among bodies engaged in SMAP, and publication of technical information which would describe current student problems and some of their solutions.

In other fields, the conference also urged further international student exchange, and the development of national student sports programs. It also urged the national unions to investigate the possibility in their respective countries of the use of student identity cards. These cards, long in use in some European countries, entitle the bearer to lower train fares and admission to cultural events, and cheaper restaurant meals. Canada's is investigating this situation for North America.

Suave English, Lively French See Canada's Growth At Meet

"Canada is taking an increasngly important role in interational student activity. And owhere has this been more learly illustrated than at the ecent Edinburgh conference."

That's the way one of Canada's lelegates to the recent interational student conference in Scotland sums up his country's ole at the meeting. The speaker was Syd Wax, IV Meds, head of the Canadian student body's oreign arm.

The purpose of the conference, Wax said, was to improve interational co-operation between students of different lands.

"The meeting was unanimous n its opposition to forming a Western Student Union," Wax ressed. "All we wanted was inernational co-operation for and by students, without political activity." Regarding the success of the meeting, Wax replied he was "very enthusiastic".

He pointed to the work of the Canadian delegation to the conference, which met January 3 to 9, to show the important part this country played.

The two-man delegation held a number of posts at the conference, he said. The other delegate, Jean de Margerie (President of the National Federation of Canadian University Students) was secretary of the commission in which he sat. Wax himself was a member of the steering committee (the conference' executive body) and had a one-day stint as President of the meeting.

More significent, he said, were the resolutions introduced by Canada to set up an international sectetariat: "a historic delegation which may prove to be the most eventful thing in furthering international student co-operation since the war".

"The Canadian delegation was regarded as pretty serious by the other members," Wax related, "It was also felt that we had none of the antagonisms of many of the other countries. As a result the delegates from every country came to meet us and we got to know them pretty well."

Students from 25 countries were represented at Edinburgh in what Wax termed "a surprising attendance." They came from Western Europe, North America, South-East Asia, and South America. There were blond Norwegians, dark-eyed Italians, brown-skinned Indonesians, and swarthy Brazilians.

"The funny thing was that every foreign delegation seemed to live up to the standard idea of that country's charater", Wax said. Thus the English were the polished diplomats of the conference, the French the most lively and boisterous, the Dutch were sober and precise, the Scandinavians extremely conservative and diligent.

The Indonesians were particularly friendly and polite, Wax said, and told how one of the delegates from Indonesia performed a native dance and sang a number of native songers for the conference.

Wax said he was particularly impressed with the European delegates, who seemed very mature and serious. They were also very well-versed in student problems, he added.

One of the reasons for this seemed to be the greater experience they have had in student affairs, he said. In Canada, NFCUS is composed of only student council presidents, nearly all in their final years. But in Europe, executive members may be chosen from any year. Thus an international vice-president usually has already had three or four years experience in other fields of student affairs, instead of coming in green each year as in Canada, he said.

He added, though, that Canada was not seriously hampered at Edinburgh by the country's relative inexperience in international affairs. Although we did not come up to the British, most of the other countries were in the same boat, he said.

Debaters Tackle US Universities

At least 14 debaters will be needed for the coming University of Toronto Debating Union tours, Students' Administrative Council Debates Commissioner Chuck Hanley, III UC, said yesterday. Two American and two Canadian tours are scheduled. One will include visits to Harvard, Princeton and Brown Universities, and a number of other schools whose names have not yet been confirmed.

In the second group will be the Universities of Chicago and Michigan, and Notre Dame University. These two tours, plus one to Queen's, McGill, Laval and the University of Montreal, will take place simultaneously during the last two weeks of February, and will require three separate teams of two debaters each.

A fourth competition is being arranged through the Inter-University eDbating League, with the U. of T., Western, McMaster, Osgoode Hall and the Ontario Agricultural College taking part. The time and topics for the latter have not yet been decided.

Preliminary trials, open to all Varsity students interested, will be held in Brennan Hall, St. Michael's College, at four P.M. Friday, January 18th. Each contestant will deliver a five minute speech on a given topic. The speakers will be allowed five minutes' preparation

Daniel Hill

By PEARL PARNES

"You can't look at things in a vacuum," feels Daniel Hill, assistant in the Sociology Department of the University of Toronto "I'm no longer interested in the problem of the negro, but in the problem of the negro, the Jew, the poor, economically depressed white, the Japanese, the whole area of hate itself."

"Any change in the status of the poor white automatically raises the status of the negro. The problems go hand in hand. Discrimination in any form, whether it be in the so-called Black Belt, or in the Chinese ghetto in San Francisco, is dangerous. And more dangerous in that you can't reason with it. It's all mixed up in emotion. In the 'Black Belt', at present, the customs, mores and traditions are so fixed and rigid that any type of drastic change might see bloodshed. Talmadge, governor of Georgia and one of the leading white supremicists, said that he'd burn the schools down before he'd allow a negro to enter.

Dan Hill is a warm, sincere young man with training in Engineering and Languages as well as in Sociology. He was brought up in California, where his father, a Methodist minister, had a highly respected status in the community. He was drafted into the army, and, still a green kid, dumped into a situation where he experienced rank "Jom Crow" for the first time.

"I hated the situation, and I had difficulty in reconciling it with the American Creed I had known as a student in California. The southern states posed a different adjustment problem. I wasn't sure how to cope with it. Nothing constructive comes out of a situation of hate. You have to draw yourself up and out, and look at it as something which needs some social engineering."

He left the area of emotion and started to do some constructive thinking. He had just finished his training in Sociology at Howard University, where his father is Dean of the Chapel. Sociology had been his interest since high school. He worked with a company of psycho-neurotic men in the army and now, as a typical veteran, he had had enough "tomfoolery to realize we had a job to do, as most of the G.I.'s and Canadian veterans realized." So in 1948 he left for a summer school in Oslo, Norway, on a fellowship.

He loved the country. "The democratic socialism of Norway has produced the highest standard of living in any country I've seen, partly because of the high educational and health standards, and the homogeneity of the small population." He looked for slum areas in Oslo, and could find none as we have them here. The Norwegians have an open-door, very liberal policy on immigration and discrimination in general is almost impossible to find. The state church is Lutheran, and other religions are very sparsely represented.

After the summer, Mr. Hill left for Paris with eight dollars. He sold his clothes, and with a great deal of ingenuity, managed to get enough money to stay a month. Then he returned to the U.S. He had already studied at Lincoln University, the University of California and had been sent by the army during the war to study Mechanical Engineering. Now he took a year of graduate work in group dynamics at the University of Michigan, acting as a social worker with the Welfare Department of Detroit during the famous 97-day Chrysler strike.

Then, still under the G.I. Bill, he came to Toronto. "I wanted to broaden my educational goals and interests and get an appraisal of the American educational system." He had started this in Europe, and Toronto is helping in criticizing and giving their opinions on American sociologists. "I'll return to the States with a broader outlook."

After a year, two very important things happened. He was recipient of the Sidney Hillman award and was offered an assistantship in the Sociology Department. This gave him a chance to be group leader to two social theory groups.

"We talk about all sorts of things. I try to keep the groups on an informal, unstructured basis, with give and take between students and leader." First names are used, and the leader expects to hear, "Listen, Dan, you're all wet. This is what I think . . ." The problem is one of communication, says Dan. Students are used to the structured class-room situation, with the lecturer at one spot to which all eyes are turned. Dan sits at various places, and there is not set pattern of expectation. "They feel free to communicate."

"This is the first time I've really had a chance to instruct and find out if I have anything to offer. In terms of my own growth, there's so much that kids can give you if you can communicate with them. No one has an option on this thing called knowledge."

"Evaluational Nihilism" Topic For Address By Danish Professor

'Value Nihilism' is the subject of the address by Professor T. J. Geiger, visiting Professor of Sociology from Denmark, that will be heard by the Philosophical Society and others interested in Cartwright Hall Wednesday evening at 8:00.

That value judgments are spurious, neither true nor untrue but rather meaningless and illegitimate, is an idea that sprang up simultaneously in various place . . . Vienna, England, America and Sweden. In Sweden at the University of Uppsala, 'evaluational nihilism' was developed in opposition to the idea of objective values.

"Unfortunately", says Professor Geiger, "value judgments are not meaningless." If they were, there would be nothing against our passing them, he holds, but on the contrary they are passed as supposed statements, and so they are not meaningless bit wrong.

Born in Munich, he was a professor in Brunswick until 1933, followed by five years at Copenhagen on a Rockefeller fellowship. In 1938 he took the first chair of Sociology in Scandinavia. Thrown out by the Germans in 1940, he spent three years "lying low". Then, hunted by the Germans in 1943, he escaped to Stockholm, Sweden, where he came in contact with the philosophy of Value Nihilism at Uppsala. In 1945 he returned to Denmark. Flowers, Formal, Freshmen Debated at Record VCU Meet

In a "record meeting" yesterday afternoon of 42 minutes the Victoria College Union decided that the Vic At Home, Feb. 8, will be formal.

Formal rentals are more expensive this year Social Directress Lois White said, but the Great Hall is really nice", and it doesn't require any decorations. Tickets for the formal will be $3.00 as last year, although the budget has not been organized, she added.

"Most girls don't want a corsage," Lois White continued. Instead flowers will be available at the dance, she said.

SHARE Campaign Chairman John Lewis asked that all Vic students cooperate personally in this campaign. "Support the campaign this week as a conscientious student," he said. He reported that the year executives and residences have organized the campaign. President John Devereux added that this is "a hard job but one that has to be done."

The Assembly voted $15 for refreshments for the orientation Tea dance which will be held at Vic as part of the Freshman Orientation program of the SAC.

Publicity Director Ed File reported that the desired dates for the Caledon weekend for the VCU are already taken by small organizations and societies. Ken Cork of Vic pointed out that the weekend could be held at the end of January, in which case half the eligible members of the VCU must join the Hart House Outing Club. He added that this would be more expensive and that other people would be free to use Caledon farm at the same time.

SAC elections at Vic will be held next Friday, John Devereux announced. Nominations will close next Monday.

The power of appointing the Bob Revue Director for next year was delegated to the VCU executive. In making the motion Phelps Bell, who was appointed Director of the Bob at last month's VCU meeting, said that there had been insufficient publicity for the position. The ad was not in The Varsity long enough, he said. A director will be appointed at the next executive meeting of the VCU.

The meeting was held at noon hour because of transportation difficulties for commuting students engendered by an evening meeting.

Mixed Blessing

The TTC struck—but by a special miracle the snows descended in sufficient quantity to make parking possible on the back campus. (For those with very much energy, Queen's Park is also a possibility.) But then the rains came!

Cruising Police Cry For Blood

Police cars have been cruising around the city for the past few days calling for blood donations of a rare type. There was a wounded police constable at the Toronto General Hospital, whose condition was becoming more serious because the blood bank did not have enough of his type of blood.

The SAC was notified and Mr. A. MacDonald happened to tell a meeting of the Finance Committee of the S.A.C. Bud Trivett II BA, chairman of the committee and a regular doner to the Red Cross and knew that the badly needed blood was the same as his, ORH Negative. "Only 10 per cent of the population have this type," said Trivett.

After arriving at the Hospital Trivett found there were several people there waiting to give their blood, though most of them did not know what their type was, but were willing to give just in case it would help.

ETC Awkward Too

Edmonton. (CUP)—The Edmonton Transit Co. has abolished street cars and established buses, but this has proved a costly move and resulted, for the present in poor service. Students of the University of Alberta are especially dissatisfied with the service according to The Gateway (student newspaper). The ETC has refused a recent student request either to increase the service or reduce fares. At present a Rush Hour service is scheduled but this may be re-routed through a district where it will be of no service to the University. If the Rush Service is re-routed the Student Council feels attendance at University will be extremely awkward.

Gala, Gay, Blade Evening For Asian Aid Monday

An All-Varsity skating party next Monday evening is one of the events planned in aid of the SHARE campaign, Tim Armstrong, chairman of the Aid to Asia Drive has announced. SHARE has been offered Varsity Arena, free, for the entire evening, and all proceeds will go to the Student Help to Asian Relief and Education.

"This is something nobody will want to miss," said Scott Simon of the SHARE executive committee. "For the fifty-cent admission price, blade fans will get an evening of skating to music, a chance at several lucky-number draws and special prizes. Various extras, like an accelerated conga-line, a spot-prize and a ballon fight, are contemplated by the committee. The Forty-eight Highlanders Band will start playing at 7:30, and will keep it up throughout the evening.

"It doesn't matter whether people come in couples or in gangs," said Simon. "Even not owning skates is no deterrent, since you can rent them if necessary at the Arena.

"It should be a terrific party. We expect the tone of the evening to be one of discreet rowdyism," he said.

Friday, January 18, to Saturday, January 26, at 8:30
At the present time the opening Friday and Saturday and the following Thursday, Friday and Saturday are almost sold out. There are tickets available for the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday performances. We know from past experience that the week-ends will sell out and many students will be turned away while there will be empty seats during the earlier part of the week.
DON'T BE DISAPPOINTED!
Book early and for the beginning of the week if possible.

Quartet Contest Will Soon Begin At Hart House

All the ambitious quartets on campus have a chance for their talents to be heard.

For the third year the All-Varsity Quartet Contest, originated by Gerry Hart and Charles McCurdy, will have its trials during the week of January 29. It is sponsored by the House Committee at Hart House.

The quartets don't necessarily have to be the barbershop type. Any type of quartet is eligible, Dave Gardner, Assistant Warden, said. He is in charge of the applications.

This contest has become celebrated enough that McMaster University has asked to enter. However, since there is a rule that members of the quartet must belong to Hart House, they can only be invited as guests.

Although the judges are still to be chosen, the eliminations will take place during the sing songs. They will be held at Hart House from 1:30 to 2:00 every Tuesday and Friday. The winner of the two kuartets that reach the finals will be at the Vic At-Home on February eighth.

The entry forms are available in the Warden's office for entering until January 25th.

The first contest was won by a group called "Tthe Four Flushers" of the Red Ingle variety, singing "The Tennessee Waltz." They also appeared in the All-Varsity Revue and Skule night. Although they have all graduated, they were called back by the Blue and White Society to give their rendiltions during the last two Home-Coming weekends Stadium shows. In 1940 they made a trip through the Southern States, and paid for it by working the night club circuit.

Last year, with four quartets entered, Wycliffe College was the winner. The song they chose was "Honeybun." Although blazers and grey flannels are customary, the law faculty entrants turned out dressed as judges and the Medsmen as barber-poles.

The quartets' are to be judged not only for their musical ability, but on their presentation and entertainment value, as well. Each group must sing two numbers of their own choice, and can dress as they please, Gardiner said.

Bookstore or Beerstore?

"Administrative officers of University College should be elected by the students and not appointed by the Board of Governors" will be the chief motion to come up for discussion before the open Lit meeting at UC tonight.

The Lit will also discuss a motion to convert the bookstore into a brewer's retail store. The members will also vote on two constitutional amendments. One of these concerns the use of the new Gesteltner for which prices will be announced at the meeting. The other motion is to the effect that a permanent executive will be re-elected every five years from each of the graduating classes.

Plans for the Arts Ball will be brought before the members and probably the results of the Monte Carlo raffling of tickets will be announced.

Yankee Leadership Is Debates Topic

Professor F. H. Underhill, of the University of Toronto department of History, will be the honorary visitor at the first Hart House debate of the new year. The question for the debate, which will be held tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Debates Room, is: "Resolved that this House deplores the leadership given by the United States of America in world affairs."

Professor Underhill has written for the Canadian Forum and other publications, mainly on political subjects. He believes that Canada and the United States form a North American community, and have much more in common than most Canadians believe.

Before World War II, Professor Underhill realized that the power and prestige of the British Empire were declining, though at the time he was ridiculed for his far-sighted statement. He is also a member of the CCF party, though his activities in the field of internal politics are limited mainly to constructive criticism, he said.

Grant Morden, Wycliffe, will oppose the motion. Speaking in defence of U.S. leadership in world affairs, he said: "By the mercy of God, we have been granted another chance to try and build a peaceful world civilization. My conviction is that only Christianity is capable of furnishing the basis of such a civilization.

"The United States has a tremendous responsibility to see that the forces that oppose the reality of God and the importance of the individual man, do not triumph. Let us beware of those who lightly attribute to bad and evil motives, even the 'so-called' mistakes in U.S. foreign policy," he said.

John Barton, who represented the University of Toronto on the Brading Trophy Debating team, will be in the Speaker's Chair.

Robot Brain

Cambridge, Mass (Exchange) — Mark IV, the forthcoming mechanical brain of the computation laboratory, is to be put to work on textual revision of the Bible, The Harvard Crimson (student newspaper) announced recently. The American Philosophical Society has granted $3,250 for textual study of the Gospel of St. Luke on the computer which is to be completed in the spring. The machine will spot differences in manuscripts, showing where extra words have been added, others deleted, different spellings used and word orders inverted. It is expected to whizz through 100 ancient manuscripts in two weeks.

Capillaries Win Prize For Grad

The George Armstrong Peters prize of the value of $100 cash and $100 sterling silver has been awarded to Dr. Raymond O. Heimbecker. This prize is offered biennially to a Varsity graduate of not more than ten years standing who has made a sufficiently important contribution to surgical science.

Dr. Heimbecker, a native of Calgary and a graduate of the University of Saskatchewan, obtained his M.D. from the University of Toronto in 1947. Since then he has spent one year interning at the Toronto General Hospital, one year as a fellow in surgical research with Dr. W. G. Bigelow, one year in surgical research with Dr. Blalock at John Hopkins University, and has now had one year's training in clinical surgery. His paper on "Experimental Reversal of Capillary Blood Flow" was read at the recent meeting of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in Quebec.

Player's Please

CANADA'S LEADING CIGARETTE

balcony viewpoint

By FRANK MORITSUGU

If Good Intentions and heavy investment were the only ingredients necessary for film quality, ACROSS THE WIDE MISSOURI (Loew's) would be a very fine film indeed. This beautifully photographed off-beat western is plumb full of high instincts and MGM gold. Unfortunately, it is vague and unsatisfying.

This does not mean that this Clark Gable opus should be passed up. Director William Wellman (whose other westerns include THE OX-BOW INCIDENT and YELLOW SKY) has tried an American western on the grand scale. Using the beauty of the mountainous west for his broad brush strokes, Wellman tells about the mountain men of the early 1800s. The brush strokes are impressive in their sweep and Technicolored grandeur, but Wellman has forgotten that some sharply etched detail might have heightened the effect of his panoramic method.

An unglamorous and restrained Gable leads the mountain men, and ACROSS THE WIDE MISSOURI is concerned with one winter's trapping of this gang. To ease his way into beaver-trapping in Blackfeet hunting grounds, Gable buys and weds a young Indian maiden (Maria Elena Marques). All goes well, with only nature's hazards and beauties to hold up things. Then comes conflict with a bellicose young Indian sub chief (Ricardo Montalban).

An Indian attack at a waterhole in the trappers' homeward trip suddenly trips the film into high gear. So in the last two reels or so, there is a Chase, a coming-to-grips, and Vengeance for foul murder. But we have been lost in the mountain fastnesses too long, we do not know the people too well. Why for instance does the young Indian villain take after the bawling half-caste babe on the runaway horse?

In Hollywood it is now fashionable as well as profitable to promote racial tolerance and understanding. Often it has been more tolerance than understanding, but the effort is there. With this change of heart, the Indian of America has come into his own; so unlike the Bad Old Days, usually in the same picture we find both Good and Bad Indians as well as Good and Bad White Men. And the Good Indian is not faithful Tonto.

Miscegenation is also a new Hollywood revelation, with Indian brides who favor Hollywood-type beauty rather than Pocahontas. These marriages are usually short-lived, one-half of the mates being killed off by villainy.

In ACROSS THE WIDE MISSOURI, miscegenation is treated with more than usual respect, as are Indian customs and Indian character and personality. And the unseen narrator is the grown-up son of the Mountain Man and his Indian wife.

This narration is indicative of the semi-documentary technique used to tell this story. Perhaps it is the unflinching attempt to adhere to realism that makes the story seem both wandering and sometimes tedious. The language problem contributes here, with Old Indian Hand Adolphe Menjou constantly interpreting the Indian dialect. Gable and his mate talk to each other with constant reference to Menjou for interpretation. If you have patience, this will enhance your appreciation of the noble motives of the film-makers. On the other hand, you may wish there were English sub-titles so the action could speed up.

There is much humor and picturesqueness in the various episodes of the film. The mountain men celebrating at their rendezvous with whiskey and square-dancing is a hilarious scene. A Scottish veteran of Waterloo with aide-de-camp and bagpipes forms a striking part of the mountain gang.

Continuing the New Year surveys, there are really good prospects for the 1952 movie season. ROMEO AND JULIET (the MGM version with Leslie Howard, Norma Shearer and John Barrymore) is the Towne Cinema's next attraction, while the Italian TO LIVE IN PEACE will follow LAUGHTER IN PARADISE at the International. QUO VADIS is to hit Loew's screen this month, while BRIGHT VICTORY (Arthur Kennedy as the blinded veteran) is to come to the Uptown.

Others more distant perhaps include the new Alec Guiness film, THE MAN IN THE WHITE COAT, DECISION BEFORE DAWN (about the young Wehrmacht sergeant who works in Germany for the OSS), DEATH OF A SALESMAN (Stanley Kramer), SNOW WHITE (re-issue of the Disney classic.

Negotiations are being made to get both de Sica's MIRACLE IN MILAN, and the Venice Festival winner RASHOMON (Japanese). Even more distant perhaps are films that have been made or are still in the process like the Bogart-Hepburn offering, THE AFRICAN QUEEN (John Huston direction), GBS' ANDROCLES AND THE LION, William Wyler's (Sister) CARRIE with Olivier and Jennifer Jonés, MY SON JOHN (with Helen Hayes and Robert Walker), AARON SLICK FROM PUNKIN CRICK Alan Young), and the UPA GERALD McBOING BOING, Mr. MAGOO) feature A THURBER CARNIVAL.

Statesmen Wish Luck To 'SHARE

Letters and telegrams have been pouring into the Students' Administrative Council, from points in Canada and the United States. Prominent international figures in both countries have congratulated the students of the University of Toronto on their efforts through the Student Help For Asian Relief And Education Campaign. Here in part are some of the messages received.

Bernard M. Baruch — United States Elder Statesman comments on the SHARE Campaign — "May good fortune attend your efforts."

John Foster Dulles, Consultant to Dean Acheson, U.S. Secretary of State — "May I wish you every success in your campaign."

A. D. P. Heeney, Canadian Under-Secretary for External Affairs — "Your campaign is one of the most worthwhile student extra-curricular activities."

George C. Marshall, Former Secretary of Defence for the U.S.A. — "Sincere good wishes for a successful campaign."

General Douglas MacArthur — "May I wish the students of the University of Toronto cordial good wishes for their campaign."

Aiben W. Barkley, Vice President of the United States of America — "Good luck in your commendable effort."

Vic Members of Staff Put Out Funny Book

A BOOK OF CANADIAN HUMOUR Edited by John D. Robins and Margaret V. Roy. Ryerson Press, 1951, 308 pp., $4.50.

If time and space had permitted, a review of this new anthology of Canadian humor would have appeared before the Christmas season. It is a pity, because A Book of Canadian Humour would be an excellent gift for most people, except-ing perhaps only those who protest too loudly that they possess a sense of humor.

Miss Ray and Professor Robins, both of Victoria College, have put together a delightful collection. The only general comment to be made about the representative Canadian humor here is that there is little of Rabelais or Falstaff. Johnny Chinook and Paul Bunyan are gestures to the young pioneering land, but the keyword to Canadian humor here seems to be restraint and good-naturedness. There may not be a laugh on every page, but there may be a chuckle or more.

Many old friends are present in this anthology, from the Old Master, Leacock, to the newest star on the national horizon, Eric Nicol. And in addition to books, both magazines and newspapers are sources of the pieces that make up this motley bunch. Among those included are Sam Slick, Leacock's Remarkable Uncle, W. H. Drummond's Johnny Courteau, Lister Sinclair's "All About Emily," Paul Hiebert's Sarah Binks, and Earle Birney's Turvey. The latter two are in excerpts, excellent appetizers to the original works, as are most of the snippets and clippings in the collection.

To most of us, there is the extra fillip, the pieces that we come onto for the first time, which may make us look for the original book — those by Gilbert Norwood and B. K. Sandwell are among those new to me. And if magazine and newspaper pieces have been missed, here are some of the best by W. O. Mitchell, Mary Lowrey Ross, Robert Fontaine and J. V. McAree. Mary Lowrey Ross' "Trousseau Tea" was the most delightful of the pieces I came upon for the first time.

As far as sins of omission are concerned, the editors have been truly sly. The difficulties of anthologizing humor are discussed with thorough forthrightness, in both a preface and Miss Ray's introduction, and any protester finds that both his hands have been tied behind his back. And with the disarming opening sentence, "The funniest bit of Canadian humor you have read is not in this book," the complainant has already been deftly gagged.

So my private beef is not directed against this particular and most excellent compilation. But if the editors come to consider a Second Book of Canadian Humour, I have a suggestion or two. (Even if we are becoming a timid and sensitive race that cringes from colorfulness, there seems to be much Canadian humor untouched that is worth resurrecting.)

The first request is for further gleaning of our magazines and newspapers. Evidence in this anthology suggests that many nuggets of Canadian humor have been casually thrust out into backyard oblivion, protectors of yesterday's fishbones and potato peelings. This research problem is a mountainous one, but undergraduate help, as in the present volume, might solve some of the difficulty. The other suggestion is a plea for consideration of West Coast newspaper columnist Jack Scott. This daily writer, also printed in an Ottawa daily, is famed in the Pacific Northwest for his study of seagulls and cormorants and his accounts of Henry Pludge's struggles with life (with capital or small "L"). Another possibility is Bruce Hutchinson, of course.

I repeat, this is not a complaint about the present book, a fruitful addition to any library. But next time, please.

Professor Robins himself is represented in A Canadian Book of Humour with two pieces, an introductory essay on humor and an excerpt from Cottage Cheese. The piece about Gwen's visit to the cottage is quite delightful, but I'm beginning to think that the first essential for writing about humor is that the writing must be humorous.

The Ryerson people are to be commended for publishing a book like this one, but the book jacket's ugliness and unimaginative typography and binding are not worthy of the material presented.

Frank Mortimer

Ave Atque Vale

By BETTY CARNWATH
Book Review Editor

Trinity Review bravely publishes an issue five out of seven months of the college year as well as a summer edition devoted to a grand review of the year's College activities. Although this publishing record is impressive we regret to report that the quality of the Review's output is not. Taking a quick glance at the tables of contents for the November and December issues, we found that out of a total of twenty-nine listings, sixteen were devoted to poetry. This might lead you to expect that poetry was the Review's strong point, and, going on that assumption we gave the poetry at least two readings.

We emerged from our period of careful scrutiny with a slightly denioniac urge to give the Review's group of poets a name. Perhaps we could call them The Metaphysically Anguished School of Poets and divide their poems into two main types, the I-wandered-lonely-as-a-cloud-poems and the god-poems. This of course is unfair to the contributors of humorous verse and the slightly superior efforts of Tait, Morley and Elizabeth Revell. Yet we cannot refrain from commenting on the 'search for something or other' theme which permeates the Review's poetry. Or for that matter, on the deeply moral tone of the whole magazine.

John Barton's "Western World" follows Toynbee and cites the great moral tradition of Christianity as the greatest strength of Western Civilization. Barry Watson has a story called "The Moral", and G. A. E. Clarkson's "Western Peace Council for the Prevention of Preventative Wars" (which we liked very much) is subtitled "An Enigma With An Awful Moral . . ." Finally, the only short story of any stature, "Magette" revolves around a moral conflict complete with devils 'in the flesh'!

Such an onslaught of sober thought makes us turn with relief to the Misses Smyth and Monro's instructions on "How to Make a Thimble Cosy" without asking too many questions. Or 'Why Not Jazz?' Why Not? The Great Search is too much for us.

Biography of Melancholy Poet Symptom of Revived Interest

GREEN SHADOWS: The Life of John Clare
By June Wilson.
Musson Book Company, 1951.

The Poet John Clare (1793-1864) is just beginning to come into his own. The past thirty years have seen a revival of interest in this out-of-the-way poet who can hardly be placed within the confines of any literary tradition.

Born in the small village of Helpston in central-eastern England, Clare reached his manhood knowing only the companionship of his fellow villagers. He was a very practical man of sense, according to Miss Wilson, and had it not been for his love of nature and impulse to write poetry he would probably have lived and died an unknown villager.

Fortunately for posterity he sought a publisher for his poems and made contacts in London through The London Magazine which opened up for him a world of intellectual companionship such as had been hitherto unknown to him. In this respect his career was somewhat similar to that of Robert Burns, and Clare was torn between Helpston and London, the natural surroundings that he loved, and the friends who stimulated his mind and helped him to develop.

As the years progressed, and Clare's poetry began to gather an audience, he became subject to long periods of depression and melancholia which culminated in a persistent hallucination—Clare believed that his first wife was still alive and living with him along with his second. Friends of Clare realized that he was slowly losing his mind and in 1837 Clare was placed in an Asylum at High Beech where he stayed until his death in 1864.

The lines penned by this solitary and deranged poet have never been equalled for their natural simplicity. Witness "To the Butterfly."

"Oft I've seen thy little leg
Soft as glass o'er velvet glides
Smoothen down they silken sides;
Then they wings would ope and shut;
Then thou seemingly wouldst strut . . ."

and

"Crimp-frilled daisy, bright bronze buttercup,
Freckt cowslip-peeps, gilt whins of morning's dew
And hooded arum early sprouting up
Ere the white-thorn bud half unfolds to view."

"I loved nature," Clare wrote in one of his letters, "and painted her both in words and colours better than many Poets and Painters . . . in my boyhood solitude was the most talkative vision I met with. Birds, bees, trees, flowers all talked to me incessantly, louder than the busy hum of men, and who so wise as nature out of doors on the green grass by woods and streams under the beautiful sunny sky . . ." The reader cannot help but feel genuine simplicity of this poet and for those sufficiently interested here, for the first time is a scholarly and sympathetic treatment of his life.

Poetry's Thoughts —Tschumi

THOUGHT IN TWENTIETH CENTURY ENGLISH POETRY

By R. Tschumi.
British Book Service, 1951, $3.75.

Tschumi distinguishes between philosophical thought and poetical thought on the ground that poetry alone can express through symbols the ideas of our unconscious processes. The substance of poetical thought eludes all conscious efforts at reducing it to abstract terms, according to this critic, and it is interesting to examine the thought expressed in modern poetry to see if it does not perhaps contain a more immediate awareness of man's condition than the theorizing of philosophers has been able to achieve.

Concentrating on Yeats, Edwin Muir, Eliot, Read and C. Day Lewis, Tschumi carefully extracts for his readers the vision of life which each of these poets is trying to communicate in their poetry. For Yeats the world is a cycle of recurring states of mind in which both a subjective and objective personality participates. Muir is preoccupied with man's subjection to time and hopefully holds out the thought that time will eventually prove the agent of superior justice. Eliot sings the swan song of a dying age and reiterates the necessity of a higher truth. Read presents the greatest number of problems to his readers of any of the poets here considered and rings a wide knowledge of both science and philosophy to bear on his writing. He emerges as a pantheist who believes that the mind through discerning the laws of Nature, like harmony for instance, comes to a greater understanding of the world by using these laws in creative activity. C. Day Lewis wants to establish through his poetry a real and living contact between man and man and emphasizes communal experiences and objective emotion.

Humanizing Of Art Necessary: Grosser

THE PRINTER'S EYE
By Maurice Grosser
Carke Irwin & Co., 1951, $3.

A painter himself, Maurice Grosser is able to point out and emphasize the importance of the materials of the artist in determining both the way in which he paints and the subject matter he chooses. According to Grosser, painting as it is done today is the result of two revolutions in technique. First the discovery of a method of painting in oil about the year 1400, and second, the rejection by Fragonard and Guarli of 'planned' painting which led to the improvised 'on the spot' paintings of the Impressionists.

Modern Art, Grosser contends, is still dependent upon an equalized surface tension and improvised, unplanned canvas. It differs however from Impressionist painting in that the subject matter of modern Art is secondary to the composition and is in most cases either indiscernible to the average person's eye or else capable of many interpretations. The 'subject' is merely an image, and the true subject, for the painter has become the composition of the image.

Grosser feels that Modern Art's pre-occupation with composition, technique and particular images has prevented it from seeing the world and seeing it whole. He believes the unifying perspective needed in a human one and advocates bringing back a life-value into art, a perspective 'adapted to human sizes and to the shape of man.' A painter's view of ultimate reality, Grosser feels, can only come through the painting of people.

Many squawks of protest will doubtless be raised concerning Grosser's position by painters who feel that composition is all. Yet he will certainly find support from the people who have to look at Modern Art.

Archaeology Made Simple By Ceram

GODS, GRAVES AND SCHOLARS
By C. W. Ceram.
McClelland & Stewart, 1951, $6.25.

A German Scholar, C. W. Ceram has attempted to do for Archaeology what Paul de Kruif did for Medicine in his popular book Microbe Hunters. Reviewers of Gods, Graves and Scholars seem to feel that Ceram has been too careless in his presentation of the story of Archaeology, but the average reader will probably be grateful to him for having spared him as much technical detail as possible.

Instead, Ceram has leaned heavily on the dramatic moment when great finds were uncovered and on the personalities of the archaeologists themselves. The Mexico, Greece, Egypt and Babylon of ancient days are resurrected before the readers eyes as Ceram unfolds the exciting story of archaeological investigations of the past seventy-five years.

This book is not recommended for avid students of Art and Archaeology, and even adults with just as general interest in the subject may feel that Ceram talks down to his audience. Certainly a teen-ager would get a big thrill out of a book like Gods, Graves and Scholars, and Ceram is not to be ridiculed for his attempt to present to the public in an interesting way the discoveries of a very specialized field of studies.

George Whitney

Journalist Skims Fast Over Past

THE INDIGO BUNTING
By Vincent Sheean.
Musson Book Co., 1951.

The journalist Vincent Sheean has written a personal memoir of his short acquaintance with the late Edna St. Vincent Millay. Both Sheean and the late poetess could be tagged as highly emotional mystics and the Sheean's continual attempt to find significance and spiritual meaning in every movement of Miss Millay's prevents him from creating a real portrait.

Sheean does not pretend to give an accurate account of Miss Millay's life and skims very quickly over her past, protesting that people built fantastic stories around Miss Millay that in the long run prevented them from ever getting to know her. We think that Sheean has let his feelings get away with him, and although we do not deny that Miss Millay was an extremely sensitive any delicate person, we don't think that her life was one steady procession of beautiful moments and timid withdrawals.

Literary Progress

Short stories jumped by 2 to a 6 point total on the literary exchange today. Serious verse took a leap of three to reach the same 6 entry peak. Articles, Light Verse and Photographs remained steady at 4, 8 and 18. Cartoons as yet are not on the board. The deadline for all entries is January 17.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Taking a quick look down the line-up of the Toronto Hockey Blues, the casual observer would be struck with its goal-scoring potentialities. There is Jack McKenzie, who played right wing with Marlboros two years ago on their great first line with Dan Lewicki and George Armstrong. There is Don Rope, with St. Mike's Senior OHA entry last year, and Jack Wheldrake, from the Saints' Junior A team. Ernie Frey was high scorer for the Intercollegiate league last year with the Blues, and Phil Arrowsmith was close behind. John Adams was one of the top scorers with last year's Intermediate champions.

Somehow, though, this power-packed line-up has produced an average of less than four goals a game, and have won only one of their four games. For one thing, the team is not as well balanced as last year's. McKenzie, Wheldrake, Arrowsmith, Fox, and Conboy are right wingers, and Frey, Rope and Vernon are left wingers. This means that coach Bill Wade has had to try several of his wingmen at centre. He has McKenzie, Rope, and Fox at centre now (Bennett is up from the JV's while Fox is on the limp).

Our guess is that there will be another shake-up in the lines this week to produce more scoring. On the first line, Don Rope does about 80% of the work, or more accurately, he has puck about 80% of the time, while his wingmen rarely see it after they pass it to him. He is a great hockey player, but does not strike us as being much of a playmaker. McKenzie is also being wasted to a certain extent on the second line, as Frey has not yet hit his 1951 form, and Arrowsmith is out with pneumonia, though he may be back for the first home game a week this Friday.

Rope could possibly be moved to wing on a line with McKenzie and Wheldrake. This would be the highest scoring combination, though a line of Frey, Fox and Arrowsmith would be powerful if the last two return to the line-up in time. If Rope is to be kept at centre, we cannot see the point in wasting the good wingmen he has now; better to give him a couple of good checkers and let his present wings work on a line where they will get the puck.

The team missed the solid thumping of Joe Kane who was hurt the day the team left. "Red" Stephen, Gerry Fitzhenry, Paul Prendergast, and Al Fasan all checked well, but there was no one who could make the opposing rushers keep looking around for fear of being flattened. Moving Stephen back to the blue line looked like a good move, as he cleared and handled the puck well in addition to his checking. When Kane comes back, there should be a big difference.

Leaping Lou

Pictured above is Lou Lukenda, who was the big gun in Varsity's 79-37 victory over Curry College Saturday night. He hooped 15 points as the Blues put on their best display of the season. This was only Toronto's second win, but they have managed to stay undefeated at home due to top performers like Lukenda.

Senior Skule Win Shade Redmen 4-3 In Hockey Thriller

A three-goal surge in the second period gave Sr. SPS a thrilling 4-3 verdict over Sr. UC in yesterday's Group one hockey action. UC moved into a 3-1 lead in the first frame but the Engineers came roaring back to edge the undermanned and tiring Redmen who had but two substitutes and were beginning to to show the strain as the game wore on.

UC took charge from the opening whistle and looked good as Bill Bewley grabbed a loose puck and fired it past the surprised Petcoff at 1:30. After Petcoff made a brilliant stop on MacDonald's breakaway, Skule was hitting on all cylinders. At 6:30, there was a shot from the UC blue line which was a bit off the target. Wilson picked it up and rammed it past Smela in the UC cage, to tie the score.

The Redmen struck fast for a pair of counters in the ninth minute and seemed to have a commanding lead. MacDonald blasted one home as he drifted past the SPS goal and seconds later he set Wilson up on a fast-breaking play. SPS were pretty well in charge for the rest of the period but they did everything but score. They hit the post while Bratty was off for holding.

The second chapter was Skule all the way. Smith put them back in the contest when a long shot of his was deflected in. Then at 11 minutes while Bratty was sitting it out for holding again, Morrish evened matters. Smith got the clincher and SPS held on for the win.

SWIMMING AWARDS

The swimming awards from the required P. T. Classes were announced last week. There were 150 Bronze Medallions awarded. These cost eighty-five cents.

There were 443 Red Cross awards made, 135 senior, 158 intermediate, and 150 junior. The awards may be picked up from Mr. Griffith's office in Hart House.

Sportswoman

In a fast moving tilt at Varsity Arena Friday, POT I downed UC I to the tune of 5-4. The Physos netted the puck in the first thirty seconds of play, then added another goal in quick succession. The Red and White crew sank two to tie up the game at the end of the first period.

The second frame saw POT take the lead with two counters. The UC gals burned one in past the POT goalie to narrow the margin. Physios scored a quick goal at the opening of the third, with UC hard on their heels all the way. Daphne Walker popped in one for UC but despite desperate attempts at shuffling the lines they could not sink the tying tally.

Lois Cossar was high scorer for the winners with two, while Janie Hammond, Molly Bark and Diana Conacher netted one apiece. Daphne Walker and Diane Conacher both sank two for the Red.

It was St. Hilda's all the way in a return hockey match yesterday against Vic II, with the Saints rolling up a 7-0 score in an action game that had its share of spills and break-aways.

The first period saw Scotty Matthews score from Heather McPherson on the first play, and Ann Lawson, Joan Stirling, and McPherson shared the honours, bringing the score to 5-0 by the end of the session.

Barb. Weatherhead and Joan Haggard managed to bring Vic into scoring position more than once in the dying moments of the game, but couldn't clear the puck away from the staunch Trinity defence.

With two minutes left to play Penny Ketchum, of the tried and true line of Ketchum-Matthews-McPherson, scored on a breakaway, and the game ended in the third shut-out for Trinity netminder, Elsie Bongard. In the frequent scrambles in front of the net, and in the face of clean shots on goal. Vic goalie Joan Wickdon played a brilliant game.

Pitching Sportshoes

There was very little action on the interfaculty sports scene today. The best game of the day was the hockey tilt between Jr. SPS and Pre-Meds. Barker scored in the first period from Jamieson for the Skulemen and from there on in it was a clean fast scoreless hockey game. Duncan played a good game in the nets for the winners to earn the shutout. There were three penalties in the game.

Two major league basketball games were played in Hart House. Dents B whipped Emmanual A 49-26 due the sensational playing of Caffa who hooped 23 points. The dentists put on their power drive in the second period when they outscored the Emmanuals 22-8. Bajczak was the second best for the winners as he dropped in eight.

Pre-Meds shaded UC 36-31 in the tightest game of the day. The game was tied at the end of the first period then the Docs took a two points lead. They added three more to their lead in the final to clinch the game. Dagleish with eight and Tile with seven paced the winners but the best man on the floor was Miller of UC who scored twelve points in a losing effort.

Bazos, Husband Tie Senior Fifty

The Interfaculty track meets got under way yesterday as three of the events were run off. The plan is to run two distances each week until the season is finished. Bob Bazos and Frank Husband ended up in a dead heat in the best race of the night. They ran the fifty yards in the good time of 5.65.

Jack Wall of Dents ran the junior fifty in 5.7. The other event saw Eric Kofmel take the win for Skule in 1 minute, 18.2 seconds. Few of the entries looked to be in good condition and except in the Senior fifty the times showed this.

The point scoring is a 5, 3, 2, 1 system for purposes of determining the champs at the end of the indoor track season. These points will also count in the Reed Trophy race. Due to the efforts of Kofmel, Husband and Yeigh, the Engineers are now leading the other faculties. The complete results follow.

50 yard junior: 1st, Jack Wall, Dents, 5.7. 2nd, Bill Davis, St. Mike's, 5.8. 3rd, M. Harris, UC, 5.9. 4th, Walt Pitman, Trinity, 6.0.

50 yard senior: 1st, Bob Bazos, Trinity; Frank Husband, SPS, 5.65 (tie). 3rd, Larry Yeigh, SPS, 5.7. 4th, Eric Kofmel, SPS, 5.7.

600 yard senior: 1st, Eric Kofmel, SPS, one minute, 18.2. 2nd, Jack Warga, OCE, 1:18.7. 3rd, Charlie Wartman, Vic, 1:18.8. 4th, Jim Bassingwaite, Meds, 11:19.5.

Next Monday night the hundred yards and the eight-eighty will be run off. These are not standard indoor distances but they are being run off because there is plenty of time available.

Trin., Meds Win At Water Polo

In the first of two water polo tilts Saturday night, the Trinity College team splashed out an 11-1 triumph over the school-of-law team. Al Roger with seven was the big gun. Tobias with two, Fraser and Whitehead with singletons were the other Buttery scorers.

In the second game, Meds and Vic put on a fine display of water polo. Vic started the game with two quick goals. Then the doctors scored eight in a row. With less than two minutes left, the Victor's efforts resulted in a third goal to make the final score Meds 8, Vic 3. Norm Mortimer, Bernie Langer, Barry Tobe and Dave Smith each scored twice for the winners. Roy Wilson played well in Vic's goal during the first half but his fine efforts were offset by a weak defence.

Ski Club Trips Start on Sunday

The Varsity Ski Club will make the first of their weekend trips this Sunday. They are heading for their own property at Newmarket. The busses will leave the University from Hart House on Sunday morning.

Anyone wishing to make the trip must first join the club. The membership costs only twenty-five cents and entitles the buyer to make all the trips this season. Skiers must pay the bus fare of one dollar by Friday if they wish to go along this weekend.

Prelims Tomorrow In Interfac Boxing

The boxing gym was the scene of feverish preparation for the Senior Intramural Boxing Tournament, since this is an all-important event for all the boxers of the University. This is the last boxing event of the year except for the Intercollegiate Tournament, and only the senior champions gain the right to challenge the potential members of the Intercollegiate team for a position on the squad.

The weigh-ins for the Senior Tournament are held today from 12 to 2 and from 4 to 5.30, and the preliminary bouts commence tomorrow. Yesterday was the last chance the boys had for a stiff workout. An all-out sparring session took place and from the display put up by Russ Reilly, St. Mike's, and Larry Wade SPS, some good bouts are to be expected in the 135 and 165 pound class. Some very classy boxing was displayed in the light class. The only category where there seems to be a shortage of competitors is the heavyweight class.

The finals in all the weight classes will be one of the attractions featured at Saturday's Athletic Night. Some first rate exhibition bouts may help to round out the program.

on the sideline

Volleyball is rampant again. Twelve teams are practicing like mad at O.C.E. gym this week in preparation for the intramurals which start next Monday or Tuesday. All eyes are on the PHE squad, winner by tradition for countless years. Three of its stars from last year are back in the ranks, and each fall brings Physeds a new constellation. However St. Hilda's caused a near upset last year when they put up a struggle that had the PHE gals worried up to the final horn. This has proved to be a year of reverses as far as intramural championships go and volleyball may be no exception. Time will tell.

On the Intercollegiate front, v-ball is hardly out of its swaddling clothes. The first meet was held last year in Toronto, where McMaster spiked for top place. The Varsity crew ran a close second. Five of the girls from last year's team are back again, and the experience that Nancy Allen, Trinity, Nina Lancaster, PHE and last year's team manager, Barb Watts, Trinity, Ira Karila, PHE, and Joan Crean, PHE, can give, will be a major factor in Varsity's success come spring.

MAN OF THE YEAR

Time, the weekly newsmagazine, has selected Dr. Mohammed Mossadegh, Premier of Iran, as the single individual in 1951, who more than any other, influenced the events of the past twelve months. The choice was, we would humbly submit, a correct one. But to our way of thinking there was another person who, by his actions and the fact that he was able to get away with them should be heralded as symbolizing a decided trend of thinking in a much more personal sphere than the realm of world politics.

We have in mind Mr. Wilbanks Smith, defensive tackle of the Oklahoma A. and M. football team. Mr. Smith, certainly, is symbolic of what seems to have become accepted practice in athletics and other endevors: rule infractions are allright if you can get away with them.

Perhaps you have never heard of Wilbanks Smith. We defend his relative obscurity by repeating once again that he is a symbol of a major 1951 trend — a symbol only — and that is why he receives our nomination You see, Wilbanks Smith is the man who broke Drake University halfback Johnny Bright's jaw by three calculated, deliberate attacks of sheer assault and battery with intent to do bodily harm, on the gridiron last fall.

A series of high speed photographs, given widespread circulation by the press of the United States and this country, so graphically reveal Smith's misdemeanor as to leave little doubt as to his real purpose on the field, when he should have been playing football. The pictures show the play going off in the opposite direction, with Drake completely removed and standing off to one side. Instead of trying to catch the ball carrier, as a defender should, Smith attacked Bright, smashing his fist in Bright's face. Smith did this twice more during the early stages of the game, before Bright was carried off the field to have his jaw wired for six weeks.

The Drake athletic board called for Smith's expulsion, but the league officials did nothing, claiming they had no authority. Smith's university, the body who in the first instance should have taken action, also refrained from doing anything. This was virtually on condonation of his type of playing.

Wilbanks Smith, therefore, represents with success that trend of thinking which suggests that it is allright to break rules as long as you can get away with it. He (or his coach) has proven that you can get away with it. In a particularly bitter football season, which saw so many aces sidelined by ganging attacks, Smith was found publicly guilty and yet was exonerated, an inspiration to those who will came after him.

Peter Karpuk, of the Dominion champion Ottawa Roughriders, who jumped from the bench to tackle Toronto Argonaut's Ulysses Curtis when the latter was in the clear and on his way to a touchdown, is in the same league with Smith. Karpuk, however, falls short of Smith's mark, because the public rose in indignation at his flouting of the rules and the league introduced measures to cope with a similar infraction, should it ever occur again.

In the basketball world we have the numerous bribe scandals which came to light early last year. In these cases outstanding college hoop stars sold their talents and their integrity for cold cash. The type of thinking which came to the fore in Wilbanks Smith's actions, was prevalent much earlier to lead these young men from the paths of honesty and good sportsmanship. But they did not get away with it.

At West Point last summer ninety cadets were expelled for violating that institution's highly reputed honor code, bringing to light in the most shocking terms a situation which has existed there for many years. And the headlines of the past twelve to eighteen months ran rampant with report after report on dope consumption among high school students below the border.

But the young people were not alone in their iniquities, which Wilbanks Smith exemplifies. They had but to look at the highest offices in the administration of their country's business to find examples of "it's okay to violate the rules if you can get away with it." As Congressional committees investigated more and more influence-peddling, more and more corruption in high circles was unearthed. With the same lack of conscience trusted officials right across the country were betraying their sacred trusts.

Wilbanks Smith did get away with it. To those people who think the same way as he and the other rule infringers here mentioned, he must certainly rank as their Man of the Year.

Dorothy Maynor "Vertical Singer" Above Criticism

Dorothy Maynor is one of those rare musicians whose artistry transcends criticism, because, although it may fall short of perfection, it is so aesthetically satisfying that we are at a loss to see where it does fall short.

Miss Maynor's performance Saturday night in Eaton Auditorium showed that she possesses all the qualities a singer requires to hold an audience spellbound—flawless technique, musical sensitivity, dramatic poise. From the moment she stepped on stage her control of the audience mood was as complete as her control of voice.

She is what Eugene Kash calls "a vertical singer" as compared with 'a horizontal singer". That is, mentally she sings the whole score of a song and not just the top line labelled "Voice". Even when there is an interlude for accompaniment she continues to sing with her eyes, her hands, her whole body. I thought it notable that when announcing an encore she would say "We should like to do . . ." evidence that she considers the accompaniment not just a background for the voice, but an integral part of the composition.

Another of her most outstanding merits is variety in tone colour. In her opening number, a German sacred song by Franck-Dorumsgaard, "Sing Praise to God", the tone was rich and broad like that of a pipe-organ. In Haydn's "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair", it was slender and lyrical. In the group of six songs by Grieg, inspired by the Norwegian northland, it varied from the dark shadow quality of a forest by moonlight to the crystalline quality of a sunlit brook. In short, her impeccable voice control enables her to create whatever kind of tone the mood of a song calls for.

Her programme was well balanced, and calculated to please a wide range of musical taste, although lovers of German lieder may have felt that this form was not sufficiently represented. Miss Maynor apparently has a passion for Grieg, which she made no attempt to hide in arranging her programme. The programme notes explained apologetically that this was due to a recent concert tour through Norway.

Among the modern numbers were included two by the Canadian composer Oscar Morawetz. The audience applauded wildly both singer and composer when the latter went on stage to shake hands with Miss Maynor who had done more than justice to his songs "At Walking" and "I Love the Jocund Dance".

One need only listen to Dorothy Maynor to know that "Voce, Voce, e Voce" is an outmoded formula for good singing.

Mid-day Music Again

Hart House mid-day recitals begin again Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. in the East Common Room. Norman Lowes, pianist, will give a program consisting of the first movement of Bach's Italian Concerto in D minor, and works by Scriabine, Chopin, Debussy and Brahms.

Norman Lowes is a third year student in Modern History at Victoria College. He studied piano in Peterborough with Agnes Logan Green, and in Toronto with Gordon Hallet. He has the degree of ATCM, and has given a series of recitals over radio station CHEX in Peterborough.

The Opposition?

Campus Monster

In the hundred odd years of its active existence, this University has seen many monster fiascos rise, leer and slink quietly away.

One of the leeringest ever to rise is this year's Mock Parliament. First, the Independent Member fiasco. Then, when the House sat, the complete schemozzle of the procedure. Then, after the first session had been held, the question of who was eligible to have a seat in the Mock Parliament.

We cannot help wondering if the organizers of the Mock Parliament are fully aware of what they are doing.

On the Independent Member question, the members of the Mock Parliament took a garbled stand. First, ballots marked "Independent" were counted as spoiled. There followed a change of heart as the Political Science Club, sponsor of the Mock Parliament, realized that organizing an Independent Party would be a very difficult feat.

A minor bill was introduced by the Government, allowing for the admittance of two Independents to this session. The bill was defeated. Amendments were passed, however, allowing for their inclusion next year. That question was neatly tied up, for the future at least, but only after a few cubic kilometers of confusion.

The second Mock Parliament fiasco concerned procedure. It was understood (vaguely and by some) that the rules of the University of Toronto Debating Union would apply to the Mock Parliament. But there was an important, if unnoticed, gap in those rules. They neglected to deal with the procedure of Division.

When the bell clanged for Division, members of one Party were caught with their suspenders loose. No members could leave their seats during Division. After the ayes had been recorded, and while the noes were being counted, the Speaker noticed that some members of the opposition parties were abstaining. He told them they could not do so. They were forced to vote against a motion which they actually supported, but from which, for some private reason, they wished to abstain.

Again, three of the four parties did not have whips on hand. The one which did, used its whips to scrounge from the Visitors' Gallery enough members for a Division. One of the members thus acquired was told what name to give if anyone asked him.

This offence was a result of the third fiasco — that of membership. Only one Political club had enough members to fill its seats. The others filled them with undergraduate supporters who were not club members and with recent graduates.

A ruling of the old Mock Parliament constitution apparently stated that no one shall have a seat in the Mock Parliament who does not pay fees to the Students' Administrative Council. This rules out Occasional and Graduate students. This year, however, there was a general understanding that "recent graduates" would be allowed seats, as long as the privilege was not abused.

It is regrettable that the political clubs cannot arouse enough interest on this campus to fill their quota of seats. It would be even more regrettable to see privileges granted to this University abused by outside political interests — a fear that might quickly be realized if the Political Science Club does not make some definition of Mock Parliament membership before the next session.

It would be well if the sponsors of the Mock Parliament would compose a constitution stating definitely the terms of membership and the procedure to be followed; then make it readily available to all political clubs on the campus.

And surely, by an individual approach, it would be possible for the political clubs to dig up the additional ten or so members required to fill their seats. Otherwise, the University Mock Parliament is bound to join the ranks of the farcical campus monsters which have just leered and slunk away.

Tea with T.S.

Between shifts at the Dockland Settlement with the Cockneys in East-End London, the writer, William Glenesk, III Emmanuel, managed an afternoon with T. S. Eliot. The first of two articles.

By WILLIAM GLENESK

"The modern audience has a greater capacity for accepting plays below its level of appreciation than plays above its taste." So mused poet T. S. Eliot almost buried in books in his musty cubicle at 24 Russell Square. It was a dull London afternoon in August, 1951, when I sat deep in an old armchair beside the poet's desk.

My coming to see Mr. Eliot was not by chance. Just prior to leaving for Brittany for a fortnight's camp with sixteen Cockney teen-agers from the Dockland Settlement, I wrote to the poet, asking him three questions on Murder in the Cathedral, on the function of criticism, and on The Hollow Men. It was a shot in the dark. But back in London by August, a card was waiting from Faber and Faber, which read: "Will you kindly telephone me at your convenience, so that we may arrange a time for you to come and see Mr. Eliot. Yours truly, Valerie Fletcher, Secretary to Mr. Eliot."

The time was set for August 20th, Monday afternoon at 3. But I was using a 1950 calendar, and scribbled the date for Tuesday the 21st. Discovery came on the tube enroute to 24 Russell Square exactly one day late. At the door of the Victorian mansion Mr. Eliot's secretary raised both brows, looked somewhat fulstered, said: "Your appointment was for yesterday, but I'll ask Mr. Eliot if he will see you now." Word came from above that he would, and I was ushered up a winding stair to a closed door at the end of the hall, and abandoned. I knocked. A deep voice like a cello said "Come in", and I opened the door to T. S. Eliot, bent over a tier of books, wise in his horn-rimmed spectacles as he slowly got up to hold out a welcoming hand, breaking a knowing smile. "So glad you were able to come," he said. "I suppose you got lost on the tube somewhere yesterday." In rather a hollow laugh I explained what happened, and his eye twinkled. I think like Socrates at a waif blown in from the street.

"I can't remember all of your letter," he said, "but wasn't it about Murder in the Cathedral?" Eliot had waved me into that subterranean chair, and then asked: "What are your questions?" The time was chiming three, and I asked him about the role of Thomas the Archbishop, its development and interpretation: "Just what is the essence of Thomas a Becket in the play?" Eliot spoke first of the initial performance of Robert Speight. "He was much too pious and holy from beginning to end." That was the major flaw in his portrayal of the part. Becket was a man of affairs when the play opens, consumed with power and ambition. Then he evolves, undergoes the refiner's fire, purifies his motives, realizing "that is the greatest treason, to do the right deed for the wrong reason." Reaching the pith at martyrdom, Thomas meets his nemesis at the hands of four knights. Eliot sees Becket as awakening to the vision of new power, himself as the instrument, and not the focus. This power becomes a force through him as a means from Rome. Thus Thomas verges to humility.

Mr. Eliot sees his play as much more than a historical drama, as a modern version in medieval morality form. It speaks to us. The sermon, direct to the audience, takes them unaware, their resistance down, and lifts them into the relevance of the play. Eliot has used a medieval form to preach a modern meeting. "This has something to do with you of the 20th Century as well," he said. Murder in the Cathedral had just been filmed, with Father St. John B. Groser as Becket, and T. S. Eliot in the role of the Fourth Tempter. "The English always play to the crowd in the theatre," the poet remarked in reference to the play. "Much more than American?" I asked. "For the most part, yes," he said. The dialogue went on ad infinitum, and thence to the question of criticism. That comes in the next instalment.

Of The Fence Other Side

Time: Midnight.
Scene: A barren limb . . . tree overlooking frosty campus.
Players: Two typical average college cats.

Tom Cat (with flourish): Meow there, my fine four footed friend!

Catski (ordinary): Oh Tom, I hardly recognized you without your bloop.

T.C.: Well sir, the bloop is a thing of the past; last year, you know. Had a "bloop for Britain", gave it in. Sure hated to part with it, tradition you know. Seems like they're always having troubles on the other side of the world.

Catski: I know just what you mean, T.C. Why just tonight some hepcat asked me to donate to a fund called CHAT . . . cat's help to Asian tigers. I told him I'm too busy to finance a Korean Kat peace, but if he wants to start a fund for exchange cats, say those sexy Persians, well that's different!

T. C.: Well spoke Catski, but never can much for those dark cats. Bad luck if they cross your borders you know, or if it the other way around?

Catski: I'm not sure, but I know how you feel, every cat has his own side of the fence.

T. C.: Yes sir, just last week, sitting on the fence talking on the progress of our catdom. Damn fools on the other side thought I was talking to them.

But come, sir, our minds oppressed with abundant charity, rather let us be off to those catacombs of catalogue cataclysm the K.C.R.

Catski: The suggestion does you honour, sir.

Exeunt.

Movie Mores

Editor, The Varsity:

Among the many inexplicable eccentricities of the moving picture industry is its habit of raising the price of admission to any movie which is deemed to be of extraordinary interest. "The River", currently showing at the Towne Cinema, is an example of this uplifting custom; "An American in Paris" and "Tales of Huffman" are others.

The Philosophy behind this expensive habit is interesting. Movie makers presume that their ordinary efforts are worth the ordinary price of admission. That this is a preposterous presumption is immediately obvious to anyone who has had the ill-luck and the bad taste to be a regular movie-goer in the past years. Blissfully ignorant of the ugly truth, however, movie producers reason that if we will pay sixty cents to see scenes stolen from Hopalong Cassidy by a horse, then the sultry whining of Hedy Lammar as Delilah should be worth ninety cents.

I have a better scheme, which I hereby submit to you for forwarding to the proper authorities.

Since, through ignorance or boredom or in search of a quiet place to [illegible] hands, we are subjected to so many hours of unpalatable bilge at movie theatres, we should be rewarded, rather than fined, for our persistance. At the exit from the theatre after a stinker of a movie, we should receive a coupon bearing one of the following inscriptions (which one would depend on the merit of the picture):

1. Very Poor
2. I Should Say.
3. Ye Gods.
4. Recommended by The Varsity

These coupons would be redeemable at a good film came to town. A person who sat through a "Very Poor" picture would be entitled to a ten cent discount on a good one. An "I Should Say" coupon would be worth fifteen cents, and a "Ye Gods" would be worth twenty cents.

Of course there are so many bad movies, and so few good ones, that there would be an excess of coupons and they would have to be destroyed. But there would always be plenty more.

Thrice Rah For Old Trinity! One Century Old This Year

The casual atmosphere of Trinity College is displayed by the gowned figures lounging in its imposing doorway, John Mott and Barry Rutland. Of the educational atmosphere, Provost Seeley says in his book, The Function of the University, that outsiders are often invited to discussion groups with the students. Woe betide any outsider who tries to talk down, he says, and concludes that often the guests learn more than the students.

...oke-fights, bottle-rolls and ...ther Episkopon all have an in...putable place in the Trinity tra...ion. Without them, a good deal ...color and joie de vivre would be ...ing to this campus. But there is ...o the serious side of the Trinity ...dition.

After two years and a trip to ...ngland, the Bishop had raised ...ough money to found in 1852 ...at he called contradictorily "The ...iversity of Trinity College". The ...ilding was erected on Queen ...reet West, which was a century ...go, practically in the country. St. ...mon and St. Jude, rarely evoked ...day, were appointed as patron ...ints.

An Anglican College, Trinity ...de a special point of teaching ...eligious Knowledge, an unbiased ...position of the Christian faith. ...ecause the administrators believe ...s is an essential part of education ...eligious Knowledge is still a com...ulsory subject on the Trinity cur...iculum, a subject so stimulating to ...dents that it is argued at tea, ...nner, and over coffee.

Originally, Trinity was an all-...ale College, with all students liv...g in residence. Contact between ...idents and professors was close, ...s were relations among the stu...nts themselves. But a College does not live by ...an alone, and St. Hilda's College ...r women was founded in 1888, ...der Provost Body. It was on the ...een Street site, in a building ...rtich is now a home for the aged.

...rnerstone

The official ceremony for the lay...g of the cornerstone of the present ...t. Hilda's building came as a dull ...al-climax after students took things into their own hands at midnight the preceding night.

Bona fide invitations were sent out and a crowd collected. The cornerstone was laid imposingly by an "archbishop", lesser, candle-bearing clergymen attended. Sermons were delivered and prayers intoned by students masquerading under the names of "Holy Joe" and "Mighty Moses" (Provost Cosgrave and Mrs. Kirkwood). Fireworks provided a fitting conclusion.

After a prolonged battle, Trinity finally amalgamated with the University of Toronto in 1903. With science and medicine advancing in giant strides, it was found more practical for the small college to abandon its attempts to cope with them, and devote itself to the arts subjects. It was also hoped that the ensuing competition with other colleges might bring out the best and the most distinctive in Trinity.

Amalgamation was achieved under the leadership of Provost Macklem, an individual in his own right, who endeared himself to his students by banning beer in the Buttery, demanding higher academic standards, outlawing ragged gowns and abolishing hazing.

Trinity students, apparently not viewing the streetcar ride between Queen Street and Queen's Park as a privilege, moved up to the new building on Hoskin Avenue in 1926. The new college was designed deliberately in imitation of the original Queen Street building. Students moved in a body into the apartment building at St. George and Harbord Streets, Known then as Trinity House, and remained there until the completion of the new residence wing in 1941.

It is this serious side of the Trinity tradition that keeps excellent professors at the college at a financial disadvantage.

She is criticized for preserving some meaningless and impractical traditions. But she carefully preserves many of the better features of the English University system, and maintains an unexcelled academic freedom.

Union Station Opening Among Pranks of Past

In garb varying from pajamas, dressing gowns and straw hats to formal attire, Trinity students in 1929 took into their own hands the opening of the new Union Station.

The ceremony, sponsored by fifty members of the Athletic Association, began at 1:00 a.m. Despite hopes that police would appear to enliven the proceedings, the law enforcers never did show up.

If they had, the probable charge would have been impersonation of a civic official. One students introduced himself as Mayor Foster, and declared the Union Station open. However, the doors remained closed.

A second masqueraded as the Prime Minister, and complimented the populace for its patience during the long wait for the opening of the Station. A third called himself Mr. Meighen, and announced his pleasure at taking part in the ceremonies. Still the police did not appear, nor did the doors open.

Subsequent students impersonated Mr. Beatty and Sir Henry Thornton, and spoke eloquently in the conventional ceremonial style, expressing congratulations for past work, and hopes for the future.

Bedecked in mortarboard, one student, on behalf of the assembled citizenry, declared the new station "well and truly opened". His conclusion, that neither he nor his children ever expected to see trains actually running in and out of the building, indicates that the popular attitude toward the Station in 1929 resembles that today toward Canada's First Subway.

The mock ceremony concluded solemnly with the singing of the Doxology and several College songs.

Trinity Wonderland

Mad Hatter Memoirs

Along the top of the pillars in the Trinity corridors live a variety of old friends—there's the wild boar, a mad hatter, Harvey, a borogrove, the cock that thrice crew, a slim lizard, robin redbreast and many others. They say nothing as they move within their carved scenes, but if you stop to speak with them, they give you quite an impression of Trinity.

The wild boar says he feels quite at home within the pseudo-gothic walls where gentlemen still sip port after dinner, the sporting of the oak remains an inviolate tradition, and mead (or our modern equivalent) is hallow in the student's sanctity.

Harvey hangs out under the Buttery pool table in his leisure moments, giggling when he slams the door on the tail of Provost Seeley's gown, and twittering his ears at the shocked expression on Bishop Strachan's ghostly face.

The mad hatter and the borogrove do their best to maintain traditional propriety by serving crumpets, honey and tea with roast chestnuts and stewed crocus bulbs on special occasions, but being delightfully made, they cannot revisit the occasional cake-fight or bottle-roll for added excitement.

The cock that thrice crew tries in loud tones to impose all the ponderous ritual of the Anglican prayer book upon his neighbours, but the armadillo who is a firm advocate of Plato and the slim lizard, who just couldn't care less, pay no heed to him.

The lizzard wandered into Trinity some twenty years ago, quite imbued with the gaety of the days when sheiks and flappers tripped the light Charleston. His influence hasn't been felt too much, but in the predominence of cigarette holders (red in particular) and leather patches on tweed sleeves can be seen a trace of the gay twenties' conception of a colleger.

These characters describe T[rinity] college atmosphere as charm[ing] as Lewis Carrol in places, [mod]erspersed with Anglican canons, [and] with just a dash of Damon Run[yon] and merry old Sherwood Fore[st] tossed in.

To hear them talk, one would think that the students had no effect on the college at all. They claim that Trinity atmosphere is [a] thing which never changes, [but] which is handed down, gener[ation] by generation, and kept alive by [the] carvings on the wall.

There are a few other stuffed shirts of characters who sit around influencing students too. They [are] in a glass case in the lower hall preening their feathers as others pass and commenting how superior their raiment is. Occasionally their noses are put out of joint and they may be found parked on such at the bottom case.

Year-Long Celebration For Trinity Centennial

A centenary is always cause for speeches, dinners, concerts and a general celebration.

Trinity College is now 100 years old and this month of January marks the beginning of various events that will continue throughout the year at the College to commemorate its birthday.

The celebration began Sunday January 13, with a Service of Thanksgiving at St. James' Cathedral that was broadcast over radio station CJBC.

Founder's Day was yesterday, January 15, and the students had their Centenary Dinner with a Founder's Day Tea to follow Saturday, January 19 at 4:00 p.m.

Friday, January 25 is the time of the Centenary Conversazione to be held in Strachan Hall beginning at 9:00 p.m. Tickets for the dance are also available to the graduates and alumni.

The Centenary Concert on Saturday, January 26, will be held at Strachan Hall at 8:30 p.m.

The Trinity College Literary Institute will close the month on Thursday, January 31, with a Centenary Debate.

Highlighting the month of February will be the Trinity College Dramatic Society's presentation of "Tartuffe" in Hart House Theatre from February 5th to the 9th.

March will also see the presentation of a play in Hart House Theatre; 'Saints Alive", under the direction of Keith MacMillan.

Four lectures by University of Toronto professors will come at various times in February and March. Also in February is a lecture by the Vice-President of the National Research Council, in charge of Atomic Energy Project at Chalk River. In March the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, P.C., C.H., will give a Centenary Lecture in Convocation Hall.

Dates will be announced in The Varsity.

Trinity Sophs Dutifully Eject Rowdy Diners

Once again Tradition raises [its] head at Trinity.

It is the traditional duty of second year men to throw out from Strachan Hall, the dining room, any persons guilty of ill manners or rowdyism.

Some of the most popular crimes for which offenders may be tossed out are throwing food, water or paper napkins soaked in water, spinning plates, and appearing without either gown or tie.

It is believed that some individuals frequently act up purposely just for the distinction of having been thrown out of Strachan Hall.

Rumors

In a conscientious attempt to present only the truth, The Varsity hereby declares:

It is not true

—that all Trinity students must subscribe to the Thirty-Nine Articles

—that 90% of Trinity men smoke pipes (85% do)

—that crumpets and tea are served in the Buttery

—that Trinity students sleep in their gowns

Trinity Adds To Tradition Yew Arrives

A budding tradition stands outside in the cold and the snow of Trinity Quadrangle. It is a spindly example of a tree, comparable in size and shape to the saplings planted along the University Avenue boulevard.

But it is a tree with a story. Its genealogy goes something like this: it is a branch from a branch of a yew tree that comes from Stratford-on-Avon. Its peditree goes back to Shakespeare.

Planted last spring, the young yew learned early to face hardship. Shortly after it was planted, a minor drought ensued, and Trinity students feared its early death. But a co-operative effort involving water buckets and showering cans saved its life.

A great man once said: "Not only by preserving old traditions, but by creating new ones as well, does an institution show its strength."

Today the yew trees stands within a comfortable fence, bowing brittlely to the wind. From appearances, it does not have much life left. Only the springtime will tell.

Crumpets And Tea

The old Trinity yell proves that Trinity is eternally the same, never afraid to ridicule itself:

We are the salt of the earth,
So give ear to us.
No new ideas
Shall ever come near to us.
Orthodox, Catholic,
Crammed with divinity,
Damn the dissenters,
Hurrah for Old Trinity.

Fatherly Ghost's Yearly Message

A very ancient being, a sort of guardian angel of the Trinity student body, has lived up in the lantern tower of the College since 1925, with only a skull for company.

His name is Father Episkopon, and once a year he descends with a message for his Scribe. This message the Scribe relays to the men of the College at a closed meeting in a subterranean dining room, by the wavering light of a solitary candle. A skull sits at his feet.

Father Episkopon concerns himself with manners, morals and misdemeanors in Trinity. His Scribe chastises men of the College verbally for their errors and idiosyncrasies. Recently, tradition has been violated by the inclusion of praise in the Scribe's message.

Father Episkopon flourished more healthily in the old dyas of the Queen St. Trinity College. Originally, his message was presented in the form of a weekly paper, but this was short-lived. Then the tradition of a weekly meeting grew up, and attendance of all members (about 25 in 1858) was compulsory. Reluctants were forcibly dragged to the readings.

Here are some random samples of the great Father's utterances:

"The Father advises a skittish Freshman of his acquaintance to forget his boyish ways, grow sideburns if he can (hoots of laughter), and join in the customary beer at dinner table. The delicate features of pale wights such as he have caused doting mothers and stern papas to complain about undergraduate indulgence, have reduced our quota at dinner to only two glasses. Drink up, man! . . . If I advise one of your number to grow sideburns, I advise another to remove his moustache. Cynosure though it is of fair ladies' eyes, it has caused one inexperienced lass to giggle uncontrollably in a certain dark alcove during the Conservatzione."

". . . The venerable Father hopes that during the coming season the worthy captain of cricket will see to it that certain quadrupeds of the genus Bos owned by our College are restrained from cropping grass on the cricket pitch — something they did last year with devastating results. He recommends a sign: 'Cows may not trespass or otherwise leave evidence of their presence upon this field.'

". . . Why the Rev. Mr. P. should think he is the Pope while intoning grace at table is inexplicable. He is, after all, a noted Orangeman."

So the Father continues, illustrating his motto, "Notandi sunt tibi mores." (Free translation: "Uncle Sam it watching You.")

Thus Trinity men learned, in the impressive presence of candle, skull and gowned scribe, the difficult art of taking ridicule without flinching. Perhaps that is why old Trinity produced so many good orators.

Trinity Bids Adieu To Old Cake Fight Murderball Milder

Every University has its unique initiation customs but Trinity College cake fights, for their orignality and high interest quota, are in a class of their own.

The average University student, when thinking of a cake fight, usually thinks of somebody being smeared from head to toe with a sticky concoction of cake, icing sugar, and other satellites used in initiation stunts.

However, the Trinity cake fights originated while the Trinity College residences were located in the basement building at the corner of Hoskin and St. George Sts. At that time, first year women baked a cake for first year men. Then came the perilous task of getting the cake from the fifth to the seventh floor of the building past the sophomores, who had their rooms on the floors immediately below those of the frosh.

When the residences were moved to the main part of Trinity College, the cake fight took place in front of the archway through the east wall of the college. Two years ago, in an attempt to make sure the frosh drove back the sophs, the quadrangle, the sophomores exploded a home made smoke-bomb with fantastic effects. It not only stopped the frosh, but drove bacg the sophs, created general havoc, and raised an unearthly holocaust, but also burned a freshman orange and hospitalized him for several days.

Since the orangeman episode, cake fights have been taboo at Trinity. They have been replaced by a game known as Murderball. A mild game, in comparison.

Only once in Trinity's history have the frosh succeeded in getting the cake past the sophs. That time, a particularly lightweight freshman was picked up bodily and thrown over the heads of the sophs.

Celebrated By Blazes

Already renowned in Trinity annals as the year of The Great Bottle-Roll, 1914 gained further notoriety as the year of The Great Bonfire.

In the atmosphere of a primitive witch dance, students from Trinity and St. Hilda's joined hands and danced round the eighty-foot blaze, shouting and singing.

The occasion was the celebration (or consolation) of a forthcoming final debate with Wycliffe.

Preparations for the fire were extensive. Ammunition included planks, logs, pilfered tar by the barrel, trimmings from trees in the park, boards from the hockey rink, lecture - room chairs, gardeners' tools a cellar door, and the cellar stairs in toto.

A general fire alarm was sent in by a terrified policeman. Citizens and fire trucks gathered. As students perceived that fire hoses were being connected, and aimed in the direction of the students instead of the fire, they quietly disappeared.

The remaining crowd took a thorough ducking from the fire hoses.

The Icing's Nice

The smoke and debris of the above scene mark the action of a Trinity cake-fight, until '49 a hallowed tradition. In these classic battles the freshmen strove to carry one of several small cakes through the archway into the Quad against the opposition of the Sophs, armed with eggs, water, smoke-bombs and refuse. Then a chemical bomb temporarily tinted a senior orange, and tradition bowed gracefully out.

Trinity Type Suave and Weird

By TOM LANE

Trinity is full of atmosphere. It has its Gothic arches, heavy doors, secluded corners. It has Strachan Hall and academic gowns, stuffed birds and cakefights. In short, it fairly breathes atmosphere.

And for the past hundred years, Trinity students have been trying to build a character which can live up to this atmosphere.

The resulting combinations have been weird and wonderful. Tweed sports jackets and Tyrolean hats mingle with grey flannels and furled umbrellas. Even the occasional bowler is in evidence. And there are more phony English accents at Trinity than pseudo-intellectuals on the rest of the campus.

Only a few people each year succeed in achieving some kind of character commensurate with the college. However, out of all the attempts come some common factors which make up what might be called the TRINITY CHARACTER.

First of all, the true Trinityite tries to be as English as possible. This has something to do with his ties with the Church of England, and family histories going back to the Wars of the Roses or the Empire Builders. At any rate, he tries to follow the Oxford and Cambridge tradition, as glorified in Chums and the Boy's Own Annual. The only things missing are a long college muffler and a river by which he can muse.

For some reason the college seems to have hit on the English diplomat as the class it most wants to copy. As a result, Trinity types are almost uniformly suave and polished. Quite often they are good speakers (Trinity debates are among the best on the campus.) But too often they tend to be too Anthony Edenish, and succeed only in looking foolish or pompous.

They like to be Breath-of-the-Empire, and to cry out about the thin red line and the dignity of majesty. Also they stick to the Old School Tie, never forgetting they went to TCS, or Upper Canada, or even UTS. These collegiate ties are very binding at Trinity, where an occasional tear can still be seen glistening whenever the old school is mentioned. Trinityites also like to wear their fraternity ties; these have the advantage over the old school type in that they can look particularly dapper worn as bows.

But Trinity types look not only to their own past, but also to that of their college. Tradition plays an important part in every day life. A radical who goes to dinner without his gown is apt to be booed out of the dining hall. Snatches of patriotic Greek are tossed about (these have the added advantage of confounding any outsider). The Worms' initiation is carried out faithfully every year—although the Cakefight has been missing recently. And (except when there are spare false faces around), reverence surrounds the College's founders.

Like all good Englishmen, they like their pipes, and there are all kinds represented in the Trinity halls. Long ones and stubby ones, straight bowls and curved ones, briars and Sherlock Holmes. Even ornate, carved ones, glistening with ivory and silver caps. No matter what kind it is, the pipe is the symbol of a Trinity man.

They also like their beer. Trinity is the only place in the University where you can keep alcohol. Beer and whiskey are always passing through the hall porter's lodge. And Trinity men just love to ask other, less fortunate types, to come up to their rooms for a quick brew. These invitations are among the best part of the Trinity Character.

As a matter of fact, they are the best part of the Trinity character.

There is no question about it.

Hic.

Damn The Dissenters! New Trinity Like Old

The Trinity obsession with orthodoxy is apparent in its buildings. Anyone walking along Queen Street, a few blocks west of Bathurst, for the first time would think that he was looking at a run-down Trinity College that had been transplanted from Hoskin Ave.

The old building has been standing in Strachan Park since 1852, and looks it. The oak trees are still there, and some of the stained-glass windows have survived almost a hundred summer storms and winter snowballings. But the surroundings are different.

The Second World War has left the greatest mark on old Trinity. On the west side of Strachan Park is a group of wartime frame houses with muddy backyards and kids. Long underwear sways in the wind where at one time only academic gowns strayed.

The building itself is now operated by the Kiwanis as the Trinity boys and girls clubs.

However, it would be a difficult problem to decide who have marked the building the most . . . the boys, and girls or the Trinity undergrads.

On the west wall some bright little boy has written obscene words with flat white paint, but fortunately for him the Students' administrative council never heard about this in time to start an investigation.

Between 1910 and 1925, when the building was abandoned, the men of Trinity tried to outdo one another in carving or painting their year signs in prominent places where the college authorities could not remove them.

The first letters to appear was a '13 sign placed by the freshman class of 1910 under a prominent tower. One sign was painted over the central window in the Convocation Hall by an enterprising student, who lashed two long ladders together and mounting this on top of a livery wagon which was brought into the hall to add the necessary height. The ladders bent in the middle, but the painter managed to climb high enough to leave his sign on the brickwork over the window. By 1925 the authorities were so resigned to such goings-on that they failed to stop a group who painted their class number under the central tower in a place where it could be seen from Queen Street by anyone who looked up the front drive through the stone gate.

The early students must have really wanted a university education. There was no central heating, each room had a little fire with a chimney which either blew the smoke back into the room or else created a draught. Gas jets were not added to lighten the halls until almost 1888. Until then every trip down the dark halls was like Stanley going after Livingstone and hoping he wouldn't run into Victoria Falls.

At this time every undergrad had to be in the college building before ten on week days, and twice weekly were allowed to stay out until noon. The student not only couldn't miss chapel and meals, but also had to attend lectures. And as a further restriction to their wanderings, they were forbidden to visit some of the taverns. Any Trinity man who got 'plastered' had to do it in the better palaces. Of course the average student was only 16 years old when he entered Trinity.

At present the district around old Trinity has by no means an English atmosphere. Around the corner from the college, on Dundas St., the barbershops advertise in foreign languages and there is a translation office for the eastern European languages.

But the tobogganing is still good behind Trinity and there are even tea leaves in the garbage alongside the walls.

Anglican College Goes Red

When Trinity goes on the field, it sports the traditional colors, red and black.

However, not red and black but blue and grey are actually the official Trinity colors. Originally, red and black were the athletic colors, but they gradually edged out the official blue and grey. The Trinity men's blazer is now a red one. The Trinity type who wishes to show an extreme of school spirit sports a flowing scarf in red and black.

The only remaining vestige of the old blue and grey can be found in the St. Hilda's blazers

Mrs. Kirkwood

By PEARL PARNES

"All children want to know what has happened when they find a dead bird, they want to hear how babies are born, and how things grow. So parents are listened to with rapt attention if they try to explain about life and death, and Teaching Books about biology are almost always popular."

Mrs. Kirkwood, Dean of Women at Trinity College, comes to this conclusion in her book "For College Women . . . and Men". Her own book she describes as another teaching book, but meets this difficulty: "The Young Man and Woman have learned about learning at school . . . and naturally they feel there is nothing very new for them to encounter when they come to college. So they are not apt to ask many questions about it, nor to pick up a book of this kind."

But Mrs. Kirkwood nevertheless goes on to talk about life of the university, designed to explain the characteristic of the university situation as against that of schools. She discusses the questions of friendship, marriage, marital sexual relations, standards and loyalties, government at college, and religion for the student.

Her thirty years on the University of Toronto staff include such positions as English lecturer and Dean of Women at University College, and at present lecturer and Dean of Women at Trinity. The life at St. Hilda's revolves around Mrs. Kirkwood. She takes part in most of the activities, and spends much time talking to the girls of the college.

Mrs. Kirkwood, the mother of three children, is a supporter of the right, though not the necessity, of married women to work. She carried in 1923, and has continued at the University since then. Born in Toronto, she graduated from Trinity in 1911, having lived in St.

'The Frogs' Croaked In Greek At Semi-Centennial Celebrations

A distinguished array of gentlemen in morning coats and top hats, and ladies in bustles and sporting enormous ostrich feather hats settled down on a hillock beside a brook in the heart of the city of Toronto.

From a little grove opposite them came the resounding' phrases of Aristophanes: "Epotitone eothon, O despota, ophois ay gelosin hoi theomenoi?" (Shall I crack any of the old jokes, master, at which the audience never fail to laugh?)

The year was 1902 and the occasion for presenting The Frogs in the original Greek, was to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Trinity College, and was an event unique in history of drama at this university.

It was performed in a natural amphitheatre along the banks of a Creek at the old College on Queen Street in the days when there was still a romantic little brook winding its way through the heart of the grounds.

In preparation for weeks, the play almost failed to come off. The uncooperative employees of the Toronto Street Railway Company went out on strike a day before the play was to be performed. As a result Aeschylus, Euripides and Pluto, and the Director, found themselves next morning under arms in the drill hall. The Trinity branch of the Queen's Own Rifles were going to help, along with others, to be sure, to quell the uprising.

Utter confusion, in the old Trinity quad was the result, as other students not in the militia tried to cram the three top parts at the last minute.

But fate and Trinity won out. The strike collapsed while the students and guests were taking part in the special banquet to honour the anniversary. The three players rushed back to get into their costumes and the performance continued as planned.

For the benefit of those people who were unpropitiously unacquainted with Greek, an elaborate program and translation was provided.

From reports of students, who took part in the play, it was a great success. Bacchus rode magnificently down the Charon in his barge and the frog chorus croaked out its chant "Brekekex, koax, koax," with great verve, from behind a hedge.

The human donkey, who carried the corpse down to hell, was declared to be the most remarkable on the Canadian stage, by one of the contemporary critics. (The corpse, incidentally, never quite gets to his destination in the play. Declaring obstinately to Dionysius, who was on his way to hell to fetch Euripides back to life, that he would rather be sent back to earth again than give Dionysius a ride for less than two drachma, he did just that.)

The Trinity Chapel, which all Trinity students are requested to attend, is pictured above. A rumor says that all St. Hilda's women must swear that they have attended Chapel six times a week. The rumor is unfounded.

Wearing Of The Gown

Trinity has lost a lot of its tradition since the day when cap and gown had to be worn at all meals, lectures and Chapel services. But the gown remains.

In the 1350's, students were required to wear cap and gown on all trips to town. (The Queen St. site was in practically open country at that time.) The administrators felt that the wearing of the gown might make undergraduates conduct themselves in gentlemanly fashion. The result was a considerable razzing by the populace, who interpreted the academic garb as an effort at superiority and snobbishness.

Frequently gowns were hidden in a ravine behind the College, but being caught without one in town meant writing out the Chapel service in full.

When it was decreed that gowns need not be worn while sleighing or tobagganing, it was not a rare sight to see a Trinity man emerge from one of the town's bars with a toboggan over his shoulder.

Once a Trinity man was seen in ragged, flowing gown, doggedly following a female up and down Yonge St. Soon after, the ruling requiring all students to wear cap and gown to town was abolished.

Originally, all University of Toronto students wore the gown, but when the rest of the University abandoned it, Trinity persisted, characteristically Old School in its leanings.

Today, gowns can still be seen covering the figures of girls clad in shorts, on their way to and from sporting events on the Trinity Field.

When the Trinity College Literary Institute debated the resolution that "absurdity is the spice of life," one enthusiastic upholder of the affirmative appeared clad only in his gown. In spite of his claim that he was not violating any rules pertaining to academic nakedness, the offender was forcibly ejected by the Sergeant-at-arms and the Freshmen.

GRADS RECALL

A Way Of Life

It was a case of "man bites dog" and a turning point in Canadian history when the Very Reverend John Lowe, a Rhodes Scholar from Trinity in 1920, returned to Oxford as the Dean of Christ Church, Oxford.

Stretching back through the 100 years of Trinity College history is a long line of distinguished graduates. From the Clerical and academic fields to business and journalism there are many Trinity grads who are leaders in their fields.

"Trinity is a way of life which teaches you not to mind a frayed chesterfield but rather to want another good book," said Mrs. Sabiston, another Trinity graduate who is known as Pearl McCarthy, art critic for the Globe and Mail. Recalling student days at Trinity, Mrs. Sabiston said, "we were quite unsophisticated in those days, and it was unusual to stay out until midnight."

In art circles the names of W. Roloff Beney and A. A. MacDonald are well-known. Beney, who is interested in abstract painting has studied in Greece and Italy and has had one-man shows in Paris and New York. A. A. MacDonald, another Trinity grad, is married to a graduate of St. Hilda's College, Billy Button, who recently wrote the book "I Married an Artist".

In a more scientific field we have David A. Keyes who is Head of the Chalk River Development and Vice-President of the National Research Council of Canada. Mr. Keyes is coming to Toronto on February 14th to deliver a lecture for the Trinity Centennial.

Dr. Phillip Child, Chancellor's Professor of English at Trinity, is in his own right a well-known novelist and poet. Among his many works are, "Village of Souls", "God's Sparrows", and about six months ago his poem "The Victorian House" was published. Two of Dr. Child's works, "Day of Wrath" and "Mr. Ames Against Time" have won the Ryerson fiction award.

The Southam Trophy for excellence among member papers of the Canadian University Press won this year by The Varsity, was presented by H. S. Southam, a Trinity grad. He is the publisher of an Ottawa daily, "The Citizen", and Honorary Treasurer of the Canadian Writers' Association.

There are several Trinity graduates in the top levels of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Among them are Charles Jennings, the General Supervisor of Programs for the CBC, and Marjorie Amany, the Senior Talks Producer for CBC. Another woman grad with an important job is Jean Howard who is Director of Serious Music Publications for Broadcast Music Incorporated of Canada and chooses what music is to be published. The voice of another Trinity grad, John Collingwood Reade, radio commentator, comes to Canadians every evening over station CFRB.

The list could go on and on. [illegible] J. G. Althouse, Principal Director of Education for Ontario; [illegible] Blackwell, Attorney-General of Ontario and Commander Little [illegible] was Director of Naval Intelligence RCN during the last World War.

For 100 years Trinity College has been turning out graduates like Sir William Osler and Archibald Lang man; men who have made [illegible]

Bottle Bedlam

When empty bottles accumulate around a residence, what can be done with them? Students in the old Trinity residences on Queen St. found an answer in bottle-rolls, a regular feature of undergraduate life in the Good Old Days.

The beginning of a bottle-roll was usually announced by the resounding echo of glass rolling swiftly down a corridor, in a crescendo that culminated in a splinter and clatter. The end of a bottle-roll was always the assessment of a small fine on each room to pay for the damages.

But it was what happened between the beginning and the end that made bottle-rolls prodigious. All the accumulated bottles were collected at the two ends of the Lower West corridor. At first they were carelessly rolled from one end to the other. As enthusiasm mounted, the game became a more ambitious one: to throw bottles simultaneously from both ends of the corridor and make them meet in the middle. Although the result could not be described as musical, it was definitely pleasing to the undergraduate ear.

When ammunition ran out, a cannon ball, stolen for the occasion from the Provost's room, was rolled from one end of the hall to the other over the debris. Again, the effects were indescribable but delightful.

There is a year in our annals that is commonly associated with the Great War. At Trinity, it is associated with The Great Bottle-Roll of 1914.

Contrary to usual practice, bottles were collected in advance for The Great Bottle-Roll. The procedure was normal until the bottle supply ran out, after about an hour's fun. Students felt cheated that the fun should be over, until it was remembered that there was a cache of old chemical equipment—flasks, test tubes, retorts—stored in the basement since the days when Trinity used to boast a Medical College and Department of Science.

A window was broken and the storeroom looted, with the plunder being divided impartially between the two sides, under a temporary truce. Then the game resumed, with increased vigor. Stars of the cricket team captained. It was regarded as a special achievement when the collection of two chemical-laden bottles resulted in an explosion.

The Great Bottle-Roll of 1914 ended only when a great cloud of yellowish-green smoke began to rise from the floor. But the odor disappeared within a couple of month.

The imposition of fines on all was an excellent stimulant to bottle-rolls, since participants felt that they might as well get their money's worth. Students trapped in their rooms by the flying glass of the 1914 bottle-roll felt especially grieved, since the fine that time was $7.

Bottle-rolls could occur nowhere but Trinity, the only College where it was permissible to have liquor in rooms. Liquor may still be found in Trinity residences for College functions, by the simple process of checking it in at the desk.

When the Trinity men's residence was moved from Queen St. to Trinity House at St. George and Harbord Streets about 1925, bottle-rolls continued. The building was running down, and students were willing to help accelerate the process. Apparently Trinity authorities were not particularly concerned over the bottle rolls; at least they were never outlawed.

But now, it seems, the bottle-roll, loudest and most colorful of all Trinity traditions, is defunct.

Ambrose

By BETTY ANNE

It takes just about a hundred years for a place to prepare itself to receive a guest like Ambrose, Provost Seeley's pet English bulldog. Although only 2½ years old, Ambrose impressed your rover-reporter in an interview yesterday afternoon with his mature world-perspective and the solemn dignity with which he responded to the harrowing experience of a press reception.

Seated casually behind a huge mahogany desk, Ambrose quietly expounded on his life and times up until now with malice towards none. He said that he attends all Trinity meetings without failure as a matter of course for he found the aroma of good cigars conducive to peaceful snoozing and slightly exotic dreams. Smiling to himself, he admitted that his attendance at Chapel was somewhat perfunctory, but added that he always went to communion. When quizzed about his activities before he came to Trinity, he confessed to a broad background of travel both here and on the continent and took us into his confidence by whispering into our ear that he really knew everything everyone says to him either in English or Hungarian. Obstinacy, he bellowed straightening up, was at the bottom of any refusal on his part to respond to the cries of men.

Directing the conversation to the Trinity Centennial Celebrations, we asked Ambrose if there were any improvements to be made in the local set-up which he would like to go on record with his hearty endorsement. Stroking his jowl thoughtfully, Ambrose hesitated. Yes, he replied. There was one thing that had bothered him for some time. He felt that the mongrel quadruped who lived across the street was a menace to Trinity Society.

Restraining himself with an effort Ambrose expressed to us the hope that the cars along Hoskin Ave would drive a lot faster for a while. If you know what I mean, he said, giving us a large wink.

We were just about to ask him his opinions on the Toronto Humane Society's Plan to Make Queen's Park Fit For Good Dogs to Walk In, when Ambrose looked up at the clock and then bounded hurriedly out the door. Cheerio, he growled as he disappeared down the hall. I'm off to the Buttery for my afternoon tiffin.

Ye Olde Sports

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The old saying that goes something like: "You may have been a nuisance but you never were a bore" could apply to Trinity athletics. The Buttery Boys have seldom cleaned up any sport but they have always had gobs of color and were always high on participation.

As one might expect, old Trinity made her first flyer into athletics in the cricket field. By 1855 Trinity was taking on the Toronto Cricket Club every year. Games with Varsity were regular events later on and the Crumpeteers used to avenge their frequent rugby defeats by running roughshod over their northern opponents in cricket. Cricket died a natural death by 1920.

Harrier was another old timer. It was called cross-country running and steeplechase then. The big race was run every Oct. 27th and was followed by Beer Supper. Though it conjures up visions of mad debauchery with scads of crumpets and tea and mild port, we are told that it was the forerunner of today's athletic banquets.

Back in the 1890's, Trinity had a sporting professor, E. W. Huntingford, who had been a devotee of harrier at Oxford and continued the exercise after coming to Toronto. The first morning, he created somewhat of a sensation when he set out from Trinity clad in his running togs.

A great hue and cry was raised and chase given. His pursurers didn't reckon with Prof. Huntingford's fleetness and condition and he easily left them panting far behind.

Following the federation in Varsity in 1904 and the move to Queen's Park in 1925, Trinity really took its place in college sports. They've won the Mulock Cup for football only once since 1894 but they've come close often enough. In soccer Trinity was luckier, winning in 1942, 1948 and 1949. Hockey they won in 1920, 1938 and 1939. But as for the Reed Trophy, which is more significant, Trinity has won three times and been runner-up five times.

Missing Wing Flies By Night

By JOE KAMENICEK

What happened to the North Wing of Trinity College? What did it look like? Where is it?

Here is the story:

Jack, III Trinity, tired from football practice, fell asleep one afternoon in the shade of some bushes on the Trinity playing field. When he woke up, he could not believe his eyes. THERE IT WAS, glimmering in the pale moonlight, THE NORTH WING.

Bright, large rectangles of plate glass windows looked yellow and soft in the dark. On the lower floor one window was ajar. Jack could hear the luscious, chromatic glide of atonal music, accentuated by the temptingly soft aroma of freshly made coffee. Other, only partially curtained windows revealed quiet reading rooms with well-stocked book shelves. Soft light was escaping from a common room, full of chairs which neither squeaked, breathed, nor broke their occupants' backs.

The upper storey contained a row of smaller windows leading into tastefully and quietly furnished rooms. On the walls of these rooms were colorful reproductions of strangely familiar paintings. Here and there, on the window sill, stood a group of lonely beer bottles.

Jack bit his lips and hurried to The Varsity office. There he borrowed a camera to get a picture of what he, strangely enough, had failed to see before.

The picture appeared in next day's Varsity with the following caption:

The North Wing of Trinity College

The following day all plans of the University grounds were revised to correspond with the existing conditions. A medieval monk was rushed via BOAC from London, England, to change the map on the East wall of the Map Room of the Local Monastery.

A few weeks later, an indignant letter to the editor appeared in the Mirror of Students' Administrative Council Opinion. The writer of this letter (John, III Trinity) deplored the sorry state of affairs on the campus, as expressed by the new architectural monstrosity.

What, asked the writer, happened to the age-old, mellowed bricks on the ends of the two parallel wings? Why did the new building have large windows? What happened to the imitation lead bars which had formerly cut the windows into a nice compromise between prison bars and a monkey cage? Why does it not have a carefully misplaced tower with a papal tiara on top? Why did coffee replace the ancient tea bags? Why did callipygian coeds replace the vestal virgins in black? HOW COULD ANYONE build an ice-cream stand like THAT on an ancient campus like THIS? Just imagine, no towers, no gargoyles, no nothing. . . . Ah, wrote John, to hell with it!

The next day, The North Wing disappeared — or was sent away. Gone were its people, coffee, twelve tone music, books and functional furniture. Gone were the reproductions of Picasso, Braque and Roualt. All that was left was a misplaced collection of T. S. Eliot's poems, two callipygian maidens and three empty beer bottles.

It is quite obvious that The Proud Campus has attempted to wipe all knowledge of this regrettable episode from its past. Fortunately, a few historical documents are still in existence: the monk's map in Hart House and the official plan of the grounds of the university. There alone the North Wing of the Greatest of Them All still exists.

Stuffed Birds Glorify Halls Of Trinity

An incongruity familiar to the eye of every Trinity type is a few glass cases of stuffed birds that make their home along the western corridor of the college.

(Ed. Note: We use the term "Trinity type" advisedly. A native of Toronto is a Torontonian; a native of Trinity is a Trinity type.)

Usually one of the birds in the cases rests quietly on one side. Beady unblinking eyes stare out sternly at every passer-by.

Symbol of Trinity's reluctance to give up anything from the past, the birds are relics of the days when Trinity taught the sciences. Actually the collection contains some very rare specimens.

Lit Lack Quorum Adjourn Till Feb.

The University College Literary d Athletic Society met last ght, with 17 members in attend- ce. The only motion passed as one of adjournment.

President David Rose said that executive felt that while it uld have been easy to have ought sufficient men from the residences to provide the 20 mbers necessary for a quorum, meeting should be post- ed until Tuesday, Feb. 5. He d that the lack of a quorum s disappointing to the executive ause it showed a lack of inter- on the part of the men of the lege who ware assessed $7.00 Lit activities. Rose hoped that postponement would bring to attention of the UC men the d to support the executive.

Honorary president Wilson added t the lack of attendance could taken to mean that the entire lege supported the executive d had no criticism of their ac- s. If the college wished to leize the executive he hoped the entire college would at- d the February meeting.

The only other business was a estion from Richard Clee, II , who asked if the postponing the meeting would not mean t the arrangements for the Arts l which were on the agenda, ld not be discussed until after Ball was over. Rose pointed that the Arts Ball had been y discussed at the last open eting of the Lit and that ar- ngements for the Arts Ball were settled.

Honorary President Wilson add- ed that any further discussion of the Arts Ball would have to be in the form of a post-mortem.

Express Thanks For SHARE-ing

"The individual, now despised, must be placed back on his pedestal; the world will not be able to function efficiently, if the emphasis is not shifted from the crowd to the individual," said His Excellency R. R. Saksena, Indian High Commissioner, at last night's SHARE campaign dinner.

"I am ashamed, for what my generation did not accomplish. We lived in naked fear, hatred and war," asserted Saksena. "We do not propose to give up the fight for peace."

"You have established an organization to give help to needy countries like mine, which were not as fortunate as yours," Saksena pointed out. "We are trying to eliminate illiteracy from the villages, but our program of free and compulsory education has not made as much progress as desired. Hospital facilities are inadequate. We are most grateful for the drugs and medical supplies sent in the past, and will appreciate gifts sent in the future," he concluded.

The High Commissioner of Pakistan E. H. Enver, claimed "The people of Pakistan want to have their own rights, their own government, and want to make their own decisions. They want no more, but will not be satisfied with less." He believed that freedom can be lost or won in Asia. Referring to the Colombo plan, Enver said: "Your government has done a great job which is greatfully appreciated in Pakistan."

"We have to make lives more tolerable at the bottom of the social heap," stated R. G. Cavell, Canadian Administrator of the Colombo Plan. Besides sending capital and technical assistance, the West also has to tram Asian technicians and students, he maintained.

Trinity Quad Gaily Aglow With Rockets

The usual peace of the campus evening was disturbed last night by the sound of explosions, and the flare of colored lights.

The occasion was the Trinity Founders' Day banquet, winding up with a display of sky rockets. They were set off in the Trinity Quad between 9:45 and 10:00 last night, by Peter Giles and a gowned assistant.

The crowd screamed with each explosion, and yelled approval as each rocket burst into color.

Whigs In Power In Mock Session

The second Mock Parliament of the year will be held tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. in the legislature in the Parliament Buildings with the Liberals forming the government. As a result of the defeat of the MacDonald-Cartier Club when they formed the last parliament, the party with the second highest number of seats, the Liberals, will have to form the second government.

At the meeting of the Mock Parliament committee yesterday the Liberals disclosed their bill on Resale Price Maintenance which they will try to have passed on Thursday. In a preamble it is stated as an act 'Forbidding dealers from fixing specific or minimum resale prices for the commodities they control.'

At the same meeting John Medcof, the representative for the Liberals asked in a motion that the names of the members should be submitted to the clerk of the house before the Mock Parliament. In reply, the committee repeated the position of last fall that Graduates taking an active part in the University could hold seats in the Parliament.

Claire Bacchus, Poli-Sci chairman of the Mock Parliament Committee told the meeting that the cost incurred at last Thursday's Parliament totalled $21.50, which would have to be borne by the Poli-Sci Club if the Political Clubs would not help bear the load. "These expenses are the pay for two watchmen, two ushers, and meals for the latter," she stated. She pointed out that tomorrow night expenses would not be as high.

Blues Shade Tri-Bells In Last Ten Seconds

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Blue Basketball team beat Nortown Tri-Bells last night at Hart House 59-57 in the last ten seconds of play, after coming out from behind a 51-54 deficit. Bill Huycke twice broke the tie in the last minute, first on a lovely drive and left-hand shot off the backboard to make the score 57-55, and again with ten seconds to go, after Johnny Braithwaite had tied it 57-57, Hycke scored on a set shot.

Braithwaite, high scorer for the game with 19 points, kept the Tri-Bells in the game when the Blues put on their last-minute drive. His last couple of baskets were out of this world—he went up for the hoop like a snake climbing up a crooked pole, faking his checks out of their shorts. Johnny, with the Blues two years ago and the Intermediates last year, looked last night as though he had come a long way since joining the TB's; always dangerous on a quick break, he has developed quite a shot.

Tri-Bells were without coloured star Fred Thomas, who has a lame foot; George Wearring, former Western star; and Sharpy Litvack. Play on both sides was pretty ragged and rough. Marshall and Grossman fouled out in the third quarter, but were allowed to return to the game when it looked like Tri-Bells would go short-handed.

Varsity did not use their first string very much, in order to give Monnot, Fawcett, Binnington, and others as much experience as possible against good opposition. Monnt, a freshman, was top man for the Blues with 17 points, seven on foul shots. Ray has come a long way since he joined the club, and will likely be on the starting line before long.

The Blues started Fawcett, Binnington, Lukenda, Maynerick, and Muycke. Tri-Bells looked poor for most of the first half, and were behind 20-7 at the end of the first quarter, and 36-25 at the half. They were stronger in the third quarter as Braithwaite, Charlie Watson, and Tootie Freedman picked things up a bit. The Blues couldn't find the hoop in this period, though they had plenty of shots, and were losing 48-45 to open the final period.

Varsity—Monnot 17, Maynerick 10, Natanson 8, Lukenda 5, Huycke 4, Brennan 4, Oneschuk 4, Fawcett 3, Glover 3, Binnington 1.

Tri-Bells—Braithwaite 19, Watson 11, Cooper 9, Freedman 8, Grossman 5, Thomas 4, Gray 1, Marshall.

Grant Staff Retroactive Bonus Hike

University staffers have just received a new cost-of-living bonus, according to a letter which is being circulated to all members of the academic and administrative staff.

The letter, which is signed by President Sidney Smith, announces the increase, retroactive to July 1, 1951.

The bonus will be tied to the Dominion Bureau of Statistic's cost-of-living index, using the index of January 1, 1951, as the base.

The bonus will be $1 a month for every full point increase in the cost of living index. Index for the base period was 172.5. It is now 191.1.

The bonus will be adjusted quarterly on the basis of the increase or decrease in the index during the preceding three months. It will go to all full-time members of the academic and administrative staff employed on a 12-month basis.

In addition a lump sum of $84 will be paid for the six-month period between July 1, 1951, and Dec. 31, 1951.

Pitching Sportshoes

Basketball held the spotlight in yesterday's Intramural sports program with several games carded. In a major league fixture Forestry A's downed SPS III 34-23 after jumping into a 14-6 first period lead. Harris paced the Woodsmen with 13 points while Gordon dropped in eight for Skule.

Minor League action saw the UC 73 Tigers drive into a 26-9 2nd quarter margin over III Civil to finish up ahead 36-26. Gaziuk potted 13 and Thompson eight for the Cats, and Hollingsworth and Greenly 12 and 10 for the Engineers.

III Chem redeemed some of Skule's lost glory by whipping Vic snowmen 35-12. Williams was tops for the winners with 9, while Babirad managed 4 for the Victers. The last game was a 17-17 saw-off between Pre-Med II yr and IV Chem. Badcoff and Margrubies split 12 for the Docs and Bumgardner swished 6 for the Chemicals.

Hockey activity saw Forestry divide a pair of games as the A's shut out Vic III 3-0 and the B's lost a 3-1 decision to Law. The scoring was divided evenly in the first game with Rose, Clarke, and Beatty all netting the puck for the Woodchoppers. J. A. Tory, Byrnes and Heigemeister fired goals for the Lawyers in the second tilt while Tompkins saved the losers from a shut-out with a singleton.

In water polo Dent A's downed St. Mike's A 5-1, and Trinity A trounced SPS II 10-2 as Fraser came through with five counters.

Mat Men To Meet Ithaca In A-Nite Feature Spot

Wrestling will be the feature attraction at Saturday's athletic night. However, the widely varied program includes swimming, boxing, movies, square dancing and an assorted group of games.

The visiting grapplers will be the Ithaca College aggregate from New York. Included on their team are such top performers as undefeated Jim Howard, 130 pounds, Dick Dean U.S. YMCA champion, also undefeated, 167 pounds, and Paul Thoman, 177 pounds, who has only lost one bout.

Ithaca will face almost the same line-up that gave Toronto their 24-15 victory over O.A.C. at the last athletic night. Leon Smith from Skule is going to replace Bill Chykaliuk in the 187 pound class; Chykaliuk is out with an infected knee. The Blues' mentor Kurt Whipper feels that his team will give the visitors powerful opposition.

Swimming fans will get their first look at the intercollegiate swimming team. The Toronto team will face Niagara Falls in their first home appearance. Probable Olympic swimmer George Stulac is the big man on the Varsity team but he will be supported by Doug Gibson, Charlie McElroy, and John Bates. Immediately after the Intercollegiate attraction, the interfaculty finals are to take place.

In the upper gym, Tony Canzono's boxers will fight out the intramural finals. Tony promised to have several intercollegiate exhibition bouts ready to round out the program. The winning interfaculty boxers will get a chance to make the trip to West Point where the Blues will take on the cadets from the US Military Academy.

The doors will open at 6:45 for admission, but the events don't get under way until 7:45. This should give hitchhikers lots of time to get here for these exciting events.

Trinity Expose

Trinity College, the ancient stronghold of John Strachan, has always aroused curiosity among the uninitiate. Indeed, Trinity, hidden away behind its Gothic facade and crowned by Byzantine towers, has always been something of a mystery to the rest of the campus.

Everyone has an impression of Trinity, however. It is usually compounded of tea and crumpets, Auden and Eliot, beer and chapel services and other odd miscellany.

The Varsity believes that the time has come (after all, this is Trinity's hundredth anniversary year) to penetrate the cool exterior, to get to the heart of the college. We have joyfully performed this task as a service to the campus.

Samson Trimmed

How far is it from Stockholm to Edinburgh? Geographically, of course, it is a leap across the North Sea. In terms of the International Student Conferences held last year at Stockholm and this year at Edinburgh, it is simply a step, but potentially an important one.

The original Stockholm conference was composed of those national student unions (like NFCUS) who found it either exceedingly difficult or downright impossible to work within the communist confines of the International Union of Students. Again and again IUS had shown that it was far more interested in propagating the Russian party line and all its activities were geared to this end.

The national student unions represented at Stockholm wanted to undertake practical activities — without becoming communist mouthpieces. They were interested in extending exchange scholarships, sending technical and material assistance to universities which needed it, holding international sports competitions, cultural festivals and similar projects. All these programs were of a non-political nature and there was no formal organization to back them up.

But these vast and ambitious Stockholm schemes produced very little in the way of tangible results. A few mandates were carried out, some scholarships were established, but the majority of plans simply gathered dust, or bogged down in a maze of technical difficulties, in the ensuing year.

With a new crop of delegates arriving at Edinburgh returned the ambitious schemes of yesteryear. Their problem was to find some more effective way of implementing their proposals than simply handing them out to delegates who were left to their own devices for another year.

Neither at Stockholm nor Edinburgh was there any willingness to establish another international union, which, it was felt, would only be an anti-communist block in opposition to IUS. Oddly enough, this was coupled with a profound pessimism as to the possibilities of ever "getting together" with IUS.

The Edinburgh conference did, however, manage to stray still further from the IUS fold. They very sensibly agreed to the establishment of an international secretariat— a move which the Stockholm conference explicitly rejected.

To most people, this will seem a positive step towards the ultimate end — a non-communist international union. Yet, it was definitely in a spirit of reaction against the spectre of the omnipotent IUS secretariat (which carries on projects without consulting its members) that they did so. In forming a potential Samson of a secretariat, the Edinburgh delegates were careful to trim its locks carefully. We can only hope that the severely limited powers of the new secretariat do not reduce it to a bald impotency.

Even with the added boon of a central co-ordinating office (money for which will now have to be found), there will be little chance of success unless the individual national unions show a more feverish concern than formerly. The national unions' interest will have to exceed the duration of the conference.

OUR READERS WRITE

Education Needed

Editor, The Varsity:

I would condemn neither the nobility of The Varsity's "Education Theme" nor the desirability of effecting a change in the sphere of education —what I do condemn is the failure to achieve these noble ends.

It is obvious that a certain amount of thought and research went into that publication. Many of the ideas in it are good. However, they are not new. What you have done is to quote bits of ideas that have been our philosophy of life for ages. Let us not waste time setting standards which already stand, but let us rather start the struggling mass towards them. "How to get there?"—is the vital question.

To this end The Varsity was lacking. There was nothing which brought us any closer to the larger issues involved.

Let us consider education in general rather than in terms of university education alone.

The divorce of education from life and the lack of vital meaning in schooling is a malady which few thinking people would deny. It is something which is not local to any university nor to any community. We all, including myself, suffer from it and it is difficult for a patient to write of a cure. It seems that the problem is directly insoluble and that, for expediency, the only thing to do is to stick out the accepted pattern and attempt simultaneously to find one's own goals and utilize the educational resources in achieving these goals. But, doing this alone does not allow for progressive social reform. Consider for a while those goals and motives which are in effect in our society.

Without the awakenings of thoughts and progress of ideas into positive actions there can be little doubt that we will develop those vital forces which are required for the reconstruction of the present.

Recognizing the necessity for a remedy indicates the presence of a disease. Realizing the need for a different and more balanced outlook is itself a major accomplishment. Questioning the values of an education and its role in our concepts of a better society is essential to a keener approach. But these alone are not enough! Ideas by themselves are worthless except as they pass into actions.

For ages philosophers have been interpreting the world differently. But the point is to change it. We would be wise in learning from the experiences and thoughts of others, but we must further develop these ideas, integrate them with our own philosophies and apply them to the required tasks. We cannot tolerate a so-called educated group who in our democratic society are intellectually and emotionally immature. Granted, we are all individuals, not all with equal mental capacities nor with the same abilities in directing our efforts, but only a desire for and the achievement of a truer self-understanding, only that will enable us to see things in their higher possible forms. Once we have our peace of mind and know where we are, we can better judge what to do and how to do it.

Which brings us to the point of this letter. A principle of liberalism is the right to freely inquire into the economic and social structure of our society. I maintain that our educational and religious institutions do not foster a spirit of liberalism. Nor do our newspapers or other commercial interests. I maintain that few if any of us have even a good knowledge and understanding of the active forces in our society and their effects on that changing society. Therefore, I wish to propose this project for your consideration.

Namely, the initiation of a series of articles, by responsibly qualified men and women, on all the various and important aspects of life in our society; dealing with the methods, place and importance of each activity and treating the shortcomings of each with constructive criticism.

By this you would be doing a great service to the university as well as to the community at large. By engendering doubts and stimulating the minds of all of us such a scheme could promote the social awareness of many to the realization of their duty to the society which they ought to serve and of which they are a part.

We must develop an intellectual integrity to enable us to weather the exposure of our wounds and the recognition of our weaknesses. Unless a free state has as its basis and at its core a group of intellectual leaders and is developing an intelligent populace, its people in time will become enslaved. Surely enslavement is not what we want!

The whole issue resolves itself to the question of thoughts and actions. For as Henry George once wrote, "Until there be correct thought, there cannot be correct action; and when there is correct thought, right action will follow".

Dov Chetner,
II SPS.

I had a very interesting conversation the other morning. It all began on Hoskin behind Hart House. I very recklessly had waited only ten minutes or so before trying to cross over to the Trinity College side. Just at midstream I was spotted by a car driver, aimed at and nearly hooked by the scarf on to the right end of his front bumper. For the first time in my life I experienced the sensation of having to keep up with a car going 40 miles per hour while running on my knees. Luckily he soon picked up to normal traffic speed and I took off, to glide a scant six iches from the ground.

I was just thinking what a dandy excuse this was going to be when I arrived late at my next lecture, when I noticed that someone else was on the other end of my bumper, heartily caught by his collar. He was obviously an office worker and was just reading the Globe and Mail.

Now, normally, I am not quick to start up a conversation with a stranger but in this case I thought the circumstances were sufficiently unique to merit some word of greeting—and we would have something to talk about besides the weather.

"Do you go downtown this way very often?" I asked, for we were going down Yonge by now. I could tell by the splinters gathering in my knees.

"Yes, quite often. I find I can get to the office three or four minutes quicker this way than by street car—when they're moving at all, that is."

"You mean to say you purposely get caught on car bumpers?"

"Well, I used to take a chance and walk into the street with my eyes closed' you might say, but I soon discovered that to effect any real economy in travelling time you have to be selective. Most of these fellows (gesturing with a hand toward our driver hidden from view) are content merely with being fast, but there are a certain number who take a real interest in their driving and get quite adept in such techniques as jumping stoplights, jockeying into front position, pushing through crowds of pedestrians and so forth. They are your real time savers. Now I'll spend up to five minutes some mornings just waiting for the right driver to came along."

"And then what do you do?"

"What you must realize is that if you are going to hook a ride (he smiled here at his little pun) from the same driver more than once, you have to appeal to his vanity by playing hard to get. You musn't stand stock still in the centre of the road, or on your knees with collar open so it can be caught easily. Rather, stand a little to one side, wait until he is almost up to you, then to attract his attention start to run across the road, just timing it so you get neatly hooked with one end of his bumper. This way you please his ego and also give yourself some choice of bumpers. I prefer the left-front myself. How do you like the ride by the way?"

"Well, I must admit I'm not [illegible] used to it," I said, "but I do find it a little painful when we scrape fenders with other cars."

"That's why I prefer the left side: more chance of being on the inside lane, away from the traffic. But you'll soon learn these little points."

"I knew I had picked a good one as soon as I saw him", said my new acquaintance. "Did you notice how he climbed that car back there? Hardly felt it, did you? Takes time to learn that touch. On Sundays some of the boys get together and hold slalom trials around the boulevard trees and fire hydrants. It's the only way to become a really good driver. There's 'Pedestrian Polo', 'Spin the Copper', 'Blind Man's Bluff' (the figure most of them can see as well as the next person) and quite a few others. You can see it's becoming a well developed pastime."

SAC Meet

NO STUDENT UNION NOW

Canada's Two Tongues Good at Edinburgh: Wax

The basic idea at Edinburgh was a sincere desire—not to divide the world—but to prove that international co-operation is possible on a student level, SAC President Syd Wax said last night. For this reason the conference opposed the formation of a formal international union with fees and a constitution.

Wax was reporting to the Students' Administrative Council on the recent international student conference in Scotland, at which he was one of Canada's two delegates. Wax is also chairman of the International Activities Commission of the National Federation of Students' Administrative Council on behalf of Canadian University Students.

"Attempts by the International Union of Students to introduce the Korean war and the Five-Power Peace Pact into student affairs is only an attenpt to destroy co-existence: the ability for the two major world groups to live side by side, mingling in some fields," Wax said.

For this reason it was very heartening to see students of 25 countries present, he added. He said that 2,000,000 bona fide students were represented at the conference.

Commenting on Canadian participation at the conference, Wax said that in Europe Canada is considered an active force in world student affairs—not just a colony or dominion or big neighbor of the United States.

"Canada is particularly well-fitted for a leading role in the international student field because of her dual culture", Wax remarked. At Edinburgh, Canada was represented by Wax, and NFCUS President Jean de Margerie, of Laval. "Between Jean and me", Wax said, "we had the sympathy of both the English-speaking and the Ramance language groups."

He also mentioned the attitude expressed by the Indonesian delegate, who said that the historic role of Asia was to prevent a third world war by bringing together the two world extremes of Communism and democracy.

Studies Come First – Simcoe Hall Note

It's impossible to start a student union project at the present time.

That's the latest word from Simcoe Hall regarding a student union building. It came as part of a letter answering the SAC request for permission to hold a fund-raising drive for the union.

However, the letter ended on a more optimistic note: Dean Bissell and the Comptroller would be glad to discuss the matter further with the Student Union Committee.

In the letter, Dean Bissell—the President's Assistant—stated two points of general policy which "might influence" any decision the University should take regarding the campaign. Dean Bissell wrote the letter—which was read at last night's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council—for the President, who is in India representing the National Council of Canadian Universities at an international conference.

The first point of general policy mentioned by Dean Bissell is that the university is concerned with multiplication of financial appeals. (In this connection he was presumably referring to possible conflict between a student union drive and the University's own Building Fund campaign.) He also said the administration was concerned with the danger of dissipation of effort.

"The strongest factor," the letter continues, "is that the administration must be concerned first with meeting academic needs." By that the Dean said he meant not only increasing the facilities for teaching and research, but also more general provision for scholarships and fellowships.

"These responsibilities will tax the University's sources to the utmost", he added.

These difficulties and building restrictions (which Dean Bissell called only a complicating factor) would make it impossible at this time to start a student union project, the letter said.

The Council decided to go ahead with plans to set up a student union building trust fund, and to arrange a meeting with Dean Bissell and Comptroller Rankin with a view to setting up such a fund.

"This meeting will lay the problem of the student union squarely in the administration's lap," commented Student Union Commissioner Cliff Wilson, Arch.

The Council decided in November to seek permission to hold a campaign to raise money to build a student union building.

US Woos Franco Policy Deplorable Debate Decides

American foreign policy came under fire in the first Hart House debate of the new year. The house heard American foreign policy called "stupid, self-interested and selfish" and Senator McCarthy referred to as a "slimy creature". The resolution that "This House deplores the leadership given by the United States of America in world affairs" was upheld 45-28.

Speaking for the resolution, Dave Rose IV UC, claimed that there is "a growing crisis of confidence between the Americans and their allies." Rose criticised United States wooing of "fascistic Franco" and said that it was a "slap in the face" for the American allies.

He suggested that "our present difficulties" were a result of American bungling in the past few years.

"Even if Bolshevism had never been heard of, the revolutions in South East Asia would have taken place," declared Elmer Sopha, II Law, second speaker for the resolution. They were the result of American Asiatic policy he said. Referring to Nehru as the "last friend we have in Asia", Sopha condemned the long delay of American aid to India.

He believed that criticism was needed and felt "that a lack of criticism may foster the growing belief that any criticism of United States policy was subversive."

John Morden, Wycliffe, first speaker for the opposition asserted that it was American leadership that had kept us from a third world war. He said that the Americans had taken "a realistic approach to Franco in Spain and Tito in Yugoslavia". "What was sought was mutual aid from the godless masses behind the Iron Curtain." The United States Morden felt is giving us that breather to get our ideas into and behind the Iron Curtain.

Also speaking against the resolution Dwight Fulford, Trinity, recognized that the United States post-war policy has not been perfect. Herbert Hoover and General McArthur "are on the lunatic fringe of American policy", he said "but every country has a few of these people".

America has leaders who want to make other countries strong and who want to improve the standards of the people by a policy of Russian containment, Fulford stated. "There are greater signs for world peace now than any one would have thought a year ago", he said.

Professor F. H. Underhill, Honorary Visitor and Opposition Speaker, indicated that United States policy was based on the fact that "in dealing with Soviet Communism we are faced with an aggressive force aiming at world domination".

"Having built up our power we will negotiate from positions of strength," he continued "and this is the way out of "maintaining our kind of peace".

Local Phones Out When Cable Snaps

Anyone calling the University switchboard at Simcoe Hall (MI. 1) yesterday morning or late the afternoon was told by the itchboard operators that all loc- were dead. A spokesman for Bell Telephone Company said the 600-pair cable serving the ischboard was most likely cut me time Tuesday night as the were found to be dead when operators reported for duty terday morning.

Five Telephone company trucks re sent to the University. The cal location of the break, near Electrical Building, was found testing a pair of wires in which of the wires was still good. comparing the resistances and owing the size of the cable, Bell lephone employees were able to pproximately where the cable broken down.

The actual cause in the break not discovered until after 2:00 p.m. as the cable was lying on the floor of one of the heating tunnels under more than a foot of water.

One of the repair men said that it looked as if the cable had been punctured by hot metal from a welding torch. The large heating pipe was re-wrapped this summer and steel supports were welded at that time. The telephone cable had been suspended by steel cables, but these had been cut and the cable dropped to the floor of the tunnel.

The hole in the lead cable casing did not cause any trouble until the tunnel was flooded recently, and the repair man showed a Varsity reporter where water had entered the cable.

The repairmen said that it was lucky that the damage was discovered so soon as the water might have spread through a large section of the cable.

Service was resumed on some of the locals, by 5:00 p.m.

Santa Leaves $900 Parcel To Bluenosers

Fredericton, N.B.—(CUP)—The Students' Representative Council (SRC) at the University of New Brunswick received a pleasant Christmas surprise—to the tune of nine hundred dollars. It seems that the money is a surplus from council funds of last year, unrecorded in the budget. At the time of the budget meeting of the council last spring, the year-end statements were not completed by the Bursar's Office and the omission was not detected. When the statements were released, the discrepancy was obvious.

SAC at a glance

Besides discussing the student union, the Edinburgh conference and the fee rise, at its meeting last night the Students' Administrative Council:

—pulled out its overcoats when Trinity rep Bill Corbett opened a window and then couldn't get it closed.

—heard that when Divinity student Doug Waite (in his role as Radio Commissioner) wrote a radio play, he was told by CKEY staffers to "make it a little more secular". "I didn't want to give the boys anything I didn't know about", explained Waite.

—heard that the concert a group of Austrian students put on Jan. 8 (under SAC auspices) netted them $700—enough to take them to their next concert in Winnipeg.

—applauded five times, to set a new record. The clapping was for reports by President Syd Wax (on the Edinburgh conference) and Jim Guthro, Director of the All-Varsity Revue, for Finance Commissioner Bud Trivett's donation of blood to a wounded policeman, and twice to The Varsity for winning the Southam Trophy and yesterday's Trinity issue.

—was introduced to the new School of Law coat of arms.

—heard Chairman Dr. McBirnie say he still hadn't read a Rules of Order, when UC rep Chuck Hanley questioned his procedure.

—decided not to help send students to a national conference of schools of Social Work, because the Council supports only All-Varsity efforts.

—had so many members present that one of them was forced to sit with the visitors.

—heard that Torontonensis sales and space contracts were coming in very slowly, and that the Council may soon have to make its commitment for the paper without those groups which haven't bought space.

—gave a vote of thanks to President Syd Wax for his "able presentation of the Edinburgh conference".

—decided to ask the Athletic Directorate to not recognize season tickets to Varsity Stadium skating the night of the SHARE skating party.

—heard Varsity Editor Barbara Browne suggest that the SAC follow the University's lead and give its staff a cost-of-living bonus. Finance Commissioner Bud Trivett said this was already on his commission's next agenda.

—approved the appointment of Mal Crawford, III UC, as Varsity Sports Editor.

—heard that all of the 8,000 student handbooks have now been distributed.

—accepted the resignation of Rocky Martino, Grad., as Radio Roundtable Director because of pressure of other work.

—heard that the Provincial Department of Education had refused to publish a book concerning all scholarships and bursaries available at Ontario universities, to be circulated among secondary school pupils.

—agreed that University College is probably going to have the toughest time collecting money for SHARE, because "it is the most dispersed college".

Ottawa Salute

This is a message received from the Prime Minister of Canada congratulating the University of Toronto on its SHARE program.

I am happy as an honorary alumnus to send my greetings to the students of the University of Toronto on the occasion of the launching of the 2nd campaign to provide aid for universities in South East Asia.

The government is providing assistance to countries in South and South East Asia both through the UN technical assistance program and under the Colombo Plan for the co-operative economic development of the area. If Canada's participation in these programs is to be a success it is important that there is to be wide understanding of their purpose. The campaign now being carried on in the University will help to achieve that understanding as well as add materially to the aid being provided.

Congratulations to the students of the University of Toronto, in the initiative they have taken, I wish them every success in this admirable project.

3 Professors Will Lecture For Mission

A special program of selected speakers and topics will be presented to the Engineering students during the University Christian Mission, January 20 to 24.

Dr. George B. Caird of McGill University will speak at the first meeting. His topic will be "Do I have anything to Believe." Dean K. F. Tupper will be chairman of this meeting.

"The Uniqueness of Christianity" is the subject of the second talk to be given by Dr. K. Leyasmeyer, who has lectured in philosophy and psychology at the University of Latvia.

The third talk, entitled "How Does This Affect Me in Industry", will be given by Rev. E. Checkland, McMaster Gold Medalist.

The last lecture in the series will also be given by Dr. Leyasmeyer. His topic is "How does this affect me personally?"

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"If one way of life is no better than another, then no way of life is valuable at all."

Hendry Will Address Campus United Nations

Professor Charles E. Hendry, ector of the School of Social rs, will speak to the United ions Club today at 4:10 p.m. in milwood, Michael Hind Smith, d Studies announced yesterday.

rof. Hendry said yesterday that will give a very informal report he work he did last year while he continent on a U.N. scholar-. He was the first Canadian to ive a United Nations Fellowship. he assignment—to study citizen icipation and social policy in nomavian countries—led Profes- Hendry from Copenhagen to inki including a visit to Lap- as guest of the Governor of territory. In addition to his in Europe on the U.N. Fellow-, Dr. Hendry spent six months a tour through every country in Europe excluding the Iberian peninsula with a team lead by Nobel Prize winning Physicist, Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Chancellor of Washington University.

These tours, together with a later visit to East Germany immediately before the World Youth Conference, provided Professor Hendry with the fieldwork on which he has based a book "The Role of the Group in World Reconstruction", which is scheduled for publication this spring.

Prof. Hendry was born and reared in Ottawa, holds a B.A. from McMaster and M.A. from Columbia. He has taught at George Williams College, Chicago, Wellesly College, Mass., and New York University.

He has written extensively on group work and community organization and is known as a leader throughout America in the field of social work.

Mr. Hendry has directed the Canadian Camp Training course, and has served as a member of the National Council on Physical fitness. In addition to these activities, Mr. Hendry serves as chairman of the Recreation division of the Canadian Welfare Council. He is, moreover active in the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews.

In addition, he has recently completed a paper for the Defence Research Board on welfare in the Armed Forces.

Tonight's Session: Liberals Introduce Price Fixing Bill

....After the defeat of the MacDonald-Cartier Club in the Mock Parliament a week ago, The University of Toronto Liberals will try to form a stable government tonight. This will be the second Mock Parliament session of the year, and will be held tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the legislature at the Parliament Buildings. The Liberals will bring in a bill on Resale Price Maintenance, similar to the one passed recently in the Federal House.

Copies of the Act as passed by the Federal House will be distributed along with a more concise bill as drafted for the Mock Parliament. In short the bill forbids persons engaged in manufacturing from fixing specific prices for their commodities, with prosecution following the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

The Prime Minister of the Mock Parliament, John Medcof, IV UC, said in commenting on the turn of events since last week, "The defeat of the Tories has given the Liberals their chance to form the Government. We intend to bring in the legislation on price fixing introduced at Ottawa, and stand or fall."

"The Tory opposition to this bill reveals their true stand on free enterprise," said Medcof. "Protection for a few, but little thought for the gouged consumer, a stand typical of the party, historically the friend of monopoly, privilege and reaction."

Paul Forrestal, sitting as Leader of the Opposition for the Macdonald-Cartier Club stated he felt the bill the Liberals are introducing was another instance of the way Liberals are catering to big business interests. "This bill needs much study in committee, which the Liberals have failed to give it" he said.

It was also revealed by the Liberals yesterday, that in the event of a short debate on the main bill, Orie Loucks, one of their sitting members was prepared to bring in a bill with regard to compulsory medical examination prior to granting of marriage licenses.

Camera Club Admits Ladies To Meeting

"Your other eye is more than a spare" is the title of a demonstration of stereoscopic photography to be given in Hart House, January 20. This is an open meeting of the camera club, to be held in the Debates Room at 8:15.

Professor K. B. Jackson says he can make a point appear to move in the third dimension.

Professor Jackson has been active in the field of photography for a long time.

The meeting is open to all members of Hart House and their friends.

Since this is a special occasion ladies are allowed in Hart House for this meeting.

BY DAVID PEDDIE

Lillian Hellman's THE AUTUMN GARDEN is a subtle and carefully drawn picture of the decay of the gentility of the American South. She looks into the lives of eight specimen southerners who have withered and fallen since the old summer hey-days, and who are coming back to the same guesthouse every year to try to pretend for a little longer that everything is as it was. Only the dissolute and lonely Ned Crossman sees this decay and decides the time has come to break with the past, for him the strain was too much.

But the decay is revealed to the rest of them through the arrival of an old friend Nick Denery (Frederic March) who having roamed abroad pretending to be an artist comes back and tries too loudly to pretend that everything is as it was when he left. It is his interference with the others and his very coarseness that reveal them to themselves, for they realize that he merely suffers a more blatant form of their malady. Fortunately, he does not feel the pain since he has his wife to look after him and sustain both his expenses and his ego.

The German girl Sophie is the only person who wants something from life; that has the guts to face life. Miss Hellman neatly pits each of her southerners against her to show how pale and weak they look beside this tiny but vital young person. The only ones that do not look too shabby are Ned Crossman and the old lady Mrs. Mary Ellis, who belonged in the original summer hey-days.

For the others one can only feel sorry—except Nick of course; he doesn't need our pity for he has his wife and he is more the object of our laughter. Certainly Mr. March got all the laughs possible—especially in an almost pathetic seduction scene where he tries, through habit more than anything to make love to Sophie, and then passes out on the couch where she sleeps. But it is to his credit that Mr. March in an almost tearful scene with his wife has the audience sympathizing with his philandering and cheating. Nick Denery is disgusting, yet when he leaves—still the same—a noisy 'toucher' he is as likeable an old fool as one could meet.

Florence Eldridge played Rose Briggs—another almost disgusting character. Rose, a general's wife, had never been graced with brains but she was compensated with an especially long and active tongue. She refuses to take her husband and his suit for divorce seriously. She just likes to be with people, and when the realization that her weak heart is a dangerously serious matter, finally comes home to her she can only speak hesitatingly. Miss Eldridge's appeal to General Briggs for help in her invalid life to which he is not even listening had an almost unbearable pathos and irony.

It was a pleasure to see two star performers, such as Mr. March and Miss Eldridge, acting their own parts without trying to be the sole attraction of the evening as is usually the case with 'stars'. Their parts were not the biggest ones in the play and they were certainly the least sympathetic, but the Marches remained true to the author's intentions, and when not involved directly in a scene they folded themselves into the wall as any good performer should, and let the others act.

And the others could act—Laura Pierpont as Mary Ellis, Theodore Newton as Ned Crossman, Loretta Daye and Muriel Williams as the German girl Sophie and Nick's wife Nina Denery, were all excellent. These last two held their own with Mr. March in his two best scenes, the attempted seduction and his repentent morning-after.

Emily Lawrence playing Constance, the owner of the guesthouse and Nick's old girl-friend was a little monotonous. Perhaps Constance is a dull character, but so is General Briggs, and Calvin Thomas after a slow start worked on the audience's sympathy so that his very dullness became interesting.

AUTUMN GARDEN came to the Royal Alex with no ballyhoo from New York, where it seems to have had only a relatively short run. One can but speculate that it was perhaps too quietly subtle and not theatrical enough for the pampered Broadway crowd that is still flocking to see THE MOON IS BLUE.

Councillors Investigate Bursaries

Are many students forced to leave university because of lack of monye? Are there any who find the available bursaries just can't supply enough money to keep them going throughout the year?

Those are some of the question to be answered by a Student Council committee set up a month ago to investigate effects of the recent fee increase. The committee outlined the investigation it is planning in an interim report to the Council last night.

The committee is going to prepare a form which can be filled out by students who have genuine financial difficulties to be alleviated.

It is also going to find out if the various college registrars (who administer the university bursary fund) know of any cases of students dropping out of university because of lack of funds.

Committee members are going to see the University administration to try to obtain and publicize the reasons which led to the fee increase. They feel the result of this investigation will indicate that operating costs have risen in far greater proportion than the fees have risen.

The various types of financial assistance provided at the University for students in financial difficulties were also discussed. These include the $115,000 University General Bursary Fund, loan funds, funds from foundations (such as the Kellogg Foundation for Medicine and Dentistry), veterans loan funds, and money obtained from outside sources.

"Scarcely a day passes that we don't help out some student", remarked SAC Secretary-Treasurer E. A. Macdonald.

The Province of Onatrio will also be requested to give any information it might have on any good high school students who haven't been able to go to University because of lack of money.

"In drawing up any recommendations to the Council," commented the Committee's chairman, Bud Trivett, Law, "we must assume the University did not raise the fees without good reason. We cannot ask for any chance without sufficient evidence to show its need."

Science Notes

BOO!

BY JOHN REDFORD

One of the minor catastrophes in polite society occurs when a member of a party develops hiccups. The "HIC-UP" reverberates through the social atmosphere and the unfortunate victim cringes with embarrassment while sympathetic onlookers offer their ingenious methods of cure. These cures are many and varied ranging from some of the more drastic ones like sticking a finger down the victim's throat or the practical joker's method of "scaring hell" out of the hiccupper which may prostrate the poor victim for the rest of the evening.

Hiccups have distressed human beings for untold centuries. The Greek physician, Hippocrates, made several references to hiccups and in Plato's Symposium we find Eryximachus saying to Aristophanes who is suffering from hiccups during dinner, "Let me counsel you to hold your breath, and if this fails, gargle with a little water, and if the hiccup still continues, tickle your nose with something and if you sneeze once or twice even the most violent hiccup is sure to cease." Poor Aristophanes apparently was suffering from the most violent form of hiccups for he had to sneeze several times before he was cured.

Many people, however, are not so lucky in making their hiccups disappear. Sometimes hiccups may last for days, months or even years. Of course, in many cases the symptom is associated with pathological conditions. There are probably many contenders for the title of "Longest Hiccuper in History". In Canada a case of hiccups that was cured quite recently may perhaps hold the hiccuping record of this generation. A girl in Montreal hiccuped continually for almost 15 years.

Hiccups are caused by a rhythmic involuntary spasm of the diaphragm producing a rush of air against a closed glottis, the slit in the larynx closed by the vocal cords. The exact cause of this reflex phenomenon is unknown; there are probably many contenders for it in the central nervous system (disorders like brain tumors or central nervous degenerations sometimes produce hiccups) and in the nerves supplying the lungs, the stomach, and other viscera. The commonest cause is indiscretion in diet—taking highly seasoned food very hot or very cold food, or alcohol with the resultant rapid distension of the stomach.

There are many diseases associated with hiccup; one of the strangest is epidemic hiccup, a continuous violent hiccup lasting day and night that may pass through a community like measles, mumps or any other infectious disease. It is believed to be associated with a virus disease of the brain for there may be other neurological symptoms. However, although the hiccups usually subside spontaneously sometimes the victims die with little or no postmortem evidence of what killed them.

Everyone has their own guaranteed method for treating hiccups. About the most widely used one is holding the breath and breathing in and out of a paper bag. A similar principle is applied clinically by having the patient inhale carbon dioxide, and in about 60 per cent of cases the condition is relieved. Pulling sharply downward on the tongue—best done by inserting a spoon under the front of the tongue—may stop the hiccup. Expiring forcefully against a closed glottis may help in some cases. Sipping ice water, hot water or—this must appeal to a great many people—taking a teaspoon of whiskey are also said to relieve hiccups.

Finally there are the contortionist methods. The one preferred by the writer is to lean forward with a glass of water in front, insert the chin into the glass, and then with the the lips over the rim of the glass tip the head and glass forward and drink the water. In other words, "drink backwards out of a glass of water". You will probably get so frustrated trying to follow these instructions that the hiccups will stop of their own accord.

Done Her In?

Eliza Doolittle, making her debut into polite society, amazes the young Eynsford-Hill with her repartee in this rehearsal scene from Shaw's PYGMALION which opens an eight-night run at Hart House Theatre on Friday, January 18th. The players are Miriam Carscallen, Deborah Turnbull and Ricky Arnold.

Shaw's Pygmalion Victorian Romance

Hart House Theatre under director Robert Gill opens tomorrow night with George Bernard Shaw's PYGMALION — a play that was tremendously successful on stage. It reached a wider audience as a movie starring Leslie Howard and Wendy Hiller, at the same time winning ror its author an Academy Award. Hart House Theatre has already sold out both week-end performances plus two Saturday matinees for High School Students, and they are well on the way to a complete sell-out.

This argues for the popularity of the story of the poor-flower-girl, and the phonetics professor.

However, one cannot but feel that many people misunderstand the play, knowing only the movie, and they certainly have consistently and often misunderstood Shaw.

The movie ended when Eliza, the flower-girl-turned-duchess, comes back to Henry Higgins, house on Wimpole street, smiling sweetly and suggesting surrender to her master. In the play she really does leave him — not completely of course, but she no longer considers him a good marriage prospect, and her nature keeps her interest focused on marriage. However, Shaw believes that dramatic action is composed entirely of talk, and when Eliza says she is through she means it; we who believe in keeping things more to ourselves and letting something else — face or manner — tell the truth, do not believe her. Shaw had finally to write an epilogue explaining the whole situation of Eliza's marriage to the weak but devoted Freddy Eynesford-Hill.

Shaw in all his plays made use of stock theatrical characters and plots. Most often it was melodrama, that he took, but he sub-titled PYGMALION — a Romance. The hero is good-looking, clever, rich and devoted to his mother and his studies (in phonetics), as all good young romantic heroes should be. Eliza is a poor flower-girl who has somehow maintained a sainted purity throughout a sordid life in the gutter. Her father is lazy and drunken and keeps a common-law wife. He has turned his own daughter out at an early age to work for herself — as the nasty father of any good girl does in a victorian romance.

The girl rises in the best rags-to-riches tradition under the tutelage of the clever professor. She even can pass herself off as a duchess. But is is just about here that Shaw takes leave of the stage convention. He insisted right along that people on stage must be natural and talkatively frank.

By doing this, the whole Romance turns topsy-turvey, and we are treated to an abundance of laughs at the expense of the romanticized view of life that most people expect, say, from movies. Eliza and Higgins do not come together in the end. Instead the girl becomes even more than a duchess; she becomes a very poised and independent woman as she had not been before. She proves herself better and stronger than her teacher. He is not strong enough to come down off his high horse, and his devotion to his mother shows what a small boy he really is.

Shaw, as it turns out out, sympathises most with the girl, and not with Higgins. Just because Higgins has the clever lines, is no reason to suspect that he is the author. Shaw himself once said of his plays and his work; "The biggest joke is that I am serious." When he is treated seriously by actors the effect is alawys sure to be loud and uproarious. The laughs usually come easily and naturally; and that is the mark if a good comedian.

Unsung Heroes' Helpful Hints

It was felt that due to the increased interest in theatrical activities on the campus, it would be wise policy to print a few aids for the novice, who feeling perhaps that he or she has an insufficient knowledge of show-business, does not try to take an active part in it. It is to be hoped that this feature will be able to stagger through the rest of the year.

There are many unsung heroes in any theatrical enterprise and perhaps the most unsung is the stage-hand. So the first rule for anyone undertaking this very gruelling and often hazardous job —remember at all times that you are unsung. This applies especially during technical rehearsals when the director is winding himself into a trembling and imminently dangerous rage. Just when he looks like he would go off (you can usually detect a little foam on his lips)—Look Unsung. Invariably he will cool down, for realizing that you are unsung he will feel sorrier for you than for himself.

Actually on this campus we have a celebrated Master-Stage-Hand—one P. Tope. It is rumored that he served his apprenticeship under an old Folies Bergere stage-hand. He that as it may, Mr. Tope exudes unsungness the way other people breathe.

When a show actually goes "on the boards" (you will soon pick up the lingo) the stage-crew must be especially careful to follow the rules.

1.—Always remember that you do not go onto the set after the curtain has gone up. (This is very important.)

2.—When moving scenery, do not, even unintentionally knock down the leading lady—many will knock you down in return.

3.—When bracing scenery, do not screw your own foot to the stage. It delays the curtain and makes the audience restless.

4.—Never put your fist through a set pretending you could smash down walls—it may be used in the next act.

5.—Do not, before any show peek through the curtain to see if you know anyone in the audience—this right is reserved for the stage-manager, who usually has more friends anyway.

6.—Never call the stage-managers 'Red' or 'Sleepy'. It shows disrespect, and stage-managers are touchy.

Violin And Piano Wymilwood Artists Featured Sunday

The first Wymilwood concert of the term will be given next Sunday by Geza deKresz, violinist, and Norah deKresz, pianist, his wife. Both artists are well-known to the campus, playing together or in association withe cellist Boris Hambourg.

Geza deKresz is Hungarian by birth, but spent the years before the late war in Canada as a member of the faculty of the Toronto Conservatory. During the war he and his wife were trapped in Hungary while on a visit there, but since then they have returned to Canada, and have been very active in concert work here ever since.

Geza deKresz was for many years the leader of the Hart House String Quartet, and at one time concert master of the Berlin Harmonic Orchestra. His wife is English by birth, and was once accompanist to the famous singer Melba, after whom Melba Toast was named.

Sunday's program will consist of three sonatas for piano and violin: the Sonata in F minor by Bach, Sonata in B flat major, K.454 by Mozart, and Sonata in A major by Cesar Franck.

The concert will be held in Wymilwood on Sunday, January the twentieth, beginning at 9:00 p.m.

As You Like It On Thursday

Next Thursday January 24 the Liberal Arts Club at Victoria College will present the second in its series of four poetry readings. Frank Peddie, radio and stage actor in Toronto will read selections from William Shakespeare.

For next week Mr. Peddie has chosen speeches and scenes from As You Like It, Henry IV and Henry V, Richard II, Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello and several other plays.

The program begins at 8:15 p.m. at Wymilwood and is open to anyone in the university.

Pitching Sportshoes

One major league basketball game went on the record books Tuesday evening when St. Mike's A took a close one from Sr. SPS, 31-23. For the Irish, O'Connor had 11 points and Decker 10. Austen led the Engineers with 7.

Two games were played in the major loop yesterday. Arch A edged SPS IV, 23-18, with Bandola leading the scorers with 12 points. SPS VI walloped Dents C, 51-23. The big guns for Skule were Tamowski with 17 points and Prendergast who had 11.

A couple of contests were played in the minor league. Third year Eng. Bus. came on with a rush to whip Vic Ninths 32-8. Roberts was the leading scorer with six points. II Civil ran up the big count of the day when they reeled off 71 points to 16 for Vic Midgets. Hipkin showed the way with 16 tallies, followed by Hutchinson with 14 and Murphy, 12. Moote was the top man for Vic, scoring six points.

Sparked by Kidd's 8 markers, Dents A took Jr. SPS, 29-19. For Skule, Day and McFarlane and six each. Trinity C beat Pharmacy B, 25-14. Newman led the Buttery Boys with 12 points while Shane had 4 for the druggists.

In Group3 hockey, Dents A ran wild, trouncing SPS III, 12-0. Locke led, firing 4 goals. Singles went to Murcheson, Young, Darling, Cudmore, Foyler, Johnston, Martinello and Clumpus, leaving only four men, including the goalie, not to get on the score sheet. Kyle registered the shutout while his mates scored almost at will, getting 6 markers in each period.

'Bells Undefeated, Lead Loop Orphuns Play Tri-Bells Tonite

Somebody's record is going to be broken when the Varsity Orphuns hook up with Tri-Bells in the second game of tonight's basketball double bill at Hart House. Tri-Bells are undefeated and in first place while the Orphuns have lost only one, that to YMHA. They are in the second slot. However, these two have yet to meet so tonight's affair should be interesting as the Orphuns struggle to gain ground on the leaders.

The Orphuns faced West End Y last night as this was being written. The game is being played at the West End Y. gym.

The Tri-Bells, besides being undefeated in their City League games, have beaten the powerful Tilsonberg outfit, who boast such stars as Paul Thomas, Bob Phibbs, and Harry Wade, all Western Grads. The TB's also beat the New York Barons, a flashy all-Negro team. The Senior Blues beat Tri-Bells Tuesday night in a practice game 59-57, though several of the Norvtowners' players were either injured or out of town. Fred Thomas, George Wearring, and George Arnott were not in the line-up Tuesday, and if they are back the Orphuns will have to face what TB's manager, Sam Shefsky, considers the probable Canadian cage entry in the Olypics.

Jr. Vic Whip Trinity North, Jardine Star Throw Records Away!

Junior Vic demonstrated yesterday that with fight and hustle on your side, you can toss the record book out the window. The Victsters put on a free-wheeling and hard-hitting display to earn themselves a 5-1 triumph over first-place and undefeated Trinity A..

Sparked by Bruce North who was hitting with a vengeance on defensive and the offensive work of John Bond and Jardine, they kept the Buttery sextet off balance right from the opening whistle. Big North burst from the bench at the start of the second frame and proceeded to bash every white shirt in sight. It was effective. Jardine racked up a pair of goals that were beauties. One was on a breakaway from the blueline on which he came from nowhere to nab the puck and roared in on goal, deking the goalie to score. For Trinity it was Butch Bowden ad Gav alglish playing the whole game on defence.

The game started out fast and never slackened. Richardson got the first for Vic on a screened shot from the blue line that Cope never saw. Trinity tied it up in a matter of seconds. Russell and Creole going in from the face-off with Creole pulling the trigger. At 8 minutes, James counted from a goal-mouth scramble and Bond put Vic two up soon after. Towards the end of the period. Dunford put the puck in the net after a nice rush from centre but it was washed out when Vic had a man in the crease. At the end of the chapter, Creole was banished for playing without a stick but there was no scoring while he was gone.

Vic got on the tally sheet in the first minute of the second frame when Jardine tipped in Bond's goal-front pass. Jardine was away again but Whitehead dumped him and was sent to the cooler. The Trinity defence went well at this stage. Vic set a hard pace in this period and handed out plenty of hard checks. Trinity did a little hitting of their own. Richardson went off for holding in the 12th minute but Vic held. Jardine made it 5-1 with his solo dash. The Butterymen got another one by Burnett but the buzzer won the time race, leaving it five to one.

Ed Brennan

Eddie Brennan, newly returned to the Basketball Blues, goes with the team this week-end to Detroit Tech and Assumption. Eddie has been an inspiration to the team who have won both their games since his return.

Hockey JV's Open Against Waterloo

The Juniors Varsity Hockey Squard opens its intermediate schedule today at Varsity Arena, when they take on Waterloo College at 4:00 p.m. The JV's won the title last year, as they have for several years now. Waterloo is a new entry in the league.

The JV's will feature Sandy Davison at centre, and such wingmen as Jerry Henderson, Doug Dies and Bob Logie. Jim Wilkes, who played two games over the week-end for the Blues, may also be used. Coach Jack Kennedy has a strong offensive, with a wealth of good forwards, though may not be so strong defensively.

The Sportswoman

PHE I's battled their way to a 4-3 win over Meds. in a Rough-and-tumble hockey match at Varsity Arena Tuesday noon.

Physeds started the game rolling when Alma Hatch lifted the puck for a quick counter. Irene Hain stick-handled her way through a maze of arms and legs to sink a tying shot for Meds. The PHE forwards again took the initiative and banged in two goals before the first period came to a close.

The Medics tied the game once more when they sank two early in the second half, but could not click on later rushes due to the net-knowhow of PHE goalie June Collard. Physed turned the pressure on and Barb McNabb finally sank the winning tally.

Alma Hatch and Barb McNabb sank two apiece for PHE, while Irene Hain, Sally Sarles and Charmaine Dunham each scored one for Meds.

Vic I and St. Mike's I tussled to a 1-1 tie yesterday noon. The Victsters hit their stride early in the first period when June Chandler tucked one into the Irish net. The Saints skated hard but their rushes didn't pay off until the first of the second, when "B.J." Fraser raised the disc past the Vic goalie.

The third period saw both teams see-sawing for power. Therese Bauer and "B.J." Fraser were responsible for most of the double Blue break-aways but the Scarlet and Gold defence didn't give them a chance to hit the jack-pot. Barb Weatherhead and June Chandler fought hard in the scrambles, but couldn't score for Vic. Marybell Segsworth played a steady game for the Vic defence.

Trin Wins Over RIT In B-Ball

Trinity College's Buttery Boys were celebrating their centennial in a big way yesterday afternoon as they upset the Ryerson Rams right on their home court in a hair-breadth 59-58 battle. The Crumpets, who had built up a surprising early first quarter lead only to see it fade to an even-steven battle, pulled the game out of the limbo of a tie on a last minute foul shot by forward Neil Proverbs, and forty-five seconds of desperate ball ragging.

The U of T'ers surprised the home crew by grabbing an 11-9 edge in the first five minutes. However, the Technicians bounced back from their overconfidence to tie things at 15-15 by quarter. It was 29-27 at the half for the Rams and 41-40 for Trinity at three quarters, before the visitors snatched their last moment verdict, in a game that lacked nothing for excitement.

Bespectacled Bill Corbett sparked the Buttery squad with thirteen points. He got most assistance from Proverbs who swished eleven, and Roy Spencer with ten. For the Blue-and-Gold Rams, Izzy twelve each, and Bill Didych with eleven, were top sharpshooters.

Leaf In Blues' Clothing

Don Rope, hard-skating centre of the Blues' first line of Adams, Rope and Wheldrake, stands in second place in the Intercollegiate scoring race, in spite of the fact that the Blues have played one less game than the other two ranking teams, Laval and University of Montreal. With only one goal to his record before the game in Quebec and Montreal last weekend, Don caught fire against Laval and got two goals and an assist on another by Wheldrake. He repeated the performance the following night against the U. of M. Carabins by getting two more goals.

This year marks the first time that the Winnipeg native has played college hockey, and at present he seems to be set for a very successful season. Most of Don's hockey fame to date has been made with the now defunct Marlborough Seniors. In 1949-50 he played with Bobby Hassard and Chuck Blair when the Marlboroughs went on to win the Allan Cup under the guidance of Joe Primeau, the present coach of the Leafs. He also played last year with the same team, and in his junior days he lined up with St. Mike's.

Don is an Arts student at St. Mike's, where he is taking his third and final year. He may, however, carry on in Phys Ed work later. He is as keen a student as he is an athlete, and is one of the few who can bring a philosophy book along on a trip and actually study out of it—even if he has incurred the nickname of "Aristotle" from his team-mates.

Rope, who is known for his aggressiveness in any sport in which he participates, also played lacrosse and soccer for his college in the fall term. Lean and well built, he looks about 15 pounds less than his 165 pounds. He has been in the Leaf hockey organization for four years now in the capacity of a C-form holder.

After he scored his second goal at Laval Friday night, a lone wolf effort on which he deked the Quebec defencemen half way up into the stands, the fans would cry "Gardez le Rope" every time he got the puck. His colorful style of play attracts the attention of crowds who have never seen him or even heard of him before.

In spite of the after-game party which the genial Laval team threw for the Blues in which Rope showed that he could keep up with any Frenchman in other things besides hockey, his performance against Montreal Saturday was at least as good as against Laval. Players of such calibre will undoubtedly add a great deal of class and prestige to the college loop, as Varsity fans will be able to witness a week Friday when the locals open their home season against McGill.

By SHIRLEY LANE

The annual Intercollegiate Badminton Tournament is slated for February 15 and 16, and will be held in Montreal, reports Ruth Nethercott, president of the association. Each college has a team, and these teams will compete in an intramural fracas sometime in late January. The four girls who emerge triumphant from this preliminary tourney will comprise the U. of T. Ladies' Badminton Team. These are the gals who will beat the birds in Montreal next month.

Exercise being the great thing it is, and boys being an agreeable institution, the following should be of great interest to all Varsity co-eds suffering from January doldrums. Co-education badminton is available in the drill hall Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons, and Friday evenings. Ted Alexander, Badminton Club prexy, extends an invitation to all who are interested. Payment of a two dollar membership fee entitles one to play at any or all of the specified times. This club has a team of six boys and six girls who represent Varsity in District Group B competition pitting their considerable strength against clubs like the Granite, the Badminton and Raquet, and the Boulevard.

Finally here's a reminder that Varsity co-eds are invited to play badminton at St. Paul's Church every Wednesday afternoon.

Who said badminton was for the birds? It's universal!

Boszormenyi-Nagy Enthralls Audience

Bela Boszormenyi - Nagy, the well-known Hungarian pianist gave the recital last Sunday in the Hart House series. Although he apologized through a member of the music committee for not feeling well, there was no need for apology. Boszormenyi-Nagy was very much himself and no one would have noticed anything wrong.

As always, he was quite sure of himself in all he did. His efforts are deliberate and well-planned, and come off with force and precision. Though I find myself disagreeing with his readings of the classics sometimes, I know that I am up against a powerful adversary, who will probably convert me to his way of thinking if I listen to him often enough..

The program consisted of the Variations Serieuses by Mendelssohn, a group of six Moments Musicaux op. by Schubert, and the Sonata in F minor op. 5 by Brahms. The Schubert pieces were, to my mind, a little exaggerated in their treatment. These are brief, epigrammatic pieces — the musical equivalent of witticisms.

Their wit consists in strange, often abrupt modulations, and curious rhythmic distortions of the original ideas. Schubert's peculiar genius lies in the fertility of these ideas; they are brimming with life and possibilities for "distortion." Boszormenyi-Nagy made the humor of these pieces very obvious — to me, rather like saying "Get it?" after every joke. But there is no denying he made them interesting, more so perhaps than by subdued treatment.

In the Brahms, Boszormenyi-Nagy emphasized the composer's astounding technical abilities in getting the maxium sonority out of the piano. Brahms was a fine pianist, and even at the early date of this sonata had learned to write orchestrally for the piano, long before he learned to do the same for the orchestra.

The magnificent sonority of Sunday's performance was achieved, probably wisely, at the expense of some rather far-fetched thematic affinities between the movements, which look much more emphatic on paper than they sound in the concert hall.

For an encore, Boszormenyi-Nagy gave a beautifully restrained and poignantly lyrical performance of an Adagio by Mozart. Once again he showed that he is capable of playing in many styles, and that Sunday's concert did not represent the whole of his art by any means.

Christopher Helleiner.

Asian Aid A Problem Says Cavell

"If South East Asia is at the crossroads as is so often said, then so are we, because our treatment of them will influence the future of freedom in our country", Mr. R. G. Cavell told a group of students on Tuesday, in the first of a series of addresses on "The Nature and Attainment of World Peace". Cavell is administrator of Canada's Colombo Plan Committee.

Cavell emphasized the success of the Marshall Plan in Europe and pointed out that one of the difficulties of the Colombo Plan is that in Asia we are dealing with communities which have never had anything to do with industrialization. "In this country the first thing a small baby falls over is his mother's vacuum sweepers" . . . In South East Asia the orbit is the village, the plough and the bullock." The average income, he added is about $55 yearly.

The Colombo Plan, he believes, is a practical and functional approach to the problem of providing for capital development in Asia and for giving technical aid. It is a six year plan requiring six billion dollars, he said, of which not more than two billion can come from surrounding areas. The Canadian contribution for this year is 25 million dollars which will be used for agricultural and transport schemes, and to ease the colossal refugee problems. Seven million people moved into Pakistan when India and Pakistan split, and these people, he said, must be put in the way of earning a living.

Language, according to Cavell, is another major problem. There are two hundred languages in India, he said, with at least five major ones in Pakistan. Moreover, these languages are all agricultural languages and cannot translate technical words. This forces education into the field of visual aid, he said.

Cavell suggested that the best kind of industrialization at present would be co-operative villages based on agriculture. Such organization would require tools, tool technicians, power machinery for grinding grain, deeper wells with pumps to provide a pure water supply, and health and educational centres.

"Whatever kind of bread they bake will have quite a bit of freedom in the dough," he said. He ointed out the danger of "anti-Moslem flirtation" and said that due to the strength of religious, feeling in Asia democracy may "have a very different pattern than it has here: . . . but I don't think that matters very much," he added.

the frog

What a wonderful bird the frog are—
When he stand he sit almost;
When he hop, he fly almost.
He ain't got no sense hardly;
He ain't got no tail hardly either.
When he sit, he sit on what he ain't got almost.

Native Plum

Nationalism is not a bad thing in itself. It is only when taken to excess, that nationalism can be harmful. In our time, we have seen much suffering and wastage, products of the strident demands of ultranationalism.

Here in Canada, we are currently being swamped by a nationalistic tidal wave, we are shedding our inhibitions like a maple tree in October. The government is rather awkwardly substituting "Government" of Canada for "Dominion" of Canada. So now "Dominion" departments or other institutions are now being known and labelled as "Canadian" instead.

Other assertions of Canadian independence have been the abolishing of appeals to the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and the easing-away of the Westminster monopoly (unwanted in London) on Canadian constitutional amendment. These latter two moves can be easily defended, they have been long overdue.

But we can carry Canadianism too far. The speculation about a Canadian for our next Governor-General is what we mean. We think this is unwise, on a question of workability.

Advocates of a native-born Governor-General are many and quite vocal too. One appeal is to the new fashion: the dream of an independent Canada. Another is crassly economic: put crudely, it is "Why give all that money to a non-Canadian?" Then, as a clincher, supporters of the idea point to the other Dominions (if you will pardon the expression). Excepting Ceylon and Canada, native-born Governors-General hold sway.

But however, Australia presents a good example of the reason why we object to a native-born representative of the King. The present Australian Governor-General was a member of the Labour party in that country. His party affiliations raised acrimonious opposition at the time of his appointment. Now, according to a recent Saturday Night article, he is in hot water with his former political colleagues who accuse him of selling them out (on a particular issue) in return for "an all-expense trip to England", It can be seen by this example, that no matter which way a native-born Governor-General turns, his previous party connections will tend to trip him up. With an outsider as Governor-General, this dilemma and discomfort is largely prevented.

The essential thing to remember, to avoid being swallowed up in glorious nationalistic sentiment about having one of "our own people" as titular head of the state, is that the Governor-General has duties of heavy responsibility. He does much more than deliver greetings to the people at appropriate times, shake hands at functions, or open bazaars and Parliament.

The Governor-General, as a man, may be called upon to exercise his judgment when the government of the country is in doubt. When party leaders must turn to arbitration because their strengths are too equal, the Governor-General is the final arbiter. What is more, the Governor-General's responsibilities, according to Bagehot's classic statement, include the "three rights—the right to be consulted, the right to encourage, the right to warn." This is the sovereign's position in the British system, and Governor-General is "sovereign" of Canada, as representative of the crown.

These responsibilities make it absolutely necessary that the titular head of the state be free from bias and partisan coloration. This is why it is unwise to grant the prestige plum to various Canadians who have been suggested, worthy as they may be. Almost any man, important enough to be considered, would have picked up party connections on his way.

If the present well-meaning but misguided nationalism does plant a native Canadian in Rideau Hall, there is great possiblity that the highest position in the nation will become besmirched. And the most nationalistic Canadians would surely be the first to agree that the alleycat flavor of party-politics should never surround the head of our less hysterical nation.

Tea With TS

Between shifts at the Dockland Settlement with the Cockneys in East-End London, the writer, William Glenesk, III Emmanuel, managed an afternoon with T. S. Eliot. The last of two articles.

BY WILLIAM GLENESK

"American films have created a fantastic picture of American life", said Mr. Eliot, as he humped up into his chair, an urbane twinkle in his eye. I was shocked at the poet's confidential, almost benevolent musing answers to my questions. The poet saw the art of film as a potent force in moulding a country's cultural life. But like literature, it has become a commodity, and the investment risk limits the quality of appeal. Experiments like the feature-length film of Murder in the Cathedral are too great a leap in the dark for producers unless the play is known. From films we moved to the critic's task.

"Just what is the primary function of the critic, in literature, the theatre, the art gallery or the music hall?" I asked. To explain the question, I introduced The Varsity and the hail of doubts in the minds of its readers in past years. Mr. Eliot slowly slipped off his horn-rims and levelled his gaze at mine. "The critic . . . ought to know what his prejudices are", he remarked, "that his judgment may be as true as possible." The function of criticism he held was to interpret works of art, and to educate the public taste. But interpretation is only legitimate when it is not really interpretation, but presenting facts of the case which he otherwise would have missed.

Somehow he wandered into history, and the problem of interpreting events. Eliot sided strongly with Arnold Taynbee that all history was interpreted. "Reading these seemingly objective historians can be dangerous," he said. "I find Macaulay and Gibbon the safest historians to read because their bias is most evident." Critic Eliot went on at length on the fallacy of objectivity, when I saw the door open and a [illegible] tea poked in, held in suspense while Mr. Eliot went on talking, and then was withdrawn, and door closed.

Last of the line of questions was the meaning and reading of The Hollow Men. "What is the tone and mood that pervades the verse?" I asked as the clock was striking four, and I read the first part. Mr. Eliot got up at this stage, and stepped over to take the book. "Like this", he said, "with a dominant note of emptiness and pathos." Then he re-read the lines with his measured linear inflections and resonant tones voice. "Have you heard my Harvard recording?" he asked. I replied that I had not, and he suggested I hear them when back in Canada. I turned to the last lines of The Hollow Men, "How are these to be read, Mr. Eliot, in rhythm and tempo?"

The poet, critic and publisher took the book once more, "These are read with an air of exhaustion," and he read:

"For Thine is Life is
For Thine is the

This is the way the world ends
This is the way the world ends
This is the way the world ends
Not with a bang but a whimper."

"I was very glad to have you come," Mr. Eliot smiled, and held out his hand. The poet had missed his tea.

Bottle Delivery

Editor, The Varsity:

The article entitled "Bottle Bedlam" scarcely lives up to statement in another section which says that you "attempt to present only the truth." Early in the fall it was brought to the attention of your correspondents that there had been a slight lapse in the admirable institution of "Bottle Rolling."

A conscientious research was made into the rules of this highly artistic and skillful pastime. Certain features of the game were not even mentioned in "Bottle Bedlam" . . . a glaring oversight which we heartily deplore and intend to rectify.

Prime consideration must be given to the method of delivery. A windmill action with underhand delivery is the most popular . . . and accurate. However, to the experts of the game, it is the daring overhand throw which appeals. The advantages are obvious. Although not as accurate as the 'windmill', the overhand style enables the delivery to be made with terrifying force and speed. If the hurler throws true, the shatering impact and the resultant debacle are unimaginably horrific and complete.

We come now to the rule which imparts to the game the aura of sobriety and intellectuality and which is demanding of great skill on the part of the roller. Sometime after the delivery, and before the moment of impact, it is necessary to cry "BORT" with all the volume and resonance one can muster. Failure to do so disqualifies the participant from further action that night.

Undoubtedly the Great Bottle Roll of 1914 was the successful culmination of years of practice, but it is NOT unmatchable! The Art of Bottle Rolling has for a few years lapsed into obscurity . . . but not oblivion. It is with pride that we, the Bottle Rollers of Trinity College, announce that once again the crashing and tinkling of bottles may be heard in the halls. Given time and practice perhaps this year will see the old record fall.

Efforts so far have been hampered by an appreciable lack of hard-wearing bottles, nevertheless three games have been held since autumn. The last and biggest took place in the Main Hall after the Founders Day Dinner with the point of contact strategically situated outside the Provost's door. It is possible that the Roll of '14 will remain as the record for some years — that may be. But let us not a say that this ancient and honorable tradition is — bitter word — defunct!

Excuse us for a moment please . . . .

BORT!!!

FM, AM, Any Kind Of Radio

Editor, The Varsity:

It was encouraging to read a letter last Friday by two students who were interested in establishing a radio station on the campus. I wish to add to their ideas by some suggestions of my own.

As they mentioned Queen's University has a radio station. The University of Alberta operates CKUA in Edmonton. Besides many universities in the United States operate their own stations

It is very difficult to obtain permission to establish additional AM outlets in the Toronto area. If permission were obtained it would either be limited to the daylight hours or a very inferior frequency. However, it would do no harm to investigate the possibilities of getting a license for an AM station.

The alternative would be an FM station, which should not be difficult to set up here, as the FM band is not overcrowded. There are a large number of FM sets in this area. From conversations with owners of FM sets, I have learned that they have purchased them in order to listen to FM stations which do separate programing from the ordinary AM outlets. There are stations in Buffalo, Niagara Falls, N.Y., Hamilton and Toronto. An additional station in Toronto should promote the sale of FM sets. Besides promoting FM it would give training in both the technical and production end of radio, a training which is very limited now.

We could make use of our dramatic talent. There are two sources of classical records at the University, — the Hart House and Carnegie collections which would probably be available. Popular records should be readily available for private individuals. The building of the transmitter by our own students would be a considerable saving.

On a basis of my suggestions it is evident that the establishment and operation af an FM radio station would be both inexpensive and practical.

Where To Share?

Editor, The Varsity:

For the past three days I have been carrying a dollar in my purse, just dying to give it to SHARE. I have looked through the advertisements in The Varsity without being able to find any information as to where I can give my contribution. I have read that canvassers are supposed to approach every students but since University College is so large it seems impossible that all the students will be canvassed.

Perhaps if there were a central place, for example the UC Rotunda, where we could bring our contribution more people would donate to SHARE.

This is such an important project that it seems a pity that there aren't enough facilities for student donations.

Society Decision

CHARIOT CLASSIC BACK

Critics Numerous But Race Repeats For Dance Blurb

The Engineering Society last night voted unanimously to hold their annual chariot race for the Jerry P. Potts Trophy, with all bodies who are represented on the Students' Administrative Council eligible to enter one chariot.

The decision to operate the event, for publicity for the Skule At-Home this year followed a lengthy discussion. It was pointed out that criticism had resulted from last year's race, in particular in The Varsity.

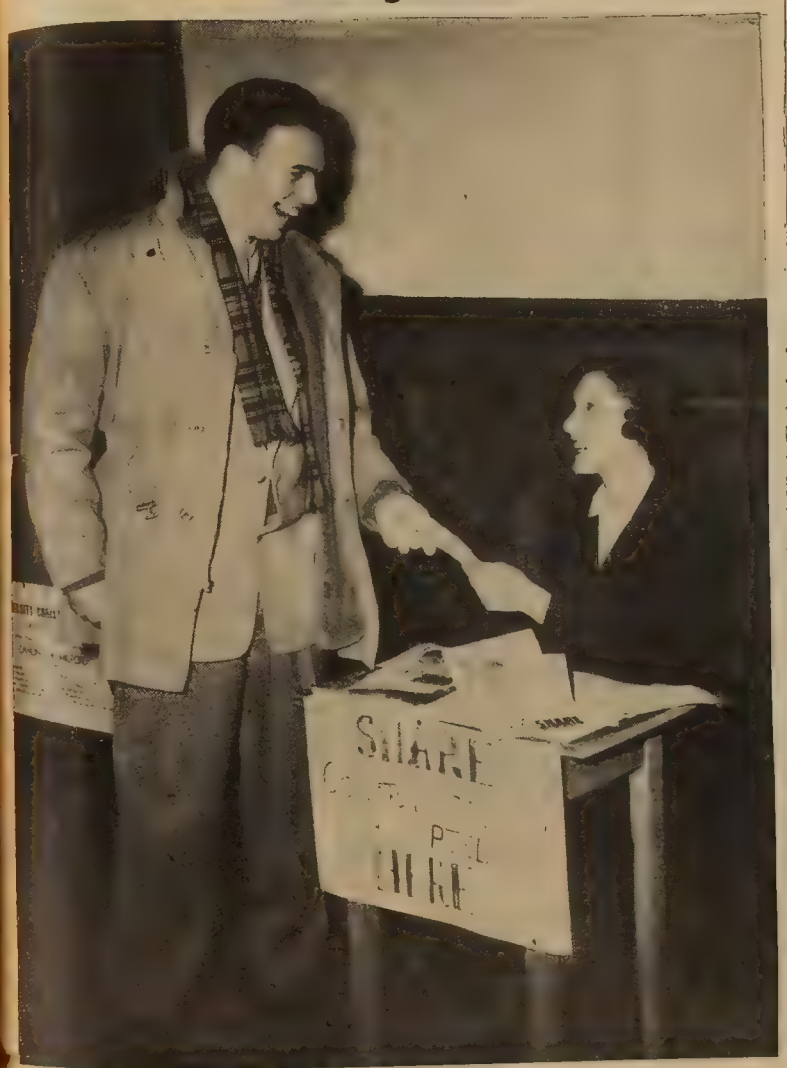
Several members recalled the "farce" of last session, where entries from other organizations were "forcibly ejected" from the race, and an engineering chariot won the Skule-sponsored event.

Doug Sherk (IV) and Eng. Soc. President, suggested that "This year the hell-raising be organized". The Society will guarantee each entry a fair start.

The race, to be held Thursday, Jan. 24, promises to be better organized that the last. All entries must register with the Society office before 5 p.m., Jan. 22, and each registration must be accompanied by a $1.00 fee, to be donated to SHARE.

In the discussion regarding what organization should run the race, Jim Drummond (IV), said that "The Blue and White Society should run the race, and the Eng. Soc. would, therefore, evade the responsibility for any damage caused to borrowed chariots," usually push-carts of a variety.

Lois De Groot (IV), criticized the request, condoning the SAC operating similar activities by arranging them through endless committees and sub-committees.



Suggestions as to the character of the race ranged from operating it in conjunction with the coming blood-donor campaign (having in the mind the violence of other years) racing street cars up and down College Street.

The Society last night agreed to vote a $1.00 per ticket subsidy for the Grad Ball tickets following a heated discussion. Several members questioned the fate of sums appropriated from year-card sales for the Ball. The subsidy, which will total $400, approximately, was moved by Paul Hutchison, (IV), and was finally carried by a 10 to 4 vote.

Sherk announced an Engineering Institute of Canada meet in Hart House on Feb. 7. He pointed out that both undergrads of Skule and

This is SHARE Campaign week, the week when everyone is expected to contribute to Student Help for Asian Relief and Education. However, some people are having trouble finding ways to get rid of their money. They can't find SHARE canvassers to give their dollar. But in Vic there is no problem, since a constantly-manned (or womanned) desk sits outside Alumni Hall, ready to take any donation offered.

Strike Threatens

University College women were faced with a strike threat Wednesday night when the executive said it would walk out unless there was an increase in attendance at the Women's Undergraduate Association open meetings.

The meeting on Wednesday night was replaced by an informal discussion when only 15 UC co-eds turned out and the WUA lacked a quorum. WUA President Marg Fleming said yesterday that it was unlikely that there would be an executive strike until after the Arts ball.

The subject of personal SHARE canvassing of UC women was raised at the informal discussion. Several of the canvassers criticized the present system and suggested that canvassers should wear tags or some other form of identification. Miss Fleming said that a booth for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education contributions would be set up in the UC Rotunda.

McGill Debaters Ask Big 5 Meet

Montreal — (CUP) — A McGill University Model Parliament meet, reportedly attended by several Montreal anti-subversive squad detectives, recently voted 73 to 49 accepting a bill favoring a Big Five Conference for the purpose of negotiating a mutually satisfactory settlement of the cold war.

The bill, proposed by the Labor Progressive Government and amended by the Progessive Conservatives also advocated the banning of atomic weapons, the simultaneous and immediate reduction of armaments under strict international control and inspection by the United Nations.

Led by Tim Buck, national Labor-Progressive Party (Communist) head, the Government was unsuccessful in its attempt to pass the bill as tabled.

The anti-subversive detectives in the McGill Union Ballroom reportedly were equipped with notebooks and watched the students, making special notes of those who voted for some sub-amendments and who applauded for certain speakers.

"Rearmament", Buck said, "is bad for Canada and bad for Canada's people, for it tends to turn this country from industrialization to the exploitation of its natural resources in the interest of the United States. It is only by fathering our own industrial development in an era of peace that Canada can attain those high goals set forth by the late Sir Wilfred Laurier."

Two sub-amendments were proposed from the floor by Independent members, one advocating the immediate admission of Communist China to the U.N., and another favoring de facto recognition of that country only after the establishment of peace in Korea. Both were defeated.

Lack Of Contribution Takers Remedied Soon for SHARE

Yesterday in a leter published in The Varsity a student complained that she wanted to contribute to the Student Help To Asian Relief and Education, but did not know to whom she could give her money or where. The same day a member of the University teaching staff came into The Varsity office with the same problem. In an explanation for other people having difficulty, the Chairman of the SHARE Executive Committee, Tim Armstrong, said:

"Contributions will be accepted throughout the week in the Students' Administrative Council office and in the UC Lit." The response to the campaign was encouraging, added Armstrong, saying that he hoped the campaign will reach its objective.

According to William Corbett, III Trinity, the following items were sold at a Trinity College auction yesterday: a Miss SHARE, a cat, a bottle of vodka which anyone could taste before bidding, a radio not functioning at the time of the auction, but which might be repairable for an estimated amount of $14, and an SAC pennant which was purchased by a high school student who burned it immediately. The auction netted about $70 said Corbett, adding that to receipts from the canvassing are about $200.

Earl Scott, II SPS, reported that Skule donations averaged between 75c and a $1. per student.

"There has not been a great deal of money turned in, but of the twenty-eight male canvassers only two turned in their collections," said Chuck Hanley, III UC, in charge of the men's canvassing. He added, "We will continue the canvassing next week too. It is impossible to contact everybody this week, and the reception was not too warm." A desk will be set up in UC rotunda for convenience.

McGill Leads In Disaster Victims Ward

Montreal — (CUP) — An atomic bomb disaster casualty ward, the first of its kind in Canada, will be constructed in the basement of new $2,300,000 wing of the Montreal Neurological Institute.

The Institute, an integral part of McGill University, works in close connection with the Royal Victoria Hospital here, the McGill Medical School, and medical experts from Chalk River. The casualty ward will be in a self-contained area the basement of the new wing, and much of it will be hewn out of solid rock. A special blast wall will protect the exposed side.

Financing of the Institute is made possible through ever-increasing donations from dominion and provincial governments, and the contributions of many Montreal families.

Provost Seeley

BY PEARL PARNES

In 1945 the Reverend Dr. R S. K. Seeley came to Trinity College. As well as becoming Provost of the college, he was made Honorary Freshman of the Class of 4T9. His two black spaniels, Dumbo and Bambi, were the unofficial mascots.

Now Provost Seeley has "graduated", (he actually graduated from Cambridge University in England), and his two dogs now are Dillon, a true Irish animal who came out from Ireland by himself when he was ten weeks old, and the famous Ambrose, a dignified, impressive Canadian bulldog "who just looks fierce".

The Provost was born in England, attended Marlborough College, and then Christ's College at Cambridge. He graduated in classics and theology. He became Chaplain of St. John's College at Cambridge, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bristol, acting as Organizing Secretary for the Cambridge Mission to Delhi, 1936-38.

In 1938 he came to Canada as Professor of Exegetical Theology at St. John's College in Winnipeg, an arts college of the University of Manitoba. He moved to Kingston in 1943 as Rector of St. George's Cathedral, lecturing in philosophy at Queen's University. Then, in 1945, he became Provost of Trinity College at the University of Toronto.

Provost Seeley has published several books. The last dealt with the Function of the University. "I admit that I have never learned to a class of more than 160 students, but I regard any lecture as a failure if I have failed to evoke any discussion from the students."

"My experience is that the most valuable interchange of ideas takes place in the early hours of the morning in these sessions when the cares of the day are over and one pulls the universe to pieces with that ease and nonchalance which only the undergraduate can assume."

The student must learn to evaluate the place of his profession "in the total environment of human living, which involves poetry as well as fact, beauty as well as utility, spaciousness of thought as well as practicality," the Provost believes.

The Provost is noted for his liberal views. He is chairman of the Civil Liberties Association, and firmly supports the right of each man to his own opinion. One of the famous examples was the visit of the so-called "Red Dean" of Canterbury to the University. All the other colleges had turned down the request for a room, and it was Trinity that finally granted the Dean a place to speak.

A list of positions held by the Provost includes President of the Ontario Classical Association in 1946, President of the Classical Association of Canada in 1947. Chairman of Canadian Association of Youth Service Organizations in 1948, Colonial Service Liason Officer for Canada, and Chairman of the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs since 1950.

Balloon Bursting Battle In SHARE Skating Show

Several games and a variety of prizes donated by city firms will feature the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education skating party, party chairman Scott Simon, II Arts, said yesterday. The party is to be held in Varsity Stadium Monday evening, Jan. 21.

The prize list includes free tickets for both Maple Leaf hockey games and the coming skating carnival, as well as items donated by Simpson's, the Promenade Music Centre and certain other companies. Said Simon, "This is SHARE'S last big event, and we want to make it good."

There will be a chance for everyone to win a prize. Simon continued. There will be a balloon fight, with the prize going to the owner of the last unburst balloon, a spot-prize for the skater in the proper place, another for the winning girl in a "Musical Kneegh" contest, a door prize draw, and several others, he said. Among tentative plans are interfaculty competitions or even a "Battle of the Sexes."

Even a continuance of the current thaw or a snowball too heavy to clear will not upset the plans, Simon said. He explained that if the ice is not usable the party will be postponed to Tuesday night or if necessary to the following Monday or Tuesday, and notification printed in The Varsity.

The tickets, which will cost fifty cents each, are on sale now in the Students' Council offices in University College and Hart House and will be available at the door.

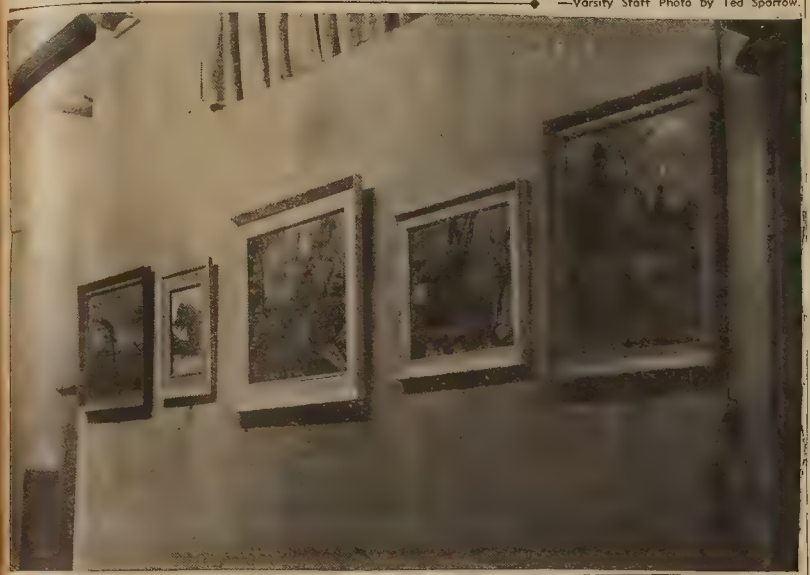
Martino Resigns Seek Successor

"Martino has apparently taken us in again" was the comment of Paul Forrestell, IV St. Mike's, at the SAC meeting last night when the council was told that Rocky Martino had resigned as director of the Round Table discussions for the Radio Committee.

Radio chairman Doug Waite said that without the Round Table Discussions over CKEY, the committee's program consists of 15-minute broadcasts over CJRT-FM at Ryerson Institute. He said that news editor Harry Rasky of CKEY still hoped that it would be possible to have the round-table discussions but had rejected a panel of speakers proposed by Waite and asked for "more secular" speeches. Waite said that he was reluctant to change the topic as he "didn't want to give the boys anything they didn't know about."



Waite asked for help from the debating union in securing speakers and said that he also hoped to get a list of last year's speakers from Rasky to use in contacting people. He added that lack of scripts was the main drawback, in dramatic productions.

Martino reported that the Christmas programme which he produced was a great success and as a result of this programme he had received two offers of radio time for dramatic productions from CHUM and CKFH.

The council passed an ammendment by Forrestell which provided for the appointment of a new director for the discussions instead of dropping the discussions as recommended by the radio committee report. Bud Trivett, II Law, said that the discussions should be continued as if they were dropped it would be difficult to secure radio time next year and the only way to train a director was by giving that person experience.

Liberals Down In Defeat On Resale Pricing Bill

In a flurry of confusion regarding parliamentary rules, the Liberal government of the Mock Parliament last night was defeated on a bill which would make resale price maintenance illegal. Meeting in the Ontario Legislative Chamber, the Progressive Consevative opposition defeated a combined Liberal-CCF roll-call vote after the government whip had failed to include his name on the list of party members. When the vote was called, the CCF whip went to the spectators' gallery and brought in another member, causing the Tory members to object and ask for a roll call vote. After some debate, the speaker Don Featherstone ruled that a roll call vote would be taken. The roll call not only excluded the CCF recruit but also the Liberal whip and another Liberal member.

The three LPP members who had voted with the government previously left the house before the vote on the third reading. This resulted in the government being finally beaten by a vote of 29-26. John Medcoff, II UC, then resigned as Prime Minister.

Earlier, a motion by Phelps Bell (a Conservative member) was declared out of order. He proposed that Canada should annex the United States of America. However, the house unanimously passed a motion supporting the SHARE campaign on the campus.

When the Mock Parliament sat as a committee of the whole on the act regarding resale price maintenance, the Conservative opposition defeated the first clause of the bill which defined the word "dealer." Conservative leader Paul Forestall said that they felt the word "person" should be substituted for "dealer", but Prime Minister Medcoff accused the opposition of "obstruction." Medcoff said the Conservatives might as well try to filibuster, as any clause defeated while the House was in committee was not considered as a want of confidence in the government.

Most of the debate centered around the alleged big profits on "aspirins and soda pop."

The CCF amendment which allowed the government control of resale prices if the "small dealer" was suffering under the act was accepted by the Liberals and later defeated.

Liberal Leader Medcoff was the only man of the four campus party leaders present, and the Liberals were the only party to fill their allotted seats. Only three of the nine LPP seats, and twenty-nine of the thirty-six PC seats were filled.

Hillel Speaker Sees Iranian Oil As Biggest Western Blunder Yet

"The Anglo-Iranian squabble over the Abadan oil refineries is a more dangerous situation that the Korean war," said Pierre Van Passen, author, lecturer, and journalist, speaking in the Museum Theatre in the Hillel Jajor Lecture series last night.

"The solution of the Iranian oil affair is an indication determining the trend of world affairs," Van Passen continued. "The only reason that Russia did not occupy Iran and neighboring countries was that she feared the military might of the United Nations," he added.

"Thus," said Van Passen, "the acute danger in the Middle East comes not from the Soviet Union, but from the Arab peoples themselves." The speaker went on to claim that if there is no improvement in the economic condition of the masses there will be a "terrible explosion" before a year is over without the consideration of Russia. Van Passen believes that the duty of the Western world is to begin without delay a detailed plan of "moral armament."

Van Passen sees the coming revolution in Africa and Asia as a protest against the misery and exploitation of centuries. Our part, he believes, is to direct this revolutionary spirit into creative channels, while it may still be democratically inspired.

Education, health, land and the landless, are some of the measures suggested by Van Passen which might have made China our ally today and which we must soon employ if the peoples of the Near East are not to become communistic. In the speaker's opinion, an upsurge of freedom and prosperity in backward areas of the world would strike a harder blow at the Kremlin than would the Atlantic Pact.

Mr. Van Passen believes that the spearhead of a drive for a more humane civilization has already appeared in the east. He referred to the development of Israel as "the most hopeful thing in the world today." In the miraculous rebirth of the state against adverse conditions, Van Passen sees the beginning of the redemption of mankind, for "man may draw on the divine power for fulfilment of dreams if they are righteous." He cited Israel as a land in which free enterprise is harmonious with advanced collectivism. This he believes can be a lesson for sociologists, economists, and the entire world.

Slow-Down By Waiters At Acadia

Wolfeville, N.S.—(CUP) — Student gourmets at Acadia University were caught off guard recently, as dining-hall waiters staged a slowdown during the noon meal. The waiters, also students at the university, had been nursing a feeling of resentment over a period of several weeks, due to restrictions being imposed on waiting techniques. The final incentive to the slow-down came when the waiters were told to slow the pace down and lessen the noise. At a caucus meeting they decided that the meal would be slowed down to a ridiculous degree. This antagonized the head waiter into laying off forty waiters.

Objections that the lay-off constituted a breach of contract were raised by the waiters. With the Dean of Men acting as conciliator, agreements as to procedure were reached. The next morning the waiters were all back on the job.

Will the quartets who are going to compete in the All-Varsity Quartet Contest please submit application forms at the Warden's office, Hart House, by 25th January. Blank forms may be obtained at the Warden's office.

ART GALLERY

The present exhibition in the Gallery is composed of work by Faculty and Graduate members of Hart House and will remain on view until Sunday, 20th January. The Gallery is open to members of the House between the hours of 12.00 noon and 7.00 p.m. Monday to Friday and to WOMEN OF THE UNIVERSITY from 4.00 to 5.00 p.m. EVERY WEDNESDAY.

CAMERA CLUB OPEN MEETING

All members of Hart House are invited to attend the Open Meeting of the Camera Club on Sunday next, 20th January, at 8.15 p.m. in the Debates Room. Professor K. B. Jackson, Department of Physics, will give an exhibition of Stereoscopic Photography — "Your other eye is more than a spare". This being a "special occasion" members may be accompanied by ladies.

The Thirtieth Annual Exhibition of Photographer arranged by the Hart House Camera Committee will be held from 18th February to 2nd March. Closing date for entries is Friday, 15th February. Entry forms are now available at the Hall Porter's desk. All members of Hart House are eligible to enter.

ARCHERY CLUB

Shooting in the Canadian Indoor Mail Match began yesterday—and will continue for six weeks. The Sixteenth Archery Tournament will be held on Friday, 25th January at 8.00 p.m. in the C.O.T.C. Drill Hall, 119 St. George Street. The return Shoot with O.A.C. will take place in the Rifle Range on Thursday, 31st January at 8.00 p.m. All members of Hart House are welcome to attend.

Ah! Wilderness Sans Hommes

"Men, dammit, MEN! I need men!" screamed Dorothy Lieberman, chairman of the External Affairs Commission Weekend committee.

"Does Caledon Hills Farm belong to the Women's Union or does it belong to Hart House? Or are the boys afraid they will get their feet cold, maybe?"

The Weekend Committee is planning to share this coming weekend at Caledon with men from the Ontario College of Agriculture and girls from MacDonald Institute (Home Economics). Lots of Toronto girls have applied, according to Miss Lieberman, but they would still like six or seven more men.

"A number of the people going up intend to spend Saturday skating. There is also excellent skating near the farm. Saturday night we hope to have a square dance with cider, and on Sunday a movie. And of course there are excellent records at the farm all the time. What is wrong with men anyway?"

The farm, situated nine miles from Brampton in the heart of the famous Caledon skiing district, is owned by Hart House. The 100-year-old building has been put in shape through the united efforts of the members.

If any men have been stung into action, they can leave their names and phone numbers at the SAC office, or contact oDrothy Liebermman at LA 0179.

Year Book Boss Says Sales Slump

Unless signed space contracts are handed into Torontonensis by January 21, many clubs and groups on the campus might be left out of the yearbook, according to Editor Walt Mackenzie, IV Dents. He explained that because of the shortage of paper Torontonensis has to order the amount required by the middle of the month. This means that Mackenzie has to know how many pages there will be in Torontonensis.

Mackenzie told the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night that this was also why they should have sold the bulk of the books ordered by January. Only approximately 500 copies had been sold by Christmas and only six out of 30, fraternities, and one club had returned space contracts. Mackenzie said that the situation was now somewhat improved as approximately another 300 copies had been sold and almost half of the fraternities had returned contracts.

Applications for space have also been received from Dentistry, Emmanuel, Nursing, St. Joseph's, Loretto, and St. Hilda's, he said.

It would be pretty hard to try to convince anybody that most newspapermen are intellectual giants. There is daily evidence that suggests otherwise, despite John Fieran and Franklin P. Adams. But most newspapermen are reasonably clued-up, because their job depends on their knowing things

Hollywood, of course, has its own idea of what a newspaperman is like. A lot of it is inherited from The Front Page, of course. So usually you get a guy, hat on back of head, brim up, cigaret dangling from lip, while a blonde murderess hides in a roll-top desk. (This is an elaboration on The Front Page, I admit, but I have gone through a wash of tragedies written by a crew-cut ex-Marine with a .45 Colt lying beside his typewriter.)

But in CLOSE TO MY HEART (University), the film that started this ranting about journalistic minds. Ray Milland is no cocky scoop reporter who flaunts ethics. He is neat, conservative, wears tailored-suits, has a convertible coupe and a wife (Gene Tierney) who wears Peggy Cassini clothes. With all this, the fact remains, newspaper columnist Milland sure is clue-less.

This is one of these problem pictures, the problem being adoption. Milland and Tierney are a childless couple. This doesn't bother him much as it does her. Finally they decide on adoption. But the waiting list at the adoption agency are two-years long.

Then enters a foundling, a youngster named Danny. Finally, after working all kinds of frustrated mother love on the youngster, Tierney (mother has to get the child or work herself into a tizzy. (But that is the problem that we are protected from.)

Milland is not so struck on the idea A certified child from the agency, fine, he says. But a foundling, how could we know? Maybe there's "bad blood" somewhere in the antecedents. The case of another adopted child going wrong is cited. High genetics would have set the columning newspaper columnist here, but CLOSE TO MY HEART must teach him, along with perhaps a large majority of moviegoers, the ABC's of heredity.

Being a columnist, and not backward in using his space for trying to get information about the parentage of Danny, Milland engages in detective work. He finds that the mother was a school teacher who killed herself, and the father is a condemned murderer, a "monster" according to Milland.

But the ending is happy, and Milland is straightened out, not so much by learning about heredity as much as by reasoning himself that the father is so evil, that the kid must be all right. (What would happen if the father had some good and bad in him?)

The director is William Keighley, who is mentor of Lux Radio Theatre. It is much too easy to throw the label of "soap opera" at this, but one bedroom conversation is paced and framed in pulsating undertones in the best "Life Is Beautiful" manner.

Still CLOSE TO MY HEART is quite engrossing and the early part of the film with its depiction of casual domesticity, involving a puppy, is fine. Fay Bainter, Howard St. John, Mary Beth Hughes are others involved.

In my comment on ROYAL JOURNEY, the National Film Board color film of the Royal Visit, I stated the process used was Kodacolor. This is erroneous, apparently the process is new and called Ektacolor. What is more important is that ROYAL JOURNEY is making box-office hay—which is a wonderful boost for the long-maligned NFB.

By the way, if the current version of MARIA CHAPDELAINE comes around your neighborhood, "dee-sist" from going, as Porkypine might say. Made in England with an Anglo-Gallic cast topped by Michele Morgan, Kieron Moore and others, it is sheer travesty.

I don't know what happened to Louise Hemon's appealing story, but Lorenzo Suprenal turns out to be a runaway gangster, Francois Paradis is an unsympathetic Don Juan to whom Maria is merely "a pair of pretty eyes and a smile". And Edwige Legaree, who strained so slightly at the stumps in the novel is re-named Robert and played by Richard Watling with a beard and fur coat. Watling was the young tennis-player in QUARTET. You expect him to say "Tennis, anyone" any moment now.

The French-Canadians from Samuel Chapdelaine down, excepting Maria (Morgan) and her mother (Francoise Rosay), speak with English accents, despite their dogsleds and fur coats. And young brother Pet-be is called Tibby, just to round things out. And you should see the men from the bush paddle their canoes—like maidenly high school teachers roughing it in the woods. Os, maudit Anglais!

Figaro's Staging Scores Hit

The performance of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" by the CBC Opera Company under Nicholas Goldschmidt last Wednesday evening was an event I won't soon forget. I cannot remember hearing a more brilliant performance of any opera on the radio.

Cutting an opera that takes nearly four hours in a full stage performance to fit into something less than two and a half is a difficult task. On Wednesday, three of the commonly performed arias were omitted, and a few repeats in the last two acts were not observed. However, all the essential "Figaro" was there: the overture, the lovely little Italian songs, and the dramatic ensembles.

It would take more space than is available to write a full appreciation of this wonderfully vivacious performance. Here are a few things that struck me especially. The orchestra, for instance played as one sometimes hopes orchestras would play. The phrasing of the strings was such a joy to listen to that sometimes I found myself forgetting the voice parts and listening to the accompaniment.

And the singers, of course. Unfortunately, Marguerite Gignac's voice loses a lot of its distinctive character on the radio, but her artistry made up for that. And some of the other singers (such as Louise Roy and Ernest Adams) come across exceptionally well. I thought casting William Morton as Don Curzio, the stuttering notary, was a particularly happy idea. His somewhat shrill voice came out in the third-act sextet, and gave his small part an entirely new life to me.

The CBC, especially the technical staff who looked after this production, reserves a whole bouquet of orchids for a magnificently successful effort.

Reform In Society Within Scandinavia Impresses Hendry

Canada would do well to follow the leadership of Scandinvian countries in the use of United Nations the leadership of Scandinavian countries in the use of United Nations aid for the advancement of social conditions. This was the conclu E. Hendry, Director of the University of Toronto School of Sosion reached by Professor Charles versity of Toronto School of Social Work in an informal talk to the United Nations Club yesterday.

Recently returned from a tour of Finland, Sweden, Denmark and Germany, Professor Hendry was very much impressed by the spirit with which the smaller democracies are using citizenship participation in their social policy.

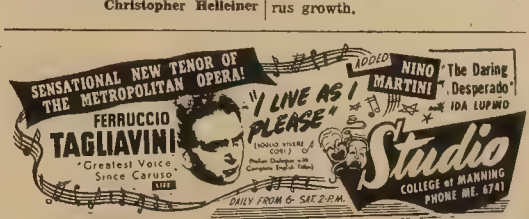
In Copenhagen the world's most up-to-date housing projects and municipal camps for children run by the Board of Education are typical examples of conditions found all over northern Europe. Professor Hendry said that slums are almost unknown.

In Finland reconstruction is taking place extensively. The people here feel that just as the United Nations is rebuilding the bridges of the country, so it is helping to bridge the differences between nations. Child and material welfore are stressed in Finland, said Professor Hendry, describing the country as having impressive solidarity.

In the field of education, especially in Denmark, much is being done to train young people for political leadership, regardless of party affiliations, reported Hendry. The general impression of Scandinavia is that "few people have too much, but fewer have too little."

In Germany students are active in building the Free University of Berlin. Super-modern structures are rapidly taking the place of wartime rubble, he said. In the opinion of some West Germans, too many people are fleeing from East Germany instead of staying to fight.

Much of this progress is financed by the UN. Professor Hendry feels that Canada could achieve a great deal in the field of welfare with similar aid.



Professors Push Polio Progress

Polio research studies at the University of Toronto under Dr. Andrew J. Rhodes, Professor of Virus Infections, will be continued under a March of Dimes grant of $54,850, it was announced jointly yesterday by Basil O'Connor, President of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, and Dr. Sidney E. Smith, President of the University of Toronto.

Under the March of Dimes grant, Dr. Rhodes and his associates will complete their work of producing an anti-serum rich in polio antibodies. During the past year, antiserum produced in monkeys against one type of polio virus has been effective in protecting mice against paralyzing doses of the same type of polio virus.

The researchers plan to continue such studies of passive immunity and to conduct tests to determine how long such immunity persists. In addition they will try to increase the yield of polio virus grown in test-tube cultures of nonnervous tissues, and investigate various factors which may influence an increased virus yield.

Such conditions as composition of nutrient media, aeration, temperature, hydrogen ion concentration and type of tissue cells will be studied in order to determine ideal conditions for maximum virus growth.

Hockey JV's Win Four For Holden

By BRUCE NORTH

There was slaughter in Varsity Arena yesterday afternoon. Taking a page from last year's book, the Intermediate Hockey Blues waltzed to a 15-3 victory over Waterloo College. Last season the Blues defeated the Waterloo boys 14-2.

Ross Holden not only went one better than the hat trick, he scored three of his four goals within 16 seconds. On the basis of this performance alone, Holden was the outstanding player. Rightwinger Lawson wasn't far behind. He lit the lamp three times, a feat which in any ordinary game would have topped everything. Logie and Bodnar each scored two. Logie whacked one of his in while he was still on his knees.

Klym accounted for all three Waterloo goals. He appeared to be about the only bonafide hockey player that the boys in yellow and black had.

All three Varsity forward lines looked good. It was obvious from watching them yesterday that the JV's will have no trouble this year offensively. However, the defence had a tendency to let the opposing forwards get behind them for a clear shot. This was especially notable on Klym's last goal when he tock a pass just inside the red line and went in all alone to deke Bates. The defencemen were inside Waterloo's blueline waiting for a chance to score.

Waterloo were a total loss. They must have had their pre-game pep talk in the KCR. Except for goalie Binnhammer the score would probably have read 20-3. However the reason didn't appear to be lack of hockey ability as much as it was lack of condition. Varsity didn't score their first goal until late in the first period and the score was only 5-2 at the end of the second. However. in the third Waterloo rolled over and played dead while the JV's fooled around with the puck.

Tovey, Primeau, and Wilkes all hit the twine for one apiece.

LINEUPS

Toronto — Goal, Bates; Forwards, Logie. Devebre, Wilkes, Yeo, Bodnar, Lawson, Holden, Primeau, Tovey; Defence, Fingland, Dyes, Westlake, Morreau.

Waterloo — Goal, Binnhammer; Forwards, Klym, Joggs, Morrison, Gallatly, Atkinson, Kurtzman, Carrol; Defence, Dyck, Snell, Milne, Schade..

T-Bells Beat Orfuns 67-6 Stulac, Grossman Score 2

Nortown Tribells staved off a second half drive by the Varsity Orfuns just in last night to win 67-60 in a City League basket ball feature at Hart House. The Tri-B had a 42-23 lead at the half, which the Orfuns narrowed down to 54-42 by the end of third quarter. The gap was closed to 62-56 with about three minutes to go as George St put on a tremendous scoring display, but the TB's sank a couple of shots and killed to guarantee victory, the seventh straight in City League ball.

Varsity came out in the third quarter an entirely different looking team from what they had been in the first half. It was not that they had played poorly in the early stages—the Tri-Bells just couldn't do anything wrong. After Varsity had taken a 13-11 lead, Max Grossman started finding the hoop from the keyhole and scored twelve points in the first half. Grossman, Litvac and Cooper shot unerringly and the team's passing made them look more like the Harlem Globe Trotters than the team the Blues beat Tuesday night. Litvac, who did not play Tuesday, provided much of the difference with his brilliant floor play.

Varsity got the ball first in the second half, and immediately started steady chopping away at the TB's lead. Leo Madden sank two long shots in the first minute, and with Jim Russel scoring from outside and George Stulac getting the rebounds and sinking them, the Orphuns took over. Stulac relied mainly on a one handed jump and push shot, and had a quick hook shot that was very effective when he was checked.

The Orphuns controlled the backboards pretty thoroughly in the second half, Stulac getting the rebounds in the Tri-Bell end and Kettle propelling them down in the Varsity's Kettle played his best game yet; put on spectacular drive in from the left side to from under the hoop. Jack Gray went rebounds for Tri-Bells, something he had to do while at Varsity. Glossman and tied for the honor of top scorer with 21 each.

The Orphuns beat West End Y 58-47 in other game Wednesday night.

The Blues play a return engagement with Bells next Tuesday in St. Michael's gym. Mean while, they hit the road this weekend for games. Tonight they play Detroit Tech should be about an even match for the B under normal conditions according to coach Masterson. Bud Natanson is not making the owing to the continued sickness of his father Monnot hurt his ankle in practice yeste and the other two tall men, Lukenda and nington are also hindered by damaged mem The team takes on Assumption Saturday

VARSITY: Stulac (21), Russell (13), Magi Corcoran (5), Garbut (5), Kettle (3), Steve Mandryk (2), Baida, Milne, Primeau

TRI-BELLS: Grossman (21), Cooper (11), (10), Watson (8), Braithwaite (8), Gray Thomas (3), F. Thomas, Marshall.

Hockey Blues Play Tonight

by BARRY THOMAS

Tonight the hockey Blues take on Kingsway Lumber team of the T.H.L. in an exhibition game at Varsity arena. The Kingsway team will feature two stars from last year's championship Blues. Rich Howson, captain of the 1950-51 Blues and Porky MacDougall star defenceman will line up star defenceman will line up againt-

Bill Wade, who plays defence along side of MacDougall on the Kingsway team, will devote his full duties to coaching the Blues tonight. Because this is the last real test for Varsity before they open their home season next Friday, Coach Wade will likely do some experimenting in order to work out the best combinations to face McGill one week from tonight.

As it stands now only Norm Fox will be absent from the lineup tonight due to the knee injury he received before Christmas. Joe Kane may or may not play according to the state of his injuries. Phil Arrowsmith has returned to active duty and will likely take his usual right wing position along side Jack MacKenzie and Ernie Prey.

Saturday's Key Note — Variety Ni-Falls, Ithaca Visit A-Nite

Wrestling, swimming, boxing movies, dancing both square and round and a wide variety of games will take place at the athletic night in Hart House to-morrow.

Leon Smith, 177 pounds, is the only addition to the wrestler's lineup. He is replacing Bill Chykaliuk who is now in the infirmary with a knee injury. While it is very unlikely that the Blues can upset the Ithaca College powerhouse the team should show the fans some top wrestling.

In the pool the Toronto Swim team are facing Niagara Falls in their first home appearance. Phil Ware of the visitors who holds two of the Niagara pool records will be their top man. Captain of the team Fred Auman should also catch the eye as he has been defeated only four times. George Stulac of Varsity should show the fans that Toronto has some top men too. Once more we must predict a Toronto loss in the dual meet but perhaps the team will surprise us.

Immediately after the intercollegiate meet the junior interfaculty swimming finals will be run off. All of the contestants are in top shape and should provide as much interest and excitement as the first part of the pool program.

In the upper gym boxing fans will see the Senior Interfaculty finals. The preliminaries were finished last night with some exciting bouts. Butler of Meds walked off with the heavyweight title when no opponent could be found for him but the other classes are still hotly contested.

Russ Reilly walked off with the interfaculty title in the 135 pound class yesterday. The St. Mike's boy defeated G. Patenaude of Dents. Reilly dominated the fight from the opening bell and Patenaude limited himself to counterpunching and although he was taking a bad beating he put up a good show.

In the 130 pound preliminary, D.G. Harris from Forestry defeated D.E. Hill from Vic, by unanimous desision. Harris will meet R.F. Eve of SPS, in the Saturday Night finals. G. Hevenor, Vic, advanced into the 175 pound finals by defeating M.H. Acton, SPS, by unanimous decision.

Four intercollegiate exhibitions will finish the boxing program. Nick Betz, 130 pounds meets Russ Reilly, 135 pounds in the opener. Mike Wright 140 pounds, vs. Roberto Couceiro, 145 pounds, Norm Green, 155, vs. Pete Petcoff, 165, Howard Greenly, 175, vs. Roy Stevenson, heavy should provide a good display to top off the boxing.

Tickets for the variety program will go o nsale at the door starting 6:45. All adminissions are at the door. There is no advance ticket sale. If you come you probably won't see Toronto walking away with any of the events but you are guaranted some top flight competition.

Big news for the bowling gals! President of the Varsity club, Joan Seymour, reports that the U of T squad has received an invitation from the University of Alberta to compete in an Intercollegiate Telegraphic Bowling Meet held by the Western Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union. Sounds confusinc but this is how it works. The tourney is slated from January 7 to 26, with the Varsity meet scheduled for the 23rd of this month. Each university participating will select its ten best bowlers, who will roll three games apiece. The top five scores will be wired to Edmonton not later than Jan. 26, PM, where the tallies will be compared, and the winner announced. Mighty fine title, Canadian Intercollegiate Bowling Champions, for whoever wins.

This is the first time Varsity bowlers have competed in this type of a meet. Last year the telegraphic tussle was scheduled too early in the season for a Varsity team to be formed. It should be very interesting to find out just where the U of T co-eds stand in their bowling prowess as compared with other university gals across Canada. And a very economical type of competition too, which counts in women's sports!

If you belong to that group of females which is interested in bowling, but hasn't as yet joined the Varsity club, here's the low-down. The club bowls every afternoon (especially Tuesdays and Fridays), at the Midtown Bowling Alley. Mr. Greenberg, the manager, has offered free instruction on Tuesdays. For two dollars you can play the astounding number of twenty games.

In February an intramural meet will be held, composed of the two highest scorers from each college and faculty. These gals will be competing for a brand new bauble which should give them a special incentive.

Sportswoman

POT II whipped St. Hilda's II 9-1 in the noon-hour tilt at Varsity Arena yesterday that even had the referee confused. The Physios out-skated the Trinity squad from start to finish, and banged in two counters before the close of the first period.

The second frame saw Pots again swamp the Saints' goal. Nancy Burns raised a fast one into the nets and the Physios caught fire, making the score 6-0 by the end of the period.

The gals from St. Hilda's put on an extra spurt in the third but failed to stop POT from netting two. Connie Bazos finally scored on a break-away to spoil the Physios' chances of a shut-out.

Nancy Burns was top scorer for the winners, netting four. Kathy Kavanaugh and Mary Bowden accounted for two goals apiece and Brenda Fredrickson sank one. For St. Hilda's, Connie Bazos and Wendy Wright were outstanding.

Sportshoes

In Interfaculty hockey yesterday, Jr. UC looked better than they have lately as they edged the Junior Skulemen 2-1. SPS took a 1-0 lead in the first period and hung on as the Red and White team demonstrated their usual ineffective goal scoring. In the second period Carl Yakimota tied up the score then Johnny Duff put UC in the lead. There were seven penalties handed out during the thrilling contest.

Over in Hart House SPS had better luck on the basketball floor. The Skule fifths gave Meds a good trimming as they beat the docs 28-13. The winners took a 12-2 lead in the first period. The losers couldn't cut the margin in the second and saw five points added to the lead in the final period. Hawkins hooped seven for Skule but Meds couldn't produce anyone with more than four points.

Also on the courts Emmanuel College looked surprisingly strong as they trimmed Vic thirds 40-21.

Mikemen In St Play Aquinas

St. Mike's finalists last the Interfaculty Group ball league, play their ann with Aquinas High School chester this Sunday. Aquina of the top basketball schoo York States.

Two games were played St. Mike's and Aquinas one in Rochester and The return game this year played February 24.

St. Mike's, coached this Jud Gibbs, a former Blue of sports with a permane jury, has most of last back. Leo Madden, Jim and Dave Primeau, Mikem play for the Junior Var also play, though they are for Interfaculty ball.

In the afternoon there were seminars on the work of the church in different areas of the world, including urban and rural areas of our own country, and in different vocations.

Evening firesides gave delegates an opportunity to talk informally with speakers and with one another. One discussion was on the question of race segregation. Negro and white together sought to find ways in which race prejudice might be overcome on the campus and in the community.

On the last day of the conference, six students, including Audrey McKim of Toronto representing the Canadian delegates, were in a panel which gave an evaluation of the conference and suggestions as to how the students could follow it up in their own campuses. The delegates who went from this university are planning to meet together to decide on a follow-up in study and action on the Toronto campus.

A Smile Tomorrow?

Service with a smile might have been the motto of the Co-ordinating Committee, except that it has so few opportunities to smile. Its "services rendered" column has been remarkably slight.

The Committee seems to have spent much of its time alone, somewhat apart from the milling crowd of extra-curricular activities. The student world has swept along without benefit of co-ordination.

Inspired by President Smith's observation that "students were being 'clubbed' to death", last year's SAC proposed the setting up of yet another committee to cut through "the maze of extra-curricular activities".

Thence, the Co-ordinating Committee came into existence. It has only one member — its Chairman. It has no coercive authority whatsoever — the SAC has no power to decree what shall or shall not be in the realm of college and group activities recognized by the Caput.

Rather, it was supposed to function as the students' little helper by making college life something less of the gay, mad round of activities that it is reputed to be. All this through mediation.

This was to be done simply by talking reason into all club organizers great and small, by getting organizations to clear dates, by amalgamating similar groups and so on.

To date, literally nothing has been accomplished by the Committee. None of the campus groups have been particularly interested in notifying the Committee of the dates of its meetings. And there has been no inclination whatsoever from any groups to get together and be amalgamated.

Part of the fault lies with the Co-ordinating Committee itself. Letters announcing its existence and purpose were not sent out to all organizations in the fall. This rather simple and obvious move was not undertaken till after Christmas. Apparently, its Chairman, Chuck Hanly was laboring under the impression that SAC members could inform him of all proposed activities in their colleges. This has proved to be a fatal misapprehension —even Student Council activities were not always cleared through its own Co-ordinating Committee.

Nor has the Co-ordinating Committee been particularly enterprising. Hart House debates and meetings of the Students' Administrative Council still occur on the same night. Mr. Hanly might have investigated the possibility of changing these dates much earlier in the year—and all on his own.

The main service of the Co-ordinating Committee to date has been to act as a scapegoat in the squabbles of the Blue and White Society and the University College Literary and Athletic Society.

Its future, will, of course, depend entirely on the willingness of the various organizations to co-operate. In short, its future would seem to be as gloomy as its past has been ignominious.

On the other hand, we have heard a considerable amount of comment from club organizers recently. Apparently, many of them are becoming disillusioned with the worth of their own work. Possibly, they are suffering from organizational fatigue, but some of them have expressed the desire to go and hide in a book.

The Co-ordinating Committee may have a new, and somewhat unexpected role to play in encouraging organizations (or, at least some of them) to continue their existence.

"The Emergency"

By B. A. K.

When James Thurber penned the immortal words: "I'm disenchanted, too. We're all disenchanted," he had plumbed a depth of disillusionment which will remain the record until man can go down to despair in a bathysphere. His record, however, came close to being equalled this week in Toronto.

Toronto's enviable achievement can be traced directly to the strike of the Toronto Transportation Commission. ("Most up-to-date above-ground transportation system in the world.) Of course, when the strike was first announced no one believed it could possibly happen, I mean, not really. Everyone secretly hoped for a strike, deep down in their own secret Ids and hiding places, but no one believed for a minute it would actually come to pass.

But the TTC struck. One minute life in Toronto throbbed to the jolting and banging of steel wheels clattering over fast-deteriorating tracks while those clumsy red monsters continued to make left turns at points chosen long in advance for maximum automobile disruption. The next minute—silence.

The hush didn't last for long. Almost immediately it was replaced by gay snatches of careless song and the patter of dancing feet. A holiday mood took Toronto by the throat and shook the city through its entire length. A gay camaraderie found elsewhere only at Chinese Communist hangings and meetings of the Students' Administrative Council sprang up to replace the sober, phlegmatic mien of Toronto's 9 to 5 set. Joy, as someone on The Manitoban once said, reigned unconfined.

The strike began at five in the morning one Friday, a beautiful clear day, unseasonably warm, almost springlike. Until nine that morning laughter, song and dance were the order of the day. But, shortly before nine a new sound began to mingle with the yodelling, giggling and shuffling. The wine-soaked revellers, pausing in their carefree carouse, listened intently. Suddenly a little child, its throat raw from singing, its feet raw from dancing and its little pink bottom raw from the chastisements of its over-strict mamma, lisped the words that were forming in everyone's mind. "Thousands of cars," the cherub piped, "are being jammed into low gear preparatory to going bye-bye." In the rush to the main traffic arteries, both the child and its mamma were trampled into the tar. Too bad.

But the untimely end of the little sprite and its haggard dame gave no one pause. The 9 to 5'ers had to get downtown: there was work to be done, jokes to be coined, money to be made. And downtown they got. Gorgeous ste... raphers stood on street corners, their ... coats open to reveal enchanting clim... of silk-clad limbs. When they bent ... blinding smiles on dazzling moto... the drivers had no option but to ... Soon hitching rides became "de rigueur" the Letts say. Trinity Sleeves

Editor, The Varsity:

Mr. Niblock has marred an otherwise excellent issue of The Varsity with a dreadful mistake. If Mr. Niblock would take another look at the Trinity gown, he would notice he had neglected to draw it WITH SLEEVES, which it has, and that no matter how torn, tattered and generally beaten up a gown gets, it ALWAYS KEEPS ITS SLEEVES, for several reasons. (A) If one sews up the bottoms, one can carry lunches in them, not to speak of stray cats, and a stray Dillon—who is the Provost's OTHER dog, a juvenile red setter. (B) There is nothing more valuable than the sleeve of a gown for wiping mustard, coffee, crumpets and/or tea off one's clothes or self, cleaning one's glasses, polishing an apple, getting one caught in doors, etc., etc., etc. (C) A gown when dirtied to the proper consistency is proof against rain, snow, sleet, hail or any other inclemencies. (D) One can always wrap one's head in it and go to sleep.

Defence Minister Howe Gives Walberg Lecture

anada's Minister of Trade and Commerce, Right Honorable C. D. Howe, will give fifth annual Walberg Lecture this Tues- evening. The lecture entitled "The ineer and Government" will be given at m Convocation Hall.

r. Howe has been in the cabinet for six- years. At present he holds the portfolios Trade and Commerce and Defence Pro- tion. During the war, he was responsible Canada's munitions production and when war ended, for the conversion back to a cetime economy.

In 1916, he founded a firm of consulting engineers, specializing in the construction of terminal grain elevators, flour mills and heavy industrial buildings. In 1913, he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada.

Many universities have conferred honorary degrees on Mr. Howe, including Queen's University, and the University of British Columbia. For his contribution in the field of atomic energy he was awarded the Order of Merit by the President of the United States.

The Walberg Lectures were established in 1948 in memory of Emil Andrew Walberg. His sister in 1933 left the bulk of her estate to the University of Toronto, to be used for the advancement of educational

22 Sermon Topics For 15 Ministers

During the next four days, Toronto students will be able to hear reasons why they should believe in the Christian faith, and what such belief means.

In a series of five main talks in Convocation Hall, and a number of other talks throughout the campus, these questions will be answered by members of the University Christian Mission.

The Mission, led by Canon T. R. Milford, a former Vicar of Oxford's University Church, started last night, and will continue till Thursday.

"We are out for conversion," says Canon Milford, "beginning with ourselves. We wish that everyone who hears us, and every part of everyone, should take Christ as Master, and the love of God as the only rule of life."

In his work, the Canon will be assisted by a staff of 15 Associate Missioners, who will speak to various faculty groups. These include Dr. L. H. Cragg, at present a Professor of Chemistry at McMaster, and holder of a Toronto Ph.D. in Physical Chemistry; Rev. H. L. Puxley, General Secretary of the Student Christian Mission; Prof. Ursula Niebuhr, an Oxford grad and head of the department of religion at Barnard College, Columbia University.

They will be speaking to faculty groups, apart from the campus-wide talks to be given by Canon Milford every day at 5 p.m. The Engineering and Medical Faculties, and Victoria College, will be hearing speeches from the Associate Missioners every day at lunch. Nursing, Pharmacy, Social Work, and OCE will also hear talks by them.

These talks will range from "A Christian Understanding of Sex" by Prof. Niehbur, to the necessity of faith and the uniqueness of Christianity.

The associate missioners will also live in the various university and college residences, in order to be easily at hand for consultation. This has resulted in some housing re-arrangements. In one residence, for example, the missioner is in the don's room, the don in the head boy's room, and the head boy in the attic. In another residence, the residents refused to make room — with the result there is no missioner in that particular house.

"What are we here for?" is one of the questions Canon Milford intends to answer this week. "The modern world . . . is strong on means," he says, "but weak when it thinks about ends. Christianity declares that apart from God, we cannot know what we are for, or what we ought to want."

Canon Milford compares the universities to the Greeks, to whom St. Paul said Christ crucified is "foolishness." They live by free thought, and cannot regard any question as completely closed, he continues.

"We reason as men . . . and no one can see the whole view undistorted," the Canon answers. "Reasoning from ourselves to the ultimate truth, we inevitably go astray. But Christ crucified, accepted with faith as the revelation of divine love, enlightens a whole range of mysteries with which reason by itself cannot deal."

Book stalls selling texts related to the subjects of the mission — some written by the missioners — will be set up in UC, Trinity, Vic and the Engineering buildings.

Questions raised by the mission will be followed up in a series of discussions planned for a six-week period after the conclusion of the Mission. These will conclude early in March.

or almost a month, eight co-eds have been practising for the All-Varsity Revue chorus line. They have been doing so much kicking that they resemblant of sheep doing the can-can instead of jumping fences. One of the chorus girls is reported to have even began having delusions that she was a frog.

Finally the horrible event happened . . . one of the girls lost a left leg. The Varsity staff photographer happened to be present at this historical event and barely missed catching the leg as it disappeared to the far side of the room. But the chorus girl remembered the adage of show business and kept smiling.

Director Jim Guthro, when he heard of the accident, soliloquised chorus girl in show business, the only one-legged chorus girl in show business. Advance ticket sale to see the one-legged chorus girl starts in most faculties today. The tickets are in seven colors.

Milford Examins Man and Universe As Mission Starts

By JOAN MORTON

In the opening speech of the University Christian Mission Canon Milford last night expressed a hope that there were agnostics in the audience. We are asking for thought and decision in this week, "we welcome criticism and argument."

Our minds cannot comprehend the universe, there is too much of it and it lasts too long, he said. We must look for an intelligible plan for the universe but we can never hope to attain it.

History is full of man's inhumanity to man. People have died of diseases for which a cure had not yet been discovered, he said. Canon Milford's speech was entitled "Would God Create a World Like This?"

"If there is a God He made the world and He made it like this", Canon Milford declared. "God must be found in what actually happened—a God of fact, a living God."

There is a possibility that things may go wrong, he said. Living things help create themselves by trial and error.

"Man is made in the image of God" means that man has a share in the Divine Nature; he can reason and plan. "He is akin to animals on the one side, and akin to the Creator on the other. This concept of evolution," Canon Milford said, "makes sense. It looks like a directed process for the development of freedom."

Canon Milford interpreted the story of Adam and Eve to mean that self-sufficient beings in control of their own destiny chose to abuse this freedom. These risks of freedom date before man, he said, citing pre-historic monsters who grew so large that they could not eat as an example.

We should not refuse to consider why God created the universe, he continued. Rational beings, beauty, and order are all part of the universe. Evil and disorder become a problem only because good and order exist.

CANON T. R. MILFORD

Referring to Fred Hoyle's recent statements on the cosmic universe, he said that it is unreasonable to expect any clue to the reason for our existence from methematics and physics. This would be comparable to describing violin music as simply scraping a horse's tail over the guts of a dead cat, he added.

Canon Milford said, "I want to understand the whole universe. I can try to understand part of it and fit myself in with that part." Hoyle, he said, considers materialism "excessively disprobable," although he cannot disprove it.

"The scientist who disbelieves that the universe is responsible and obedient to its guidance is nearer to belief in God," he said, "than the man who shows by his worrying and irresponsibility that he neither trusts nor obeys."

No Mule, Grow Beards For Ajax Memento

It has been three years since Ajax division of the University of Toronto was closed because the University was running out of Engineers. However the "old hole" has been remembered by many of the Skulemen. Last year the spirit of Ajax was revived by Ajax the Mule, (in the centre of the picture). This year the Engineering Society is asking all Engineers to stop shaving until after the Chariot Race. At 1:00 p.m. on Thursday, there will be a beard contest for the best color, thickest and curliest beards. Following the contest there will be a chariot race, an old Engineering custom. Engineering Society president Doug Sherk announced yesterday that contestants will be urged to keep their beards until just before the Skule At-Home.

Other speakers in the series have been Sir Richard Vynne Southwell from Oxford, Karl Taylor Compton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Harvey Nathaniel Davis of Hoboken, New Jersey.

Scot Debaters Arrive; UTDU Begins Tours

Gally attired in kilts and accompanied by the skirl of the bagpipes, Scotland's three representatives in the Brading Trophy debates arrived yesterday evening at Dorval. The debators are Ian McGregor of Edinburgh, David Craig of Aberdeen, and Thomas Tomlinson of Glasgow.

They face McGill tonight, then they proceed to Queen's. They will arrive in Toronto Thursday. At all the colleges they will uphold the affairmative of the resolution, "Resolved that the commonwealth should be federated."

In Toronto the judges will be two former members of the provincial legislature, R. Mitchener and C. Millard, and S. Hermant, a graduate of UC. After the debate at Toronto the students will wind up their trip in Western.

The debaters for the three Toronto tours were chosen last Friday. John Morden, Wycliffe, and Dwight Fulford, Trin. will make the trip to New England where they will debate against Princeton, Harvard, Wellesley, and [illegible] town.

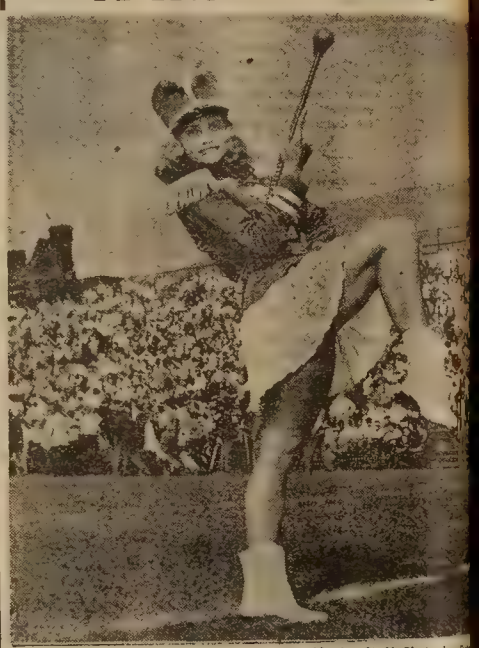
Visiting the Chicago [illegible] be Shepherd of Meds [illegible] McGinn, St. Joseph's. To debate against Notre Da[illegible] other colleges in that regi[illegible] Canadian trip to Laval, [illegible] and McGill will be made [illegible] Medcof, UC, and J. Gero[illegible] St Mike's.

The three groups of debat[illegible] all leave Toronto on Febr[illegible] and complete their tours [illegible] same week.

Asian Aid Ice Party Tonight

Scott Simon of the SHARE executive committee last week expressed hope that there would be a big crowd at the SHARE skating party tonight. "No problem of space," he said. "There is certainly lots of room in Varsity Arena." He urged all students who could stand up on skates to come, stag or drag.

The party will feature an evening of skating to the music of the Forty-eighth Highlanders' Band, highlighted by a number of special events of a competitive nature. Several Toronto firms have donated prizes, which are said to include records and free hockey tickets.



The most spectacular game, said Simon, will be the balloon fight, which will involve considerable noise and scuffling. He added a word of warning to potential poppers, "If someone bursts your balloon, put it in your pocket, or behind your ear, or hang it around your neck, but DON'T put it on the ice!"

Among the quieter games there will be a conga line, Musical Knees, a spot-skate, and several lucky-number draws. An ample supply of refreshments will be provided for weaker types who require occasional food, said Simon.

He concluded by reminding skaters that in case of a thaw tonight the party will be tomorrow night, (same time, 7:30), or failing that, next Monday or Tuesday.

DRUM-MAJORETTES

A Kick In Time

Marshall explained that the selection of a drum-[illegible] has been left until the ru[illegible] son starts, and this year almost did not have a drum[illegible] ette. Auction Coed And Pettigrew Realize $150

Tom Pettigrew, head of Arts at Trinity, was bought for over $8.00 more than the bid for a Saint from St. Hilda's at the annual Trinity auctions on Thursday and Friday. Pettigrew fetched a record $23.02, the largest single bid ever recorded, while the co-ed was purchased by the Trinity Lit for $15.00. She was later re-sold for $10.00.

A total of $144.24 was raised at the auctions for the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education campaign. The Toronto Humane Society donated a cat and a dog which were auctioned for $17. St. Hilda's bought the cat and the Trinity Lit bought the dog. Peter Alley, IV Trinity, described the dog as "being part cocker—mostly ears and tail".

The record sum bid for Pettigrew was the result of fierce bidding between the class of 5T5 at St. Hilda's and the class of 5T4.

Canon's Assistants Interpret History, Church and Society

PROF. CHALMERS

Fourteen associate missionaries will be on the campus this week to assist Canon Milford in the University Christian Mission.

Prof. R. C. Chalmers will speak at Victoria on the topic "Is there a Christian Interpretation of History" at 1.00 p.m. Monday. An Emmanual graduate, Professor Chalmers is Professor of Systematic Theology at St. Andrew's College, Sask.

Rev. Ted Nichols will lead a series of discussions on the Church and Society after the Mission is ended.

REV. NICHOLS

Martino Replaced To-Nite

"Varsity radio discussion is not dead," according to Doug Waite, Chairman of the SAC Radio Committee. "We have had several applications from good men to take over the post left vacant by Martino's resignation. One of them will be appointed at tonight's meeting. Meanwhile the first program has been set up, and should be broadcast Tuesday."

The round table discussions which are aired over CKEY were started last year. Subjects ranged from divorce, socialized medicine to the role of comic books in our society.

sually leaning against a palm was Jim Guthro, producer of All-Varsity Revue. Native nmers squatted around him ing out the latest rhythm for Afro-Cuban number. Carelessacing our press card in the band of the pith helmet we roached Guthro. "Tatu wo il hli me 'ha lo,'" he flung at "Deuxieme Etage" we flung deftly slipping our machete a huimu-humu-nuku-nukuapua that was sniffing suspiciously at our loin cloth.

Dismissing his palm bearers with a word Guthro gave us a few facts about the coming production of the All-Varsity Revue. The drum being used in the Afro-Cuban number is an original product direct from Haiti. This drum has been hollowed out from one piece of wood. A newly skinned goatskin is stretched over the top opening and stakes hold it tight to the sides of the drum. When the skin dries it becomes very taut and on a quiet evening Guthro said it might be heard for "five miles."

The music is supposed to represent songs and rhythms that were brought over from Africa to the Caribbean Islands. These rhythms were then incorporated into the existing music and the result is what Guthro and his drummers are trying to achieve.

Tipping our spear to Guthro and slipping two penicillin tablets into our mouth, we left him catching falling coconuts with one hand while beating out a new rhythm with the other.

Lectures On Faith By Lincoln's Canon

Canon T. R. Milford, a tall dignified man with a hearty laugh, is the Chief Missioner of the University Christian Mission to be conducted in Convocation Hall from Jan. 20-24. His aim is to present Christianity as a reasonable and consistent way of life — to show that it is relevant to personal life, to academic studies at university, and to the great social issues of this age.

In the first great war, Canon Milford served in Mesopotamia and India. After taking his degree at Oxford and being ordained 10 years later, he returned to India and taught for 8 years as a Professor of Philosophy in south India and at St. John's College in Agra. Concerning India, Canon Milford is very pleased that the University of Toronto is putting on a SHARE campaign to help Asiatic university students. From his 8 years' of teaching, he says of Indian students, "They lead a simpler life materially, but their basic problems are very like ours. They too have to adjust themselves to modern living to which their traditional standards are no longer a sufficient guide."

Canon Milford was also former Vicar of University Church in Oxford, a position he held all through the war. Since 1947, he has been Chancellor of Lincoln Cathedral in England, where he directs the training of the clergy and the logical students. He is the guardian of one of the four original copies of the Magna Charta kept in Lincoln Cathedral and is technically responsible for it along with other ancient documents of the Church. This responsibility of safeguarding important papers in the church comes down through history from the time when there was no distinction between the church and state.

In recent months, he had debated with Fred Hoyle of the CBC and Gilbert Ryle, one of the great living philosophers. About Hoyle's broadcast addresses on the nature of the universe, which disturbed many believing people who never really thought about the size of the universe or the age of the earth, and who were living in a "cabbagepatch" world (according to Hoyle), Canon Milford believes that our idea of God should extend beyond the cabbagepatch until it is large enough to include all that Hoyle talks about.

This is Canon Milford's second trip to Toronto. He is interested in discovering whether Canadian students have generally less knowledge of religion than English ones, since in England, under the 1944 Education Act, Scripture teaching is required in all public schools. But he does not want the students to swallow all that he has to tell them without thinking about it first, asking questions and discussing controversial ideas, or without making up their minds about the divine truth of the Christian faith. He wants everyone at university to decide for himself, through the inspiration and the knowledge of the real relationship of God to man that the Mission will point out, that what he believes is really the divine truth.

HART HOUSE BULLETIN BOARD

CHAPEL

Services will be held daily from Monday to Friday, from 10:15 to 10:30 a.m. These services are conducted by the Chaplain, Rev. E. M. Nichols, and by students. All members of Hart House are invited.

GLEE CLUB

Members are asked to note the following REHEARSALS for the coming week:

Today, Mon. — Second Tenors, 5:00 p.m., Debates Ante-Room.
Tuesday — Full Rehearsal .....5:00 p.m., Music Room.
Wednesday — Full Rehearsal..5:00 p.m., East Common Room.
Thursday — Second Basses.....5:00 p.m., Music Room.

TABLE TENNIS

The Table Tennis Club will meet tonight at 7:30 o'clock. Tables will be set up ready for play. During this term the club will meet on Monday nights only.

BRIDGE

The Bridge Club will hold its regular meeting tomorrow night (Tuesday) at 7:30 p.m. in the Debates Room.

SING SONG

There will be a Sing Song in the East Common Room TOMORROW (TUESDAY) at 1:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY FIVE O'CLOCK RECITAL

The Recital to be given at 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, 23rd January, will be presented by students of the Royal Conservatory of Music and will comprise original student compositions.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

The Royal Conservatory Opera Company, conducted by Nicholas Goldschmidt, will give the Concert in the Great Hall next Sunday, 27th January. The programme will include excerpts from "The Bartered Bride" and "The Magic Flute." Members may obtain tickets from their College or Faculty representative or from the Hall Porter's Desk, Hart House. Women of the University may attend the Sunday Evening Concert if accompanied by a member of the House.

QUARTET CONTEST

Will the quartets who are going to compete in the All-Varsity Quartet Contest please submit application forms at the Warden's office, Hart House, by 25th January. Blank forms may be obtained at the Warden's office.

Shooting in the Canadian Indoor Mail Match began on 17th January and will continue for six weeks. The Sixteenth Archery Tournament will be held on Friday, 25th January, at 8:00 p.m. in the C.O.T.C. Drill Hall, 119 St. George Street. The return Shoot with O.A.C. will take place in the Rifle Range on Thursday, 31st January, at 8:00 p.m. All members of Hart House are welcome to attend.

balcony viewpoint

By DAVID PEDDIE

I awaited the Hart House Theatre production of PYGMALION with palpitating heart, hoping and expecting to be able to lay aside my poison-pen and gush in honied eloquence. Not only has the play by one George Bernard Shaw been the object of my undying admiration, but I find myself in addition, both fascinated by the character of Higgins, Doolittle, and Eliza, and enchanted by the beauty of the leading-lady. Alas, I find the chance of establishing myself as a pleasant sort of person is thwarted again. I must be critical after all, not only because parts of the production are very bad, but because two parts in the play are so good, that they deserve careful attention—an event so unprecedented in student drama that I can only say, "Hang popular reputation! Take up the critical sword."

The play opens on a set in Hart House Theatre —the program says something misleading about Covent Garden—and there are a group of students standing stiffly about being in a play. Then a scruffy little flower-girl enters; tries to sell them some flowers, but it's no use. They are all too intent on their acting. The girl can do nothing but sit down on the steps and cry. I think most of the audience sympathized.

Act II is the real beginning of the play. At last there is some room to move about in, and a fairly realistic-looking room. Professor Higgins (Ivan Thorney-Hall) and Col. Pickering (George Hardy) encounter once more the flower-girl, Liza Doolittle (Deborah Turnbull) and in addition her father, Alfred (Jack Sheriff). It was real pleasure to see the antics of a common little guttersnipe suddenly finding herself in the comfortable surroundings of a gentleman's house. Usually actresses are so very squeamish about actually being common that they tend to be too coy about it. Fortunately there was no mere pretense; Higgins and Eliza were real people. However, when the professor is accused time and again of being sloppy, untidy, uncontrolled, in speech and manner, and on top of all that, a great bully, why does he stand so nicely—profile on, hands in pockets—talking pleasantly and precisely. This applies especially in his scene with Alfred. There is lots of room to move, yet Mr. Gill has kept both movements and pace at a standstill.

The rest of the play offers little to quarrel [with] as far as Miss Turnbull, and Mr. Thornle[y-Hall] are concerned. If Higgins had started out [to] properly overbearing, he would not have [had] to establish that fact in the later scenes, and [we] the audience would have been free to concen[trate] on what was said. But this is quibbling.

The tea-party at Mrs. Higgins' house [was] quisite; it is a comedy of manners played [to] n-th degree. The scenes in Acts IV & V be[tween] Higgins and Eliza deserve special mention, [for] actors and Mr. Gill have given us an hones[t] moving interpretation of a deadly serious situ[ation]. Both characters are pitted against one a[nother] with no holds barred. They keep up pretens[e] objectivity, but it is a fight to the death. [When] Eliza leaves with Mrs. Higgins there is no [doubt] about who was won. She is now a lady; [Higgins] is still a naughty boy, who talks aloud in [church].

Mr. Hardy gave the character of Pickering [a] but being old does not mean nearing death. [He] has fun at parties, and is an extremely kind [and] warm-hearted man. If he could relax a [little] more he would have had much more effect [on] Mr. Sheriff's Doolittle — as saith the playw[right] "it's almost irresistible", I will refrain so far [as] say that Doolittle is supposed to out-wit the [old] Higgins, with his native shrewdness, and [not] him with his eloquence.

Of the minor characters, Mrs. Eynsford-[Hill] played by Wendy Aitken, was very good. Miss [Pat] Carscallen, and Ricky Arnold as her two [sons] off-spring were almost as good.

I might however loose a few poison darts [at] director Robert Gill. His show is more than [pro]cessful, so he should be able to stand it. [There] was a good deal of obvious direction that [the] actors could not hide from my penetrating [eye]. And there was some very awkward stage-busi[ness]. Surely when Henry throws away the ring it [does] not seem so phony. I think I mentioned this [once] before; it drags in the first two acts rather [badly] and in odd sequences throughout.

Seldom has Mr. Gill two such excellent [ro]mances as those given by Miss Turnbull and Mr. Thornley-Hall, especially when one con[siders] how hard good comedy is to act. They both [play] with style and understanding and I could not feel that the director could have got still more of the profound depths of their imagination[s].

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"Christ did not come to earth to tell us merely what we ought to [do]. He came to do something for us".

"It's For The Bloody Birds!"

In Another of his More or Less Irregular Columns, the Author Takes A Look At University Education. He Claims This Was Inspired by the 'Birds' Remark.

By MAX PARSONS

In the back stage recesses of Hart House Theatre there currently flits a young Commerce and Finance graduate (1951) who before Christmas took a couple of hours to read a special issue of The Varsity on Education. His reaction to the subject was blunt: "University? — Let's face it. It's for the bloody birds!"

A fourth year engineering student also read that issue, felt that the treatment was "hackneyed". In spite of that he claimed that "it needs saying, again and again and again . . . We don't get an education in classes."

For some, like Araya Ogbazgy, an Ethiopian student who has received all his university training in North America and is currently finishing up a post - graduate course in Business Administration, the university system we have is "inevitable". Ogbazgy thinks that it is the individual that counts in education: "Maybe you don't get an education until after you have finished your course," he says, "but in any case, the amount of education you get is your individual responsibility."

A low opinion of the student was registered in the December issue of Acta Victoriana by Robert George: "Is the Canadian student any exception to his countrymen? Unfortunately the answer is no. He sometimes works up enough enthusiasm to watch, but rarely takes part in anything of significance. Except where they are personally offensive, he reacts to important issues with all the violent sensations of a clam. Nothing dangerous happens on the Canadian campi. These universities enrol and graduate three types of people. There are a few actual students, the parasites and the pills. The few real students have some idea of what they are here for, and, with their aggressive interests, can be counted on to graduate as mature, enlightened and thinking citizens. The parasites live off the course they are presented with, and never disturb their minds further. The pills are here because their parents can afford the tuition and, except for polishing up their social artifices, become aggressively useless. In more ways than one, the Canadian university tends to become an intellectual drugstore."

One way or another, if you hunt it out, you can usually work up a good argument on "education" at Toronto.

Your only major problem will be to define what you are talking about.

And the search for that definition, when you consider it, seems to boil down and turn out as the overalls in the chowder. Dean Harold A. Innis, whose fame is not limited to the department of Political Science and Economics, claims that the minute people start talking about "education" at a university, "you can be fairly sure there aren't any."

Dean K. F. Tupper of the Faculty of Applied Science (which has been roughly translated as Skule) puts it a little more bluntly: You can talk all you want about university "education", but there is no hope of getting anywhere until you define the aims of that education. On one side Dean Tupper sees those who thing of university education in the broadest, widest, most democratic terms, as part of our birthright. On the other side are those who tend toward a tighter, tougher kind of education, not suited to the mass of citizens. "I don't think any university in Canada today has a definite policy about its aims," he says. "Until we decide, we can't possibly get out of our delimma."

Anyone who walks around asking questions on Education soon finds himself swamped with a variety of views and opinion which shows little or no pattern. There are the crackpots, the scholars, the crass materialists, the idealists, the Christians, the administrators, the technicians and researchers, and a great many confused young men and women. Few university students today know just what they want, even fewer know how to get it.

If that were true only of the student, then perhaps it would not be so serious a problem. But it is by and large, and often more dramatically, true of those whose responsibility it is to set up, man, and be the system.

Sooner or later, for example, you run into the whole unhappy problem of the humanities, the stronghold of the "liberal" mind, and the great barren wastelands in modern Canadian university education. Anyone who has gone through the recent Report of the Royal Commission on the Arts, Letters and Sciences will have been struck with the constant and repeated emphasis which the Commissioners placed on the "Plight of The Humanities."

And lest there be those who, for one reason or another, feel that all the hullabaloo about the humanities is the result of plots hatched in the thoughts of wooly-channeled minds which should be sticking to their studies of ancient Gandhara Sculpture, it is of interest to take note of a recent development a this university.

Befroe he left on his current trip to Southeast Asia, President Sidney Smith found time to set up a Presidential Committee on the Humanities at the University of Toronto. Headed by the Dean of the Graduate School, Dr. Harold A. Innis, its task is complicated and technical, from the initial problem of finding out just what is meant by "humanities", to a study of the ways in which the humanities in this university make their impact on the society.

The most interesting thing about the Committee on The Humanities however is not that it has been formed, but the major reason for setting it up. The particular concern in the University's mind: the increasingly difficult task of finding money to teach the humanities. If it is true that the University doesn't know where it is going, then it is also true that it seems to feel the impact of the scientific society in which it exists. There are millions for the sciences, but money for the less obvious, the less practical, kinds of human thought which we call the humanities, is harder and harder to dig up.

We seem to be rapidly approaching a point where to merely insist that men should try to widen their area of thinking beyond technical skill and ability will brand you as an arch reactionary.

One school of thought on the subject of university education transfers most of the problem into a wider, and ultimately more serious, focus. They take it back to the primary and secondary schools where they claim the world is really living.

Those who argue in this way immediately run into another group who stand firm on the ground that the schools cannot and must not be considered as training areas for those who wish to enter universities. Both points of view can be damned, readily, heartily, and in almost the same words. For not only are the schools not giving their graduates the kind of training they need for university, they seem also to be failing to give them any training for life.

"Both the schools and the university are guilty of widespread failure," claims Hart House Warden Nicholas Ignatieff. "They are not developing intelligent habits of mind in their students."

It is a point of view that is echoed and substantiated by the parents of two or three younger generations.

Yet while the universities' problem may lie ultimately in the schools, and may indeed be remedied by changes in school training designed to give students "intelligent habits of mind", there remain a whole list of charges which can be laid directly at the univirsities' collective door.

The universities of modern Canada are not the ivory towers of bad fiction and worse verse. They are in general, highly organized factories, designed to turn out commodities of one kind or another, commodities which go by the fadingly glamorous names of Bachelors of Arts, of Science, or Masters of Arts or Applied Thermodynamics. The modern university in this country, and perhaps more blatantly in the United States, seems more concerned with being of some material use to its society, than in developing milds that will ultimately be of far more value to the society.

Lewis Mumford in Culture of Cities somewhere describes the mediaeval university: "It made explicit, concrete and systematic one of the enduring functions of the city: withdrawal for immediate practical responsibilities and the critical reappraisal and renewal of the cultural heritage."

It is perhaps unwise to hark back to the middle ages, yet in some ways such a definition of the function of a university seems suited to modern conditions. If there was ever a time when we more strongly needed people who were re-appraising and renewing their cultural heritage, it is now.

It is probably true that what the middle ages had is not for us. Yet the Mumford description puts me immediately in mind of Stephen Leacock's recipe for a university: first a smoking room, and then some residences, and then a library, and then, if there is lots of money that you don't seem to have anything to do with, a professor or two.

Leacock, with his well-rounded sense of the amusing and ludicrous in life, probably knew what he was talking about. And his ideal university is a strong backhand against the system of education in this country of which he was a part.

If it is possible to get at the big problems in short cursory glances such as this, (and I'm not at all sure that it is) then we might put it this way. The university has become too much a part of its community. Instead of living above and beyond the community to its ultimate good, our universities have become obsessed with being a part of things and with being accepted. It is not a crown they wear well.

Even a glance at the University of Toronto will readily show something of this. The charge, like mud, is hard to make stick permanently. Yet a glance at Presidential reports which tell of increasing financial difficulties shows one of the motivating factors. Public education must please the public or they will not support it. The pointed comments about the easily available millions for science soon blossom on the campus in the form of buildings for chemical research and study, for mechanical research and study.

Those unkind enough to notice it have pointed out another interesting thing about building at this university: when the Athletic Association wanted $650,000 for a new stadium, they got it. When students ask similar amounts for a student union, they are put off and put off and finally told no. Stadiums are good business, and also sound publicity gainers. Student unions don't have that virtue.

There seems to be some all-powerful urge in university administrations to make themselves readily and strongly acceptable to public opinion. Perhaps the economics of the situation are such that there is no other way. But excesses are creeping slowly and surely in, and are changing the character of our universities in ways that spell their doom.

Anyone who has read recent reports on the university young (Time's Younger Generation, for example) cannot have but failed to be impressed with students' willingness to conform. When we say there are no rebels any more, we mean it. Canada had an example of that this year, when the National Federation of Canadian University Students went white around the gills and emphatically said "No!" to a proposal that some Russian students be brought here. Even the Department of External Affairs had its ears burned on that one.

"The Canadian student just doesn't mind being pushed around." It i ss sad, unhappy thing not to be able to deny it.

A professional friend of mine (a doctor) has suggested the following remedy for some of the ills. Stop worrying about exams: abolish them. Put an end to bickering about salaries in the non-professional parts of the university by paying professors what people think they are worth (on a type of box-office system) at the time making provision fo rthose whose prime interest and value is doing research. When a man thinks he has some education let him be examined once, partly orally, partly in written tests with the criterion his ability to think rather than his memory of half-digested lectures and hastily read texts. Make it tough to get in; send the rest where they can learn skills which will be more to their talents.

And perhaps we might add to that the opinion that it is time to get something personal back into the university, to reduce some of the machine-techniques, even if it means breaking up the size of the institutions.

The charge is specific, and it is this: In spite of all our fat rhetoric we do not want non-technical thinkers, dangerous, valuable men and women who will ask all the embarrassing questions. We have given in too much to the society and are willing to produce machines, and the mass-produced mind.

The Universities might well take a long and intelligent look at themselves, note the decay, and see what they can do to correct it before it is too late.

Puck Blues Top Kingways 13-4

Displaying much of the power that has been expected of them, the Hockey Blues came up with a lopsided 13-4 victory over Kingsway last Friday night in an exhibition match played at Varsity arena. After a relatively even first period in which each team scored once, the Blues broke out in the middle frame with an eight goal splurge.

The Blues attack was led by Pete Vernon and Jack Wheldrake, who each succeeded in performing the hat trick, with Wheldrake's three goals being scored in succession during the second period outburst. Ernie Frey and centre Jack MacKenzie followed with two goal afforts while Don Rope, Phil Arrowsmith and Jimmy Adams lid the lamp once each.

Showing a lot of hustle, the Blues outplayed and outscrambled their T.H.L. opponents throughout most of the game. However, in the first period they did have difficulty at times in getting their passes to click. Doug Orr and Jack Ross split the goaltending chores and each allowed two pucks to get by, with Orr having the most work during the first half of the game.

Porky MacDougall and Rich Howson, two former Blues performed well for Kingsways with former notching a goal and the latter picking up a couple of assists. The Major Series team was hampered considerably due to the fact that they only had two of three substitutes.

Blueline Bits: . . . The Blue's defence corps in general played well but still had trouble in clearing out its own end . . . Rope's goal was a classy solo effort in which the shifty centreman sailed through Kingsway's whole team, knifing his way past the defence . . . McKenzie is looking right at home in his centre position . . . besides his two goals he helped set up three others for his wingmen Frey and Arrowsmith. . . . Wheldrake showed some great bursts of speed and was very adept at cutting in on goal after rounding the defence . . . Joe Kane, back in the line-up after several injuries, hasn't reached his peak form yet . . . Vernon who last season was unable to put the puck in the net, seems to be finding his scoring eye . . . Gerry Fitzhenry drew the only major penalty for the Blues after a bit of jostling on the boards. . . . Norm Fox, the only regular not in action, may see service this Friday against McGill at Varsity Arena.

Macs Win League Opener Top McGill Redmen 67-46

McGill (CUP) — McMaster Marauders made their senior CIAU basketball debut a successful one as they whipped McGill Redmen 67-46 in a game played at the Currie gym last night.

The Marauders led the home team by a slim margin throughout the contest and came through with a final quarter splurge to sew up the game. The score was 41-37 in favor of the visiting Hamiltonians at the end of the third quarter. The 26 point last quarter did the trick.

The winners were led by three veterans and a rookie in scoring their initial triumph in the senior league competition. Bobby Kunz scored 14 points to lead his teammates in that department. Lettermen Ken Stanley, Lorne Wrigglesworth and Mel Hawrigg scored 13, 11 and nine points respectively to contribute to the cause.

Stanley and Gerry MacTaggart, who scored six points managed as well to maintain general control of the backboards and generally spearhead the McMaster attack.

McGill center Sheldon Merling scored 15 points in a losing cause to snare the evening's scoring honors while Ben Tissenbaum notched 13 and Asher Garbuz 10 before fouling out in the last quarter.

The game was rough and loose throughout. Both teams played rather slow deliberate ball for the most part of the contest.

McMaster grabbed the lead right from the start and never relinquished it. They led 6-0 before Tissenbaum put the Redmen on the score sheet. At the end of the first quarter the Wynnemen were ahead 17-15 and again 29-26 at half time.

Behind three points going into the final ten minutes, McGill playing only its third game in five weeks, fell apart at the seams, and unable to keep up with their opponents, saw the Hamiltonians score 16 in that frame to their nine.

McMaster: Kuntz (14), MacTaggart (6), Stanley (12), Wooley (6), Foreman (6), Wrigglesworth (11), Munn (4), Hawkrigg (9), Karal, Darrach — Total 67.

McGill: Cunningham (6), Tissenbaum (13), Carbuz (10), Merling (15), Klein (2), Findlay, Winship, Wippen, Russell, Anderson. Total 46.

Goalie Doug Orr goes to the ice to stop a shot by this Kingsway forward in the first period of the Blues' exhibition game Friday night, when the game was still a contest. Behind Orr are "Red" Stephen, left, and Don Rope, right. Pressure like this on the Blue net became rarer as the game went on.

Intramural Fist Display Pleases A-Night Crowds

Saturday night a very colorful fistic show took place at Hart House. Of the eight bouts fought, four were Senior Interfaculty Championship bouts and four were exhibition bouts. The events did not go off just as planned, for several of the contestants were unable to attend.

Don Harris from Forestry, is the new 130 pound Senior Intramural Champion, after he defeated Bob Eve from SPS, via a TKO after only 1 minute and ten seconds of the first round. Harris is a much more experienced fighter and he was able to land one right to the face after another, until the referee halted the bout.

The 147 pound final between Vic Prendergast, SPS, and B. Zarousky, UC, was definitely the best bout of the four Senior Intramural finals. Both opponents were pretty even, for though Prendergast was obviously more experienced, Zarousky packed a very hard punch. Prendergast forced the fight from the opening bell, but he didn't fare so well in the first two rounds and was stopped in his tracks several times by Zarousky's hard counterpunch. In the third round however, Prendergast took over and chased Zarousky around the ring, landing flurry after flurry. The title went to Prendergast on a split decison.

Andy Potter from Trinity defeated J. Smith from UC in the 155 pound class and took the Senior title by a unanimous decision. It was closely contested, hard slugging bout and Potter slowly acquired control, after being on the defensive throughout most of the first round.

The 175 pound title was copped by C. Hevenor from Vic, who defeated R. Smith from Meds by a unanimous decision. Throughout the first round both boys were feeling each other out, but once Hevenor got used to his opponent's southpaw style, the bout acquired a much faster clip and Hevenor pounded away at every opportunity. Late in the bout Hevenor put the decision away on some very good flurries, though up to then the bout had been pretty even.

The 165 final between L. Wade and P. Fisher, both from SPS, did not take place, when Fisher was unable to compete.

Among the exhibition bouts, the ones between Norm Green (155) and Pete Petcoff (165), and between Howie Greely (175) and Mark Wiant (Heavyweight) were the highlights of the evening. In the first one, the two Skulemen merrily proceeded to slug it out. Some very good boxing was seen, and though Green had the superior reach, his opponent took full advantage of his extra weight. The other bout proved to be an exhibition of superior boxing and speed uncommon in that weight. Both boys hit very hard but withstood the punches very well. The St. Mike's boy, Wiant, was filling in for Roy Stevenson, originally scheduled to compete in that bout, who was incapacitated by an injury.

The fast-moving bout between Nick Betz (130) and Russ Reilly (135) was a thrilling fast-moving bout that featured some very good boxing though also that lack of enthusiasm characteristic to exhibition bouts.

The other Exhibition bout, which was arranged in the last minute to fill a gap in the program, between Mike Acton (175) and Larry Wade (165) was a disappointment.

Ithacan Grunt and Groaners Ground Gasping Blues 27-5

The Toronto Wrestling team went down fighting Saturday night before far superior opposition. Ithaca downed the Blues 27-5 winning seven of the eight bouts. The visitors reversed on Varsity men in every bout except the last one but the Toronto wrestlers couldn't get their own back in any of the fights.

Joe Goldenberg scored Toronto's only points when his opponent Ed Minginelli failed to make the 123 pound requirements and defaulted. In the 150 pound tilt Tom Hatashita, who underwent a nose operation for sinus trouble earlier in the day suffered a bleeding nose at 1.23 of the secoond period. Hatashita had been ahead of Petersen up to that point but it was felt that it would be unwise for him to continue.

Harry Robinson put up the best show of the evening for the Blues when he kept on even terms with 230 pound Jan Peters. Peters got the takedown and received the two points which won him the bout but from there on it was even. Neither wrestler was able to reverse his opponent and Robinson did his best to pin Peters but lost 2-0.

Dick Dean, US YMCA champion had control over Glen McCormick throughout the 167 pound tilt but he couldn't pin the elusive McCormick. Although he lost the match 10-0 Glen learned a lot that should aid him in future bouts.

Orie Loucks lost a 6-2 decision to Ithaca's Fred March in the 157 pound bout. March stayed on top throughout the bout and quickly reversed Loucks at the start of the second period when Orie chose the up position.

John Cabiotti, Ithaca's 147 pounder outpointed Varsity's Phelan 6-0 in an exciting match. Once more the visiting wrestler stayed on top throughout the bout and only found trouble when he tried to pin Phelan. Cabiotti got a near fall in the third period, but he came no closer than that during the rest of the bout.

The other three bouts, one of them an exhibition went on the record books as falls. Jim Howard pinned Pitman at 2.27 of the first period. Howard had very little trouble in getting Ithaca five points as Pitman was very nervous. Paul Thoman dropped Leon Smith in 27 seconds of the second period. Leon was replacing Bill Chykaliuk and made a creditable showing in his first big-time bout against the powerful Thoman.

The Blues gained a lot af valuable experience in the match with Ithaca and made a good showing. They now take a two week lay-off from competition before they make a road trip to Rochester and Buffalo at the end of their rest.

Pitching Sportshoes

At noon Friday in the arena a fast skating Sr. SPS hockey team was defeated 3-0 by a slower, smoother, more powerful Vic outfit. The first goal for the Scarlet and Gold was scored by Paul Walton on a pass from Don Marshall midway through the first period. For the balance of that period the play ranged back and forth from one end to the other, with the Skulemen outskating their opponents but getting very few shots on the Vic goal.

In the second period Vic dominated the play. However, in the last minutes the engineers caught fire and kept the Viesters with their backs to the wall. Jack Gibson assisted Bill Andrews scored the second goal as the Vicsters really turned on the pressure. At 11:30 of the second period, Smith of SPS was given a two minute penalty for interference and while he was off Hugh Littlejohn snaked his way through the Skule defence and scored unassisted to make the score Vic 3, SPS 0. With nothing to lose in the last ten minutes, the

Niagara U. Edge U of T Win 48-36

The swimming team from Niagara University, Niagara Falls, N.Y. defeated University of Toronto 48-36 in Hart House pool Saturday evening. The meet was closely contested throughout as the winner was not decided until the last event, the 400 yard medley relay was over. The excitement and the fine display of swimming and diving thrilled the athletic minded crowd which filled the pool to capacity.

Phil Ware, backbone of the Niagara team was individual star of the meet. He began his performance by winning the 220 yard free style, the second event) in a very good time of two minutes, 14 seconds. Then after a good rest he won the 440 yard free style swim (the second last event) in the excellent time of five minutes flat. Less than five minutes after winning the 440 yarder Ware swam the last hundred yards of the 400 yard relay in a truly outstanding performance. The Niagara relay team were ten yards behind when Ware took over as the anchor man but he led by twenty yards at the end of the race.

If the Blues had won the relay which counted seven points they would have won the meet 43-41. Trailing along behind Phil Ware in both the 220 and 440 was Doug Gibson, who for several years has been the outstanding Varsity swimmer at these distances. Doug swam very well, recording a time of 2:26.3 and 5:35 for the two events.

However, the outstanding performer on the Varsity team was former George Stulac who won two events and swam very well in the relay. Alan Roger was also very good as he won the diving event with some beautiful fancy diving and came third in the 200 yard back stroke race.

Basketball Blues Lose To Detroit And Assumption

The Blues have had one of their toughest week-ends. Beaten Friday by a high-scoring Detroit Tech basketball squad 90-59, they were upset 70-63 by Assumption Saturday. The team in a crippled condition, with Bud Natanson being unable to make the trip, Lou Lukenda suffering from an injured finger, which he played with in a splint, and Ray Monnot and Art Binnington having twisted ankles. Nevertheless, Lukenda and Monnot were the top scorers for the two games with 27 and 21 points each respectively.

Detroit had a field day. In scoring 90 points, they broke all team records, besides marking up the biggest score that has been marked up against the Blues for at least a year. All of the regular line being slightly over six feet tall, they were a tough team to pass much against; many Varsity rushes were stopped and turned into Detroit scores by interceptions.

The Techmen took charge early in the game, and kept their lead. They were ahead 43-28 at half-time.

The Blues were confronted with a very unusual defence against foul shots. When the Blues were shooting, they would put the usual three men under the back-boards, and place the other two in the Blues' end for a floor-long pass. Until Toronto got a tall man covering the pass, they scored two points every time Varsity took a foul shot.

Ray Monnot and Bill Huycke were the best in this game, offensively, with 13 points each. Lou Lukenda scored 11. Three men scored 20 points (or nearly 20) for Detroit, Van De Waerden, 21, Westbrook, 20, and Williams, 19.

Assumption, already decisively beaten by Western this year, pulled what might be called the upset of the year in Canadian basketball when they beat the Blues 70-63 on foul shots. Assumption took 36 foul shots, scored 24, while the Blues sank only nine out of 26, although they potted four more field goals than their Windsor rivals.

The Blues were ahead 14-10 at the end of the first quarter, but went behind 25-34 by the end of the half as Assumption had a hot second period. Lou Lukenda scored 16 points. Don Fawcett got 10, and Ray Monnot 8.

Skulemen cut loose and did everything but score.

Dave Barker played a very fine game in goal for SPS. He stopped numerous hard shots in a spectacular fashion. The shots that beat him were all hard shots fired at close range. The shooting and scoring of Gibson and Littlejohn and Walton highlighted the game for Victoria.

In the second game at noon on Friday, Vic fourths defeated SPS sevenths 6-0. Passi scored three and Evans, Pegg and Dale each scored one for the winners.

Pianist Paints Broad Canvas

If this review had been written immediately after the recial given by Gina Bachauer last Thursday in Massey Hall, it would have been almost unqualified in its praise of her pianism. After a few days' reflection, however, I realize that I was really awed by a transcendent technique which completely controlled every resource of the piano.

The total effect of the recital left me unsatisfied, although this is not to imply that none of the recital was worthwhile. Mme. Bachauer is a pianist in the grand tradition of Rachmaninoff: she uses a broad canvas and paints on it with brushes of all sizes using all shades of tone.

Opening with the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor, she displayed her mighty technique and a majestic conception of the work. The contrast of the Mozart Sonata in G (K. 283), with its rapid, delicate phrases was extreme. The outside movements were played at a tempestuous speed, leggiero throughout, and the effect was breathtaking, but unsatisfying. The Andante, however, was played with an introspective quietness hitherto unanticipated.

With the Beethoven Sonata Op. 101, Mme. Bachauer again turned to her broad canvas with wonderful results. Every nuance of pianism was utilized and realized.

Her Chopin group followed. I was asked, why did she choose to play Chopin? Is it conventional? Whatever it was, it was unfortunate, for her mighty approach to the piano was least successful in the Nocturne in D flat harp minor as stated on the ...n). The A flat Polonaise, o... ...e, was made for her, and she did not fail to emphasize the heroic proportions of this work.

All through the recital I had looked forward to the Ravel Gaspard de la Nuit. I was not disappointed. She had completely mastered the technical demands of this work, which Ravel intended to be of "transcendental virtuosity" more difficult than Islamey. Utilizing all her paints and brushes, she projected a vivid, shimmering wall of sound into the hall. I thought this performance alone was worth the price of admission.

Mme. Bachauer generously gave four encores of which Granados' Spanish Dance and Moussorgsky's The Great Gate of Kiev from Pictures at an Exhibition were most noteworthy.

This brilliant recital proved that Gina Bachauer is one of the great pianists of the day. This reviewer looks forward to hearing her again.

OUR READERS WRITE

Let's Face It

Editor, The Varsity:

The Varsity editorial of the 14th of January was one of the better ones to appear this year. The approach to the necessity of understanding the problems of Asia was maturely dealt with. But why spoil the preliminary sage remarks by such melodramatic drivel as the last paragraph, which read, "It is one thing for Asia to be poor but proud; it is another matter entirely for her to starve to death. The latter, western countries must prevent."

Let's face it. Asia is starving because she indirectly wants to starve. Sure, we will contribute to SHARE, Care, or anything else. We welcome Asiatics to our universities. But Asia's problem lies partly in the answer to the question of why Asiatic men and women, professionally trained in Western Schools, return to Asia and proceed to raise families of six children. Can this be a good example to the illiterate peasant and coolie?

The problem is relatively simple—the carrying capacity (agriculture, natural resources, and industrial output) is not great enough in abnormal times for the present populations in the Asiatic countries outside of the USSR. A bare subsistence economy prevails, which is upset by famine or floods in adverse climatic periods.

It would be unfair to the educated Asiatics or ourselves to believe that material aid can solve the problem. It would merely relieve stress on a local and short term basis. It may be argued that increasing the carrying capacity to fit the population would be the most logical solution. The development of this theme is limited. A country is endowed with only so much arable land and mineral wealth. India and China suffer from a lack of one or the other in various forms. In spite of this, statistics indicate that the population of China will double, from 450 million to 900 million by the turn of the century, and India will be close behind.

Yes, they are starving themselves to death. Some people have another word for it.

Plan For Glory

"American's ignorance 'fantastic'", said a Globe and Mail headline referring to Republican representative Timothy Sheehan's proposal to annex Canada to the United States.

Fantastic! Utter rot. It's a colossal idea. It is ridiculous to consider paying Britain for our land, but why shouldn't we cash in on the capitalists' chips, not to mention the odd athletic scholarship, carton of cigarettes and two Thanksgiving Days tossed into the bargain?

In short, we have a prospective buyer who delights in tossing money about madly, so now is the time to sell.

Naturally there are small details which would have to be dealt with. Americans would have to learn our two official languages, French and English; while we would have to grasp at least the rudiments of American, if not the subtler implications of Brooklynese, Floridese, Texese and all the other spoken tongues. Language barriers would be very difficult to overcome.

But think of the benefits! With the increased standard of living, we could all move out of our wigwams and igloos. We could all have horseless buggies, MacArthur buttons and best yet, Bertrand Russell living in our own god-blessed land.

And Americans get things done. The Alberta Pipe Dream and St. Laurent's Seaway would be finished in no time.

But the time we had uprooted the maple trees and planted charter oaks, the red-blooded American and the true-bleu Canadien would mingle to form the dynamic purple Americanad, building an industrial domain stretching from Reno to Chubb Crater.

Our government could easily be adapted to that of Washington. Senators Duplessis and Kefauver would make a forceful team fighting crime; plain-spoken Lester Pearson would do well in Congress; Vincent Massey would have to be dropped, of course . . . too cultural; and Louis St. Laurent would have to wear more colourful shirts.

The possibilities of such a union are staggering. With Canada's raw materials and the States' industrial power we would have a forceful empire which could sit back and thumb its nose at the world. In time we would become so wealthy that we could buy up other countries . . . first Mexico, then on into South America . . . then the Pacific, bit by bit . . . and finally Asia, Europe, and Africa. The world would be ours. One united democracy. Peace would be secure. The four freedoms would flourish.

And what hinders all this? We do, sitting at home shaking our heads at this fantasic, ignorant American. By all means, let us sell ourselves to the United States.

Mind you, this should be no Manhattan Island deal. Virgin land is much too scarce these days. We must demand a good price. Let's say about ten million southern comforts, a new subway for Moose Factory, a replica of the University of Miami for Toronto, eight billion ton of blubber and a token gift of one dollar and ninety-nine cents per capita population.

There is only one catch. If we do agree to this sale, who's going to get the gravy? After succession it would be the same as taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another.

That may be republican, but it's hardly democratic.

Deplores Canadianism

Editor, The Varsity:

Your Editorial, Native Plum, is very interesting, and I am sure that you will find many to deplore with you the nationist tendencies of the present government. I wonder, however, just why such substitutions as "Government" for "Dominion", "Canadian Post" for "Royal Mail" and so forth should have been made, and why a Canadian should be considered more suitable as Governor-General than and Englishman? It might be pointed out that the use of the old terms can do no conceivable harm to the prestige of the country, nor, to answer another argument, is the salary paid an English Governor-General "wasted" since it is almost entirely spent in Canada. You have suggested that a wave of nationalism is responsible for these moves. If this is so, what is responsible for this wave of nationalism and, if not, what alternative can be suggested?

It has been pointed out that Canada might wish to sever her ties with Britain for a variety of reasons: for instance, lest Britain should wish to dominate and control Canada (a situation quite impossible to imagine at present, and one which is far from the minds of British people at any time), or alternatively, lest Canada should be burdened with the weight of a broken and impoverished defenceless Britain, like a millstone around her neck. I certainly hope that Canadians are not guilty of such morbid pessimism, or should such a situation arise, such gross dereliction of moral duty. Other arguments have been proposed along these same lines, all of which become very pallid in the light of critical examination.

It appears, therefore, that the reasons for this "Canadianization" movement lie in the surge of nationalism already noted. The question at once arises, why should there be a surge of nationalization at this time? It does not appear to have any historical or sociological background, nor has any general expression of public opinion been sought or made. I would like to suggest that it is the result of an inferiority complex among that portion of the government which has been most concerned with this movement—a vicarious complex, felt, probably miskuidedly, for Canada as a whole, and leading to rather childish attempts to bolster the national morale. The causes underlying this complex, should I think, be examined by politicians and psychologists. I think that it would be interesting, and I should like to hear what they have to say.

The last question I should like to raise is, exactly who in the government is responsible for this movement? Most reports are rather vague: "the government is doing this or that". Surely not the whole government! It will simplify matters very much if we know what persons or factions are suffering such extreme pangs of nationalism. Besides, the methods seem to be unpleasantly undemocratic.

Canada Unlimited

Editor, The Varsity:

As the future leaders of our great nation, we, the undersigned, after grave and thoughtful consideration, feel duty-bound to take some action to alleviate the distressing conditions of our neighbours to the south. We propose that the Thirteen Colonies be purchased from their Wall Street owners and annexed to Canada as the eleventh province. We further proposed that a Canadian governor be appointed until such time as the settlers are capable of electing a provincial government.

Some of the benefits to the colonists which might be derived from this magnaminious gesture by us:

1) the war would be ended and slavery abolished.

2) equal rights and privileges with all Canadians would be accorded to all literate adults.

3) their standards of living would be raised (by introducing the TTC to them and giving them radio and the CBC)

4) the new Canadians would now have freedom of speech and thought.

There will be some compensation to us if we buy Florida from Spain, California and Texas from Mexico, in the opportunity for almost unlimited Canadian expansion provided, and our increased dignity as a member of the world family of nations.

THEY'RE OUT FOR BLOOD

Struggle To Begin Monday

Next week the Students' Council is going to be out for blood.

Plans for a campus-wide blood donor campaign were announced yesterday at a noon-hour meeting in Convocation Hall of faculty and college representatives.

The campaign—to be run on the request of the Red Cross—will run from Jan. 28 to Feb. 2. The blood is to be used only for the Canadian armed forces and for civil defence, the Red Cross says.

"This business of giving blood is really nice," says SAC president Syd Wax. Wax, who donated a pint last week, says that while a student is donating, for the blood donor campaign, soft music is played in the background and later coffee and cookies are served. However, a Red Cross spokesman said yesterday that if a student looks as if he is going to faint liquor will NOT be given as this is poor first aid.

At yesterday's meeting Lt.-Col. Nancekwell of the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps, told how the blood will be used in military hospitals and explained the need for plasma in Korea for wounded Canadian troops. The blood given by students will be kept at military hospitals, and if not used within 21 days will then be converted into plasma for Korea, he said.

A demonstration team showed the delegates at the meeting in Convocation Hall how the blood donor clinic works. According to Miss Miles, in charge of this Red Cross service, the process is simple and painless. It will take only thirty minutes to donate, including 10 minutes for a rest when the coffee and cookies are served.

According to the Red Cross a doctor's certificate to donate is necessary only in special cases of high blood pressure. However, all donors are given a haemoglobin test and their blood is classified into one of several groups. Approximately a pint will be taken (actually 380 c.c. or less than 13 ozs.) and this is only about 7 per cent of the blood in a normal person.

Age limit for donors is from 18 to 65 years.

On Jan. 28th, organizers for the drive will hand out a pamphlet and blood type card to each student. Students will be asked to indicate on the card their choice of a time to attend the clinic.

The Blood Donor Clinic is in the Old Sick Children's Hospital on College St.

The cards will be collected and returned to the SAC office in Hart House. The Red Cross will then send out an appointment card.

The Blood Donor Campaign on the campus is being run by the Student Service Commission of the SAC.

The SAC representative from Law, Bud Trivett, recently urged all students to donate not just one dollar, but more if possible to SHARE. Trivett felt that similarly students should be urged to donate at least one pint of blood. The Red Cross says it is safe to donate twice a year. Buttons are given for repeat donors.

Calle d Together

The Christians of the University of Toronto have been called to assemble together in Convocation Hall this week for the Varsity Christian Mission. For non-Latin students, "ecclesia" means "call together." And doubtless some urgent mission as grouped together these students as they head for the library, or Hart House or just north.

Discuss Strikes Over Air

Varsity students will use up some of their reserve talking energy when they discuss "Have unions misused the weapon of strike" on the opening program of the Varsity Radio Round Table tonight. The program will be aired at 10.05 p.m. over CKEY.

The panel will be composed of S. J. Ramakrishnan, Grad Studies; Harry J. Waisglass, special lecturer; J. A. Lougheed, Emmanuel, and Ruth Snider, P & OTS. Harry Rasky, CKEY news editor and former UC man will act as moderator.

Waisglass, who is Educational Director of the Toronto Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers is also special lecturer in Business Administration at the University. He commented, "Unions are people and people never really want to go on strike because they realize the serious consequences. They never do go on strike unless there is no alternative."

Ruth Snider said when asked what her position was, "I don't know just what I am going to say. I do know I've worn out a lot of shoe leather since this TTC strike began."

This broadcast will be the first in a series of ten. The series is called "Of Minds and Men." The series was started last year and almost folded this year when squabbles within the Radio Committee upset organizational plans. The Committee was finally re-organized by SAC member Doug Waites, and a new chairman appointed.

C. M. Godfrey III Meds, was appointed interim chairman of the Radio Round Table Commission yesterday following the resignation of Rocky Martino, Grad. The appointment is subject to the ratification of the SAC.

Make Christ In Our Image Canon Milford Charges

Canon Milford last night charged that "we make Jesus in our own image. The Hindus choose to regard Him as the supreme mystic; the English as the epitome of the English gentleman; the Boy Scouts as the Great Chief," he said. This was the second major speech in the University Christian Mission held in Convocation Hall.

Answering the question "Is Jesus Christ Mistaken?" Canon Milford explained that Jesus is more than an ethical teacher. "He is God's answer to man's need in this world," he continued. "His divinity cannot be proved by rational argument", he said. "The only answer is found in the Bible next. 'Thou art the Christ, the son of the Living God' ", he said.

Some people doubt the existence of Jesus Christ. People consider Him an imaginary Divine being whose parallel can be found in legends of the sun god who rose from the dead, he continued.

Canon Milford said that there is such a person and that we must accept the gospel as an accurate record of His life and deeds.

Jesus came and spoke with authority and in God's name, he continued. "Naturally He differed with the religious leaders of His time who felt no love for the Publicans and Sinners. The Pharisees considered themselves God's servants in an unbelieving world, who felt that they had to keep up a standard", he said.

The facts of Jesus' life are incontrovertible, Canon Milford said; the significant is what we make of these facts, he continued.

Jesus is not content to merely receive hero worship, Canon Milford explained. He asks for total obedience before giving Salvation, he said. Canon Milford continued that this would be idolatrous and blasphemous if He were not Divine.

"Christ demands to possess you wholly", to lead you till you can follow no further, he stated. He continued, that it is dangerous to follow because you won't know where to stop and that it is necessary to go to the breaking point and beyond. Most people, he added, have mental reservations and set a limit to the lengths to which they will go.

No Parochial School Hillel Debaters Decide

Jewish students from eastern Canadian Universities and from a few American universities will be converging on Montreal Thursday night for the annual Inter-Hillel Conference, which is being held at McGill University this year.

25 members of the University of Toronto Hillel group have registered this year to go to the conference, which attempts to bring together Jewish students from different universities for an exchange of ideas.

The conference will feature a number of organized activities, including seminars and discussions, in which all students may participate. However, the visitors to Montreal will be allowed a lot of spare time for sightseeing and shopping in Canada's largest city.

One of the highlights of the conference will be the Sabbath eve fellowship on Friday night at which choirs and readings from Jewish literature be featured. The main speaker of the evening will be the Canadian poet and author A. M. Klein, who will speak on "What the Jewish Heritage Means to Me."

On Saturday morning there will be a service in the chapel and an address by Dr. A. Jospe of New York on "The Sabbath and the Jewish Student" and the evening will be spent at a musical revue and a gala dance at the Hillel House of McGill.

The climax of the whole conference will be the final debate on Sunday morning. The winners of the debates between the University of Toronto and Sir George William's College, Montreal, will oppose the winners of the McGill-Queen's debate over the resolution "That World Jewry Endorse a Program of Negotiating with Germany for Reparations". The preliminary debates were held last Sunday evening.

The conference, beginning on Friday, will last three days. It was held in Toronto last year, when students from six universities, including Buffalo and Rochester, participated.

Staff Party

The Varsity, as usual in such emergencies solemnly denies all rumours that Varsity parties are slightly more destructive than the H bomb or the Chariot Race. As a matter of fact, now that you mention it, we do happen to need a house or barn or something for the evening of February 8th — any generous offers will be gratefully received, and the host will not have to pay the usual 50 cents.

Inter-Hillel Conference At McGill This Year

The principle of separate Jewish schools was defeated Wednesday night in a debate between the Hillel groups of Toronto and Sir George Williams College, Montreal.

The resolution, which was debated in the Hillel House on St. George St., was "that the Hebrew day school is incompatible with the Canadian way of life." Toronto Hillel took the affirmative.

"We want a country in which the word 'minority' is a nuisance", said the first speaker for the affirmative, Ben Schlesinger, Social Work. "The setting up of parochial schools means a voluntary withdrawal from the privilege and right to take part in Canadian democracy", he continued.

Schlesinger stated that while he did not advocate the abolition of Hebrew day schools, he felt religion should be taught in the homes, not at school.

"Ask the mother who has scrubbed floors all day long, and the father who has worked all day if they have time to teach their children religion", countered Sir George's Solly Weinstein. "That is why we have parochial schools", he added.

Second speaker for the affirmative, Bert Bloom, IV UC, declared that Hebrew day schools were "attempts to place children in an incubation flask to protect them from the slings and arrows of society."

The Jewish culture must be kept alive to contribute to the Canadian way of life as a whole, declared Edith Jurba of Sir George, speaking for the negative. "There is no basic Canadian way of life, and no basic Canadian culture", she said. "There are only the diverse cultures of many peoples. All these are expected to contribute to make up the Canadian way of life."

Sir George Williams College was started by the Young Men's Christian Association, to which it is affiliated. Its 10,000 night students outnumber the day students 10 to one. Undergrads may proceed to a degree of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, or Bachelor of Commerce.

The Toronto winners of this debate will be debating against the winners of a similar Queen's-McGill debate at the Inter-Hillel Conference in Montreal next weekend.

Varsity Gals Join RCAF

University of Toronto women are now permitted to join the R.C.A.F. branch on the campus. Leading Aircraftsman Machan said, yesterday.

The programme will follow the men's training course as closely as possible. There will be the winter training course on the campus, and the summer training at any one of the various R.C.A.F. camps, for three years.

Women are acceptable in any course that will fit in with the men's training programme in administration, supply and medicine. They will receive the same salary as the men.

Captain Chamberlain, who is in charge of the C.O.T.C. here, said that there were no indications that there would be a women's branch in the C.O.T.C.. However, he thought it would be a wonderful idea.

There was no women's branch during the war. Unless there were a larger number of other ranks there would not be much need for women officers.

"The U.N.T.D. is not recruiting women at the present time," said Miss Gall, secretary at that office.

If Skule Victors In Band Contest Uniforms Returned

A shower of dimes and quarters will determine the winner of the Skule-sponsored band contest to be held in Convocation Hall Wednesday, January 23 at at 1:00.

Ed File, director of Victoria College's Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Band, said that two of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band's dress uniforms were "borrowed" from Skule Night and that he has made a bargain with the Skulemen. If Skule should by any chance win the contest the uniforms will be returned to them, he said.

The director of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band commented "If Skule can't beat the Scarlet and Gold they can keep the uniforms."

University College, one of the four entrants, will have a Dixie-Combo band to liven up the proceedings. The Faculty of Music's usual "Ensemble" is the fourth band in the contest.

Originally there were five bands in the contest but the entry from the Faculty of Dentistry had to drop out because the clinics were taking the time of the band members.

To fill in the time, the Master of Ceremonies and a Stooge will put on a skit.

A new instrument will probably be unveiled at the contest. The members of the Lady Godiva Memorial and have been working in the sub-basement practise room of the "Little Red Schoolhouse" perfecting an "electronic beer-bottle organ."

Admission to the contest is free.

I don't know what has held up TO LIVE IN PEACE, but this Italian film is more than a couple years late. Because of this, it loses a large hunk of the appreciation it would have gathered if it had come along in the immediate wake of OPEN CITY and SHOESHINE.

Director Luigi Zampa is a member of good standing of the Rossellini-de Sica school of realism, and his TO LIVE IN PEACE is a comedy dressed in realism. Aldo Fabrizi, the rotund priest in OPEN CITY is star and scenario writer of TO LIVE IN PEACE. Fabrizi is the film's top asset.

In a quiet Italian village, guarded over by one German soldier, come two fleeing GIs one a Negro. Fabrizi is a peasant with a large noisy menage, consisting of a screeching wife, a bugle-blowing grandfather, and a young niece and nephew. In face of frightening edicts against the harboring of escaped prisoners, Fabrizi finds himself giving shelter to the two GIs. This is more than awkward, since despite the comparative isolation of his farm, both the Nazi and the official sympathizer have a fondness for the old man's wines.

Gar Moore is the American war correspondent who has escaped with Johnny Kitzmiller, the Negro GI. Moore (seen in PAISAN) snares the heart of the budding young niece (Mirella Monti), but is one of these intellectual Americans who talks and talks, about a story he is going to write yet.

The menage of Fabrizi starts off the day with a shout and brings it up. And this noise culminates in the mad noisy party when Kitzmiller who has been shut up for security in the family wine-cellar breaks down the door to come face-to-face with the wine-soaked German soldier. What happens when the enemies realize each other's identity is the best blow against total abstinence since Prohibition.

Mirella Monti is a refreshing thing, slim, boyish and charming. She is a definite contrast from the abundant Italian heroines we have become used to, such as Magnani or Mangano. Ave Ninchi is a delightful, strident shrew. But this is Fabrizi's show.

He is a Neapolitan comic, who turned serious actor in OPEN CITY, and in TO LIVE IN PEACE, he blends the two aptitudes of slapstick comic and serious acting. It is the comic that wins out. He is a wonderful figure when stomping on grapes in his barn. He is even better, rolling his eyes and shrugging his shoulders and hips with jitterbugging or being harried by his complaining helpmeet.

TO LIVE IN PEACE is an uneven film. It it had come along while our appetites had just been freshly whetted by the early efforts of Rosselini and de Sica, we would have been much more satisfied. But since then, we have had BICYCLE THIEF and the Hollywood-produced TERESA. So TO LIVE IN PEACE has tougher competition to beat.

But just for Aldo Fabrizi, this film is worth hitching a ride north to the International Cinema.

Having seen QUO VADIS at an advance screening, I find myself agreeing with Mr. Whittaker of the Globe. The spectacles, and the film abounds in them, are not only impressive in a day when movie spectacles are old-hat, but they are integral parts of the story and interesting satisfying.

QUO VADIS is an excellent film because the supporting players are predominantly British, and they bring touches of subtlety to essentially corny, if grandiose, mellerdrama. Peter Ustinov's Nero is a high point of the film, outdoing even the burning of Rome and the savage persecution of the Christians in the arena.

QUO VADIS has $7 million worth of excitement, ham, corn, exotic horror, and sex. It is Cecil B. De Mille plus a generous helping of society.

Judaism Ancient Manual Original Communist Text

The second oldest communist text known is the recently discovered Dead Sea Manual of discipline, according to a faculty member. Professor Heichelheim of the UC Classics Department says that the Essenes, the third faction of Judaism set down in the 1st century B.C. their manual of discipline dealing with their communal way of life. The only earlier communist text is the Republic of Plato.

Prof. Heichelheim says that the Essenes lived in houses which were communal property and ate communal meals as they strove for ascetic poverty as a means of realizing absolute purity.

Prof. Heichelheim believes that the organization of the Essenes influenced the early Christian community in Jerusalem as some passages in the scroll are only explained by reference to the Gospels. However Prof Heichelheim says that after a short time Christianity modified this organization and went over to a much freer way of life.

The original work on the scroll was done by W. F. Albright and W. H. Brownlee in the United States, and A. Dupont-Sommer in France.

Prof. Heichelheim said yesterday that the Scroll also throws some light on the tendency of charity organizations to become socialist in nature. He explained that Old Testament scholars have long discussed the meaning of the Hebrew work Chesed, roughly translated as charity, or mercy, or loving kindness. In 1927 Prof Glueck at Cincinnati defined Chesed as meaning "the right behavior of people, and also of the Lord in a collective community." This, according to Prof. Heichelheim, was not always accepted as it pre-supposed a close affinity between Chesed and the Christian virtue of Charity with the early collectivistic experiments of Jews and Christians. The new scroll, in his opinion, proves that Prof. Glueck was right as Chesed appears to be the main behavior ideal of the Essenian communists.

This, he says, may relate the socialist tendencies of modern times to religious-socialism as well as modern conditions.

Original Music To Be Featured At Symposium

How often do you get to a musical world premiere? A chance to hear some absolutely brand-new music comes your way tomorrow afternoon at 5:00 p.m., when the works of four composers from the Royal Conservatory of Music are performed in Hart House.

The regular Wednesday afternoon series in the Music Room this week will feature works being considered by the Conservatory for inclusion in their recital at the forthcoming symposium of the International Federation of Music Students. The performers as well as the composers are senior students at the Conservatory.

Symposia of music students are held once a year at one of the member schools of each chapter of the International Federation of Music Students. Three years ago, the Conservatory was host to students from several schools from the north-eastern States. The purpose of the symposia is chiefly to allow student composers in the various schools to hear and compare each other's works.

Tomorrow's recital consists of four different kinds of music: a clarinet sonata, a sonatina for piano, a group of songs and a violin sonata. The first two will be performed by the composers, Morris Eisenstadt and Paul McIntyre, Barbara Franklin and Delores Mochree will be heard in the works of Charles Wilson and Feggie Shiff.

All members of Hart House are invited to attend this recital, in the Music Room at 5:00 p.m. tomorrow. No tickets are required.

Public Utility Strike Rights Debate Topic

The right of public utility employees to strike will be discussed this afternoon in the UC mock parliament at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

Presenting the motion that "public utility employees be prohibited from striking" will be Tom Daly I UC. Supporting him will be Alice Lucacs III UC. Those opposing the motion are George Brigden IV and Aaron Brown III UC.

Brigden, the only debater available for comment, stated, "Whereas the present situation tends to indicate unions are irresponsible, this is not necessarily so." He said "Complete prohibition of the right to strike is dangerous to the structure of labor relations in the future."

Artist Teaches Art of Mixing Art and Religion

In a little room above a garage at 97 St. George Street, a few students gathered together last January to form an art group. This group, which was soon joined by a few faculty members and non-students, planned to hold creative relaxation evening under the guidance of sculptress Clair Hellar.

In these evenings the group listen to good music, hold discussions, and try their hand at modelling in clay while Miss Hellar discusses the technical aspects of her art and its religious applications.

Miss Hellar believes that if man was created in the image of God, then he has creative ability, and there must be many people going about their daily work without exercising their potentialities. Miss Hellar and her group are trying to discover where art fits into the picture in relation to God and man . . . art's real meaning and function.

"You must model not only the outer form of the subject, but you must try to capture the expression of contact with God," claims Miss Hellar. One of her latest works is a mask of a first year Trinity Theological student, Clive Abdullah of Trinidad, and at present Miss Hellar is looking for another interesting subject to model.

Clair Hellar was a professional sculptress before she entered full-time Church work as a deaconess in the Anglican Church. She received her formal art study at the Ontario College of Art and has exhibited her works in the Toronto Art Gallery and in the National Art Gallery, Ottawa.

"Can art as we know it survive without religious inspiration? and can religion be an actuality without the means of artistic expression?" asks Clair Hellar. "Religion is concerned with all of the fine art", she holds, and illustrated this by telling of the formation of a drama group in conjunction with her modelling group.

Miss Hellar welcomes any student who wants to drop into the studio to discuss the group's work or to try their hand at working with clay. Anyone wanting to offer leadership in any of the fine arts, especially music, in relation to God is particularly welcome.

You and I

Clive Abdullah sits beside a mask of him which was modelled in plaster by sculptress Clair Heller last July. Abdullah, whose home is in Trinidad, is a first year Theological student at Trinity. Miss Heller at present is looking for an interesting looking student model.

Lyric Ghan Hillel Star

Lyric soprano Esther Ghan will be the guest at a Hillel House recital this evening at 8:30. Born in Winnipeg, Miss Ghan first studied piano before her voice was accidently discovered.

Miss Ghan is familiar to Toronto audiences due to her frequent appearances on the radio. At Hillel House she will present a program of songs from all over the world.

Appearing with Miss Ghan will be Jules Constant, III Meds, a flautist who will play a number of unusual compositions.

Coat Thieves Thwarted At Varsity, Police Hope

By DON BURWASH

With the arrest and subsequent sentencing of three men recently, City Police and University police both expressed the hope yesterday that the wave of coat thefts from University buildings would diminish.

The arrests culminated weeks of diligent investigating and patient waiting by city morality officers following student complaints of coat thefts from Hart House, Anatomy, Medical and Electrical buildings, and two St. George St. buildings.

A morality officer, Const. Dukes, spent days casually loitering about Hart House, planting station wagon coats and watching for the thief. Mingled with the undergrads, the youthful plainclothes detective blended well with the environment. His days of patient watching were rewarded with the arrest of a man, who later pleaded guilty to thirty-odd coat theft charges.

Pawn Shops and second-hand stores across the city have yielded gabardine, winter and station waggon coats, which detectives have gathered in a basement storeroom at police headquarters on College Street.

University police chief R. D'Arcy said yesterday that two 25-year-old youths, formerly residents of nearby Grosvenor St., had been sentenced to twelve and eighteen month prison terms upon conviction of coat thefts from campus buildings and neighboring restaurants. City police found coats in their room when arrested.

"Some of these thieves fail to realize that when the pawnbroker asks for his name and address, the dealer is actually writing down the seller's description for police benefit," he stated. Four city policemen spend every day checking second-hand shops and pawnbrokers.

"It seems rather foolish for students to leave a good coat outside a lecture room or lab, inviting a thief to walk off with it", he added.

Const. Dyce of police stores added that most students are unable to identify their coats to police satisfaction. "The majority can't even name the manufacturer of their apparel. We plan to return most of the remaining coats to the shops," he said.

A detective officer at police headquarters denied that student claimants were forced to repay the pawnbroker and second-hand dealer the money he advanced to the thief for the coats. "No one is under any compulsion to pay the five or six dollars to recover the coat; the proprietors may be sued in a civil court to get the coat back", he added.

A second year medical student last week paid six dollars to recover his topcoat, with the hope of being repaid the sum from a floater insurance policy. Police officials, however, denied that he was under any compulsion to pay the sum.

Campus Profile

Lorne T. Morgan

BY PEARL PARNES

"The only way capitalism can and ever will function, is during a war, a fact which has been amply proved by the world situation". This is the thesis which Professor Lorne T. Morgan ironically propounds in one of his booklets "The Permanent War, or, Homo the Sap".

The booklet is an economic satire on our present economic and political set-up. Dr. Morgan, Associate Professor of Political Economy, accuses both Stalin and Truman of stealing his idea, "without giving either credit or royalty. I am somewhat peeved!"

Dr. Morgan has been on the staff of the University of Toronto for the past twenty years. He was born in the United States, but moved to the Maritimes in infancy. At ten years of age, he moved to Vancouver. "Rather, my parents did the moving. I just went along for the ride."

He lived in Vancouver for 18 years, getting his B.A. at the University of British Columbia in Political Science and Economics. Then he went to the University of California on a fellowship where he took his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees. For six years he remained on the staff at California as instructor in Economics, and then came to the University of Toronto.

During his twenty years here, he has been on leave of absence to the University of Buffalo, lecturing in industrial relations, and to the War-time Information Board in Ottawa during 1944-45 as director of research.

Five years in the Merchant Navy during and after World War I started Dr. Morgan on his extensive travels. True to the advertising slogan of the navy, "Join the navy and see the world", he visited the Orient, Alaska, the South Seas, and many other parts of the globe during his service.

He has been on many trips to Europe, largely for study purposes. One of his most exciting and dangerous trips was in 1939. He spent most of the year in Germany and Italy, studying Fascism in the countries which provided the best examples of that ideology. He worked in secret most of the time. "I would have found it inconvenient had my presence been announced."

As it was, the months were spent in the midst of one crisis after another. "The question in most foreigners' minds was, do we leave now or tomorrow?" While he was in Italy, Franco triumphed in Spain, "an event wildly celebrated in Italy", Mussolini took Albania, and the famous Pact of Steel was signed.

Then, on August 15, he left for Germany. He stayed in Vienna until the British Consul ordered him out, for his own protection. He was warned not to go north through Germany, and went to Budapest, Hungary. He was caught there when war broke out, and was there during the signing of the pact between Russia and Germany. Then he fled by train to Trieste, "from the frying pan to the fire", and eventually made his way to England, and then back to Canada.

Since then he has written many pamphlets and articles on Fascism, such as "Fascism: from origins to maturity, in theory and practice", and "State Intervention in the Economic Life of Fascist Italy".

"Fascism started first in Italy, succeeded first and lasted longest there. But it is far from disappearing from the world scene. It is latent today, and in such countries as Spain, Portugal and Argentina, it is thriving. If World War III comes, there is a strong likelihood of it developing elsewhere." Dr. Morgan describes fascism as an advanced type of economic nationalism, with almost certain guarantee of war sooner or later.

State intervention is not limited to Fascist governments, believes Dr. Morgan. "State intervention in the economic life of a country is here to stay in some form or other. The big question today is, who intervenes, how much, and for what purpose". In one of his courses, he discusses this question, taking examples of its growth from the United States under a Liberal-Democratic set-up, Italy under the fascist set-up, and the U.S.S.R. under the Communist set-up.

The New Deal is the example Dr. Morgan uses from the American economy. "The United States was the most ruggedly individualistic country in the world until the New Deal came in. It marked a turning-point in her economic and political history. The goal of the New Deal was to rewind an economic system which had run down, and at the same time to eliminate some of its grosser abuses. The result, inevitably, was a rapid growth of state intervention in the economic life of the country."

The issue of the New Deal is still a source of hot controversy in the United States today, Dr. Morgan feels. "The coming election will be fought on it as much as on the issue of foreign policy. Against Truman's version, called the Fair Deal, is Senator Taft's non-interventionist policies. Incidentally, Taft is non-interventionist except in the field of agriculture. The fact that his constituency is largely agricultural may account for this one exception!"

Summarize Heritage Of Western Culture In Church's Report

THE HERITAGE OF WESTERN CULTURE edited by C. R. Chalmers. Ryerson Press. 1952, Paper $2.00, Cloth $2.50.

Taking its cue from the world-scale attempts of UNESCO to educate peoples all over the world with regard to the traditions from which they have sprung, and to give them direction for the future, The General Council of the United Church of Canada authorized a Commission on Culture 'to write a report that would evaluate modern culture from the standpoint of the Church'. The Report compiled by this Commission was published in 1950 under the title The Church and the Secular World, the first section of which dealt with the origin and development of Western Culture.

The Heritage of Western Culture is a revised and expanded account of this first section of The Church and the Secular World, and has just been published by Ryerson Press in inexpensive paper and cloth editions for the general public. Coming at an extremely opportune time, The Heritage of Western Culture will provide students with a compact historical account of the problems now being discussed by the University Christian Mission.

An attempt to gather together in the short space of 117 pages the past tradition from whence we have derived our present standards and at the same time to interpret the signs of the times and throw a forward-looking glance is quite a large order. We felt that Professors White and Irving did the most with the subject assigned to them in the short space at their disposal. Miss White did a difficult job with ease. Professors Graham, Cousland and Chalmers were dealing with a subject matter that it is practically impossible to condense into a short space, as well as with a period in time not as familiar to the general reader as Greek and Roman civilization. Prof. Graham's article on the Hebraic Contributions, for instance, gives evidence of a tremendous amount of work and scholarship on his part, but is rather a large theme to be assimilated by the average reader.

In dealing with the modern scene, both Professors Frye and Irving seem to feel that the great technological discoveries of our era and the techniques which the social sciences have uncovered are both tools man must learn to control and use. The end for which man is striving, and the only one which can give him a position of control over these vast powers is for these writers a religious goal. If we do not approach modern life with an ethical directive grounded in universal moral values, if we do not use our great physical powers to baffle evil and tyranny, then these elements will gain control over us —the smile, to use Professor Frye's analogy, will be on the face of the tiger.

Evaluate Problem Of Negro

N BEING NEGRO IN AMERICA by J... Saunders Redding. McClelland and Stewart, 1952, $4.00

If racial discrimination on the orth American continent is still ving people like Richard Wright Paris, Paul Robeson into the ms of the Communists and Mar- Anderson up the freight eleva- or in the Royal York Hotel, To- onto, then we still have both the me and place for a book like Saunders Redding's On Being egro in America.

In this instance we have even ore respect than usual for the po- ion presented to us, for although ending is quite emotional his feel- g never run away with him to e extent that either his common nse or his intellectual vision is uded. Just about every race lo' is considered by this author om what he calls "negro chau- nu m" to the compensatory 'We're tter than they are' with which cial minorities console themselves hen subjected to discrimination.

Rejecting all the position he de- ribes in the earlier part of his ok Redding emerges as an 'inte- at onist'. "The concept of com- e integration," Redding writes, eems to me to represent the logi- l evolution of democratic think- g. The unity of mankind from en the biological and social view- ints is the main thing. To recog- e this and to act accordingly is e just requirement of modern an . . . in order to accomplish is. We think that altogether too much attention has been given lately to the sins of The Great Doers. The Education Issue took them for a wonderful ride—Doctors, Dentists, Engineers, Occupational Therapists, Hotel Managers—all bore the brunt of having equipped themselves only with skills to face this complex world. Again, in yesterday's issue of The Varsity one more wooly-channeled mind left its study of ancient Gandhara Sculpture to charge them anew for neither being, nor wanting to be 'non-technical thinkers, dangerous valuable men and women who will ask all the embarrassing questions'. We winced for a moment at the thought of the undeserved beating that The Great Doers have been taking in the press and sat down at our typewriter to offer them the consolation of Philosophy.

We wanted to tell them that when one extreme is being berated it is only too easy to forget the extremes which have characterized the opposition for years, and in this respect we think it's time someone dug up the old cliches that used to surround the non-technical thinkers—The Higher Lifers (before they got in a 'plight').

"The Higher Lifer," Aldous Huxley wrote once, "escapes into a world where there's no risk to health and the minimum of responsibilities . . . a world that tradition regards as actually superior to the world of responsible living—higher . . . in this world you detach yourself from the past; you refuse to commit yourself in the future; you have no convictions, but live moment by moment; you renounce your own identity, except as a Higher Lifer and become just a succession of states . . . Scholars, philosophers are conventionally supposed to be impractical. But what other class of men has succeeded in getting the world to accept it and (more astonishing) go on accepting it and at its own valuation? Kings have lost their divine right, plutocrats look as though they were going to lose theirs. But Higher Lifers continue to be labelled as superior . . ."

Of course you know what we're going to say. The Medieval Higher Lifers have had their day in history. In the past five hundred years the Great Doers have held the limelight. Surely now it's possible for . . . but never mind.

Author Turns Toward India As Hope For World Peace

SEARCH AFTER SUNRISE: A TRAVELLER'S STORY by Vera Brittain. Macmillan's, 1951, $3.25.

Miss Vera Brittain, pacifist and upholder of world brotherhood and peace, having seen two crushing world wars, turns to regenerated India for fresh sources of hope and wisdom. As she tells us in the opening chapter, "The idea which runs through this book is that of a two-fold quest. It attempts to describe the search of India and Pakistan for a new future in their ancient land, but it also embodies the writer's seeking after fresh sources of hope in a continent hitherto outside her experience."

Miss Brittain's visit to India was undertaken as a member of a world conference called by some followers of Gandhi who were interested in the ideas and techniques of peace-making embodied in the principle of Satyagraha or Non-Violence. These followers wanted to discuss the possibility of using Gandhi's principles in solving post-war problems, and in the creation of peace through spiritual power. The main centres of the conference were at Santiniketan where Tagore founded his university, and Gandhi's ashram at Sevagram. During her nine-week stay, the author travelled over most of India, visited all her main cities, and talked with many of her most important political personalities.

This book emerges as a serious and painstaking record of the new India seen in the light of its successful struggle towards a renaissance after long years of inertia and foreign domination. We are given much information as to the ideas and lives of the three great men who were the inspiration and initiators of this resurgence: Gandhi's prophet and leader, Tagore, poet and philosopher, and Nehru, the present Prime Minister. The tone of the book throughout is colored by Miss Brittain's own sympathy with the aims of these men.

The reader is apt to feel that the crucial question of India-Pakistan relations is too sketchily treated, but on the whole Miss Brittain has been more successful than most in her attempt to present India to the West.

Analyse Theories Of US Economist

SCHUMPETER: SOCIAL SCIENTIST. Edited by Prof. Harris. S. J. Reginald Saunders, 1951, $5.50.

Professor Harris, who edits this volume, was fortunate in being able to gather together as competent a collection of economists as he has. The result is a book which does full justice to the best aspect of Schumpeter's work written by colleagues who knew him well, either at Harvard or abroad. But at the same time it suffers from an unevenness of tone that is inevitable in a work of this kind.

However, this is all beside the point. The book's main value lies in being as excellent an account of Schumpeter's system as can be found anywhere — especially in the essays by Marget (who almost turns Schumpeter into a Keynesian), Haberler and Hausen who manage to bring out the full significance of Schumpeter's contribution to dynamic economic theory. In a sense economics has not yet caught up to the breadth of vision that he displayed in 1911; but in another sense, Schumpeter never caught up with modern economics.

Most of the writers seem bothered, though few admit it, by Schumpeter's persistent refusal to admit any trace of modern theory into his system. Perhaps it is, as Samuelson suggests, that "he was too self-conscious to let old-age clutter up the aesthetic life-line laid down by the genius of youth". At any rate, Econometrics, for all his sponsoring of it, imperfect competition, Keynes, none of these made any impression on his system.

Especially Keynes. Schumpeter's antipathy to Keynes appears to have been almost personal, despite the many similarities between the two systems. Many of the tools used by Schumpeter in his Theory of Economic Development were later used by Keynes, (without credit to Schumpeter) and as Harris points out, Keyne's advances in the theory of interest, the consumption function and the multiplier could have been incorporated with profit in Schumpeter's theory.

Nevertheless, in his 1946 Memorial to Keynes, Schumpeter wrote: "If only people could be made to understand this (that Keynes was interested only in formulating policy applicable only to England) then they would also be transplanted into foreign soil: it dies and becomes poisonous before it dies."

Edit Special Issue Of Canad'n Verse

CONTEMPORARY VERSE: Anniversary number (1941-1951) edited by Alan Crawley.

Contemporary Verse is probably the best Canadian poetry quarterly in existence at present and deserves to be congratulated for the high standard of verse it has published over the past ten years. The editor, Alan Crawley has been with it since its inception, and although Contemporary Verse has by no means grown in that time into what you would call a "going concern" it has been persistent, if irregular in publishing serious poetry.

This Fall's Anniversary Issue contains two contributions from each of the six original contributors to the first issue in 1941, namely Earle Birney, P. K. Page, Dorothy Live- say, Floris McLaren, Leo Kennedy, A. J. M. Smith, Doris Ferne and Anne Marriot, as well as work by E. J. Pratt, Anne Wilkinson, the late J. K. Heath and others. Generally speaking the poetry is full of fresh words and images which make it a pleasure to read and is obviously written by a group of people who write simply for the satisfaction it gives them and for whom Contemporary Verse provides a small audience.

As a matter of fact we like what Contemporary Verse is doing so well that we think it should have a wider audience among students interested in writing and reading Canadian poetry. Subscriptions by the way are available for a dollar a year and may be obtained by writing to Contemporary Verse 2487 Florence St., Victoria, B.C.

Squash Finals Noon To-day In Hart House

The University Squash finals take place at 12:20 today in Hart House. Tom Dancy of Vic faces Ric Gaunt of Trinity for the championship. Dancy beat out Bob Montgomery of Meds and Gaunt defeated Ed Roth also of Meds, as the two gained their berths in the finals. Both of the players found the semi-finals rather easy going and this should indicate a very close final.

Rick Gaunt, who is captain of the University team, also reached the finals last year when he lost a close 3-2 decision to Clive Cameron. Dancy plays a hard-hitting game which is very effective in the small court at Hart House. Dancy also has the speed and power but Gaunt has the experience in top-flight competition. This should add up to make it a tight final.

Jack Liebel a perennial winner in the graduate competition is playing Bill O'Malley in this year's final. O'Malley suffered a severe nose injury however and this game has been postponed for several weeks

Meds Beat Skule In Rough Contest

In a rough and poorly-played major league b-ball game Friday Sr. Meds shaded Sr. SPS 28-26. Both teams played at their worst but the boys from Meds seemed to have a definite edge despite the close score. There were thirty-four fouls including one technical called by the referees.

Bill Page and Joe Greenberg hooped seven apiece for the Docs and it was their playing that gave Meds the win. The best man for the losers was Hank Tamowski who scored six points.

Skule took a five-point lead in the first quarter but the Docs had tied it up by the second break. During the final minutes the winners went three points up and Skule couldn't get more than the technical foul.

Shown above is a picture of the senior interfaculty basketball game between St. Mike's A and Sr. UC yesterday. SMC won the game after a scoring scramble had been fixed up. They beat the winless Redmen 43-31. The winners were only leading at half time by 20-19 but they piled on the score in the second half to build up a 12 point lead at the end of the game.

O'Connor and Trainor sparked the Mikemen with nine each and Hadlow and Slick shared the honours for the losers each hooping eight.

Skule Beat Meds Wilson Scores 3

In a scrambly, rather disorganized looking game, yesterday, Sr. S.P.S., led by Wilson's hat-trick, were definitely the better team as they doubled the score on Sr. Meds. 6-3. The hapless Meds sextet seemed at no time to have the edge in play, although they opened the scoring in the game, when Zotelny notched one on a screened shot from the blueline after two minutes of the first frame.

To match the lone Meds' tally, Skule sank three. The first two, from Beattie and Wilson were slapped in due mainly to some poor defensive clearing by the Medsmen. The third tally came near the of the period, when Raftis sailed in, drew the defence to the corner and flipped out to Crann, who picked the open corner. The only penalty of the game came at the end of the first frame, when Hyde was hoofed to the sin-bin for tripping Smith of Skule on a breakaway.

The second stanza was very similar in action but the brand of hockey tended to improve a little towards the end of the period when the passes of both teams started clicking. As in the first period, S.P.S. notched three goals, two by Wilson, which completed his hat-trick, and one by Sullivan who slapped the loose puck into the twine after a goal mouth scramble. The losers scored twice, but it just wasn't enough to do the trick. Longo and Sims were the goal getters.

Both teams have played much better hockey than this in former games but neither could seem to get their passing to click, and with the exception of Skule's Burley who handed out two or three good bodychecks, the lack of hitting was apparent. Best for the winners were Wilson, Beattie, Burley and smith. Sims, Hyde and Longo shone for the losers.

Kofmel Wins 100 In Monday Meet

Eric Kofmel, the closest replica of Bob McFarlane in SPS, won the Interfaiulty 100 yards yesterday in 11.1 seconds, just three-tenths of a secnnd off the record. Owing to the fact that the race has to be run around a bend at Hart House, the time would be equal to anywhere from about 10.1 to 10.3 on an outdoor track.

Kofmel, a well-built 190 pounds on a 6'1" frame, is having his best year in track since coming to the University four years ago. He won the Intercollegiate quarter mile last fall in 51.9 seconds.

Runner-up in the 100 yards was Jack Warga, OCE, who did 11.3 Tied for third were Doug Wilson, OCE; Monte Harris, UC; Larry Yeigh, SPS; and Bob Bazos, Trinity, with 11.6 each.

The 880 was run after the 100, but the new measurement of the track, which puts the start back about 30 yards, is proving to be a tough obstacle to the middle distance men. Although the distance run now is the full 880 yards, the sharp bends at the end of the track make running the distance at the pace it should be, a difficult proposition.

Chuck Wortman, Vic, won the race in 2 minutes, 7.2 seconds. Murray Gaziuk, UC-PHE, was close behind, and George McMullen, Grad Studies, got the third best time running in a different heat as Crawford, UC, was fourth.

In the Junior 880, Gord Bane won in 2:21. Only four entered, as three finished.

Sportshoes

Several exciting hockey games highlighted the intramural sports action yesterday. Dents A beat UC III, 4-1 in a clean fast game marred only by an accident to Earl of UC which required stitches. Locke and Livingstone were the big scorers for Dents while Murchison posted the lone UC tally.

Friday night, Institutional Management shaded SPS V in a very close exciting game. The managers took a 3-2 lead in the first period and the teams shared the honors in the second. There were six penalties handed out in the game which closed with an exciting rush as the Skulemen tried to tie the score. Weese sparked the winners with two goals in a good display.

Also on Friday UC III downed SPS III in a very close game. The Redmen took a 4-1 lead in the first period as Ken Kurt performed a hat trick but the Skulemen fought back in the final period outscoring UC 3-1. The game was quite rough as nine penalties were handed out in the tight game. Zanbig did his best for the losers as he rammed in two goals.

Major League basketball saw SPS fifths come from behind to down Vic fourths 42-32. The Skulemen were three points behind at the end of the first session but pulled steadily ahead through the rest of the game. Harrison of Skule led the winners with fifteen and this was equalled by Pearce of Vic.

Blues Meet Bells Tonite

The Varsity Blues B-ball team will meet the Tri-Bell crew in an exhibition tilt tonight at St. Mike's gym (Bathurst and St. Clair). The Green and Gold will be out to avenge their only defeat of the season which the U. of T. squad handed them last week. The Blues took that one 59-57, but will have trouble repeating in this game.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Two brothers came to the University of Toronto this year who are going to make a big impression in athletic circles hereabouts. In fact, both have made a good start in that line already.

John Stulac, a graduate of PHE at Toronto in 1948, joined the Physical Education staff last fall. His younger brother, George, enrolled in Phys Ed.

John, as a staff man, has of course not been acquiring the printer's ink that George has. Formerly Associate Physical Director at West End Y, he has taken on the duties of staff man in charge of swimming at Varsity, which means getting material out for the swim team, helping Cres McCatty at coaching where necessary, taking the acquatics classes for Bronze Medallion and Red Cross Swimmers, and drilling the volunteer instructors who take charge of those unfortunates who take swim classes for PT credits.

George is Varsity's best bet for an entry in the XV Olympiad at Helsinki this summer. A red-hot basketball player who topped the TSSAA in scoring with Western Tech last year, and whom Bob Masterson considers one of the three best basketball players at Varsity now, he decided to forego Senior basketball this year in order to keep up his swimming. A specialist in the 100 yards and 220 free style, he did 54 flat in the 100 in the relay here last Saturday. The Canadian record is 52.2.

Actually, John was in a large way responsible for George's coming to Varsity. Last year John was set for a transfer to the London YMCA, and George was going to enroll at Western. Then John got his appointment at Varsity, and George decided to stay in Toronto after all.

The effect on this year's swim team has been remarkable. George, along with backstroke artist Bill McIlroy, and freestyler Doug Gibson (all former pupils of John at West End Y), went down to Detroit last month and placed second is the State Swim Meet beaten only by Detroit Turner, 44-26 in a field of 15 entries. George won the hundred that day in 54:3. Since 24 of Detroit's points were made on relays, it is possible that Toronto could have won had they entered a fourth man good enough to make up a relay team.

The Blue team, under John Stulac and Cres McCatty, will certainly be a contender for the intercollegiate swim title. Whether George Stulac garners Olympic honours this year or not, his scoring pace with the Orphuns has practically guaranteed him a key spot with future Blue cage teams.

The spring term sports schedule is beginning to take shape, and from all accounts every corner is well covered.

Intercollegiate Basketball begins Wednesday, when the Varsity gals head for McMaster for a double bill Intermediate and Senior tourney. At later dates there will be games with Normal School squad, O.A.C. and possibly a team of O.C.E. grads, if there are enough in the vicinity that have kept in training. And then there is the big Intercoll meet at Queen's February 22 and 23, to decide the 1952 home of the Bronze Bab.

The Badminton club has slated the Intramural meet for the morning of the 29 and 30 of this month to be followed by the Intercollegiate competition at McGill on the 15 and 16 of February. From all reports the U. of T. gang should be able to carry off the honors without much difficulty.

The bowling girls are out to win national laurels in the Canadian Intercollegiate telegraphic meet this week.

Hockey, volleyball and skiing are all going concerns. The hockey and v-ball intramurals are run off daily, and busses leave for Newmarket every Sunday to carry the slaloming and schussing gals to snowy slopes. The first of March will see the volleyball Intercollegiate tourney at McMaster and the Intramural ski meet at Collingwood.

Sportswoman

Volleyball

Women's Intramural Volleyball opened last night in the LM gym when St. Hilda's I defeated Vic I 57 to 15. The game was as one-sided as the score indicates, with the gals from Trinity cashing in on the smooth, controlled teamwork of their well organized crew.

The first half was played on a rotation scheme, which gave the Saints a chance to display individual versatility and to chalk up points to the Vicsters' 8.

In the second chapter the new compulsory non-rotation scheme was used. This gives the players an opportunity to specialize on certain positions, which should raise the standards of their performance. St. Hilda's had a powerhouse in the net line of Allan, Toland and Southgate which successfully smashed all the Scarlet and Grey squad's attempts, bouncing down a total of 29 points to the Victors' 15.

The Trinity team had a cast of first-rate servers with Dyer, Paisley, and Barb Watts turning in outstanding performances. Janet Jefferies was a steady pace to the winners.

Mavis Reid starred for Vic, with Joyce Bingleman and Sandra Lellan playing good net defence.

Hockey

The girls from St. Hilda's defeated U.C. in a wide open hockey game last Friday, with a score of 5-1. Saints lit into the first period and netted a goal in the first minute of play. Three more followed in quick succession to end the frame. Penny Ketchum, Scotty Matthews and Joan Stirling scored for the winners, on covered shots, and after net scrambles, as the St. Hilda's completely out-skated their opponents.

U.C. retaliated in the second period, dominating the play entirely. After repeated attempts to center the puck, they finally succeeded on a clean shot into the corner of the Saints' net, Barb. Rec. doing the honors.

A re-invigorated St. Hilda's unit livened an otherwise uneventful third period and banged in a further counter to end the scoring.

Stars of the Saints were Scotty Matthews, Joan Stirling, defenceman Lou Willard. Di Cox and Daphne Walker were outstanding for U.C.

Two Kresz Sonata Programs Show Varying Quality—Reviewer

Geza and Norah de Kresz gave two sonata programs over the week-end, the first on Saturday at the Museum theatre and the second on Sunday at Wymilwood. The two concerts stood in sharp contrast in quality of performance. Whereas at the Museum, good musicianship was revealed throughout, the Wymilwood concert was a complete failure.

To say de Kresz played like an inexperienced amateur at Wymilwood would be to soften the blow. His tone was small and sometimes tinny, his slides were harsh and jerky, and much too often he was out of tune.

Both pianist and violinist plodded heavily and mechanically through the Bach F Minor Sonata killing its essential spirituality. The subtle and witty dialogue of Mozart's B-flat Major Sonata (K 454) was blunted by Mr. De Kresz's turbid playing and misplaced accents. The beautiful Cesar Franck Sonata in A Major, was attacked with impassioned fury, but the result was mmuddledness which degenerated into complete chaos at the climactic close.

At the Museum theatre, in a concert presented by the Toronto Music Lovers' Club, Mr. and Mrs. de Kresz performed a great deal better. They did a very fine job on Richard Strauss' E Flat Major Sonata (Opus 18). Mr. de Kresz caught its shifting moods of pensive lyrical tranquility and colourful vigorous movement and he was completely up to the tremendous finale of this sonata.

Undoubtedly Mr. de Kresz's most outstanding performance over the week-end was that of the Suite No. 2, a new Canadian work by Patricia Blomfield-Holt. Originally written for the viola, Miss Blomfield-Holt has very successfully transcribed it for the violin, and it is about to be published. The composer shows a sensitive awareness of the technical lyrical capacities of the violin. The work consists of three contrasting movements, each even in texture, a melodious, introspective Lento, with its theme in modern intervals, an emotional, vigorous Allegretto, and a witty, quick-moving Allegro.

The Suite is not 'philosophically' profound but tends more to the Prokofieffean type of lightness. It was extremely interesting, both in form and matter, and I would strongly recommend it to violinists who are searching for modern and worthwhile works to include in their repertory.

Aggie and Mac

The Farmer's Daughter

"Some women hate housework and cooking. Must they give up the idea of married life?" Somebody spluttered, and everyone sat nearer the edge of his chair anticipating a spirited reply. The discussion was part of the EAC sponsored Caledon week-end in which OAC and MacDonald Institute were guests of University of Toronto students.

Most arrived at the farm Saturday afternoon. By the evening, after a hike and some skating, any shyness had disappeared and friendly banter enlivened the games, movies and dancing which followed. The Aggies cleared up any illusions which might have existed regarding the farmer-to-be and the Mack girls were captivating. "Mac girls have no impulses", one girl was heard to say The generality implied by this statement was later found to be false.

Sunday morning the Toronto group were dismayed to learn that the Aggies are extremely conscientious about early-rising. A hike after breakfast soon cleared foggy minds and an energetic guide led the party through the generally-considered impenetrable marshes on the outskirts of the farm. Damage was heavy as rubber boots became submerged and the roaring fire back at the farmhouse was surrounded with various garments.

In the afternoon, English and its Place in the Scientific Course, Modern Farming, and the Place of Marriage in a Woman's Life were all given a spirited going-over.

When the time for departure had arrived, friendships were regretfully interrupted and all expressed a hope for more exchange weekends in the future. Someone remarked, "It was the best weekend I've ever been to."

What Do You Think?

The Lost Sheep

By LARRY DARRELL

All agnostics run for your lives. The Christians are back in town. The amoral academic air is alive with the Spirit, as the wind of the University Christian Mission blows from "nor'-eas'-wes' ", in and out of the halls of doubt.

Few faculties have escaped. Only the cloisters of St. Mike's have missed the Lord High Executioner's "little list". The blitzkrieg of authority and of authorities has overlooked its sacred walls. One does not carry coals to Newcastle. They already have their own.

It's the skin of the skeptic these Christians are out to get. The Canon is shooting for the man "who knows not and knows that he knows not." "He is simple — teach him."

But whence comes the authority to teach? It seems that most of the Christians are talking about some one they call God. I saw the question: "Would God create a world like this?" Who may I ask, is God? God is a given quantity in the question. Like the lawyer asking the witness, "Have you stopped beating you wife?" Sceptics, beware of the loaded question, or you'll lose your life. Life breeds doubt, and you may lose that too.

These Christians and their Canon are not on board the good ship Varsity for a winter cruise. Christians come to convert. "We're out for conversion," says Mr. Milford, "beginning with ourselves." I suppose he's come to turn us upside down and inside out, beginning with himself. The Christians are here to tear your disbelief to pieces, to hand you strangers and sojourners over to their friend and pilot, Jesus Christ. They say he is invisible, and at the helm of history. No one has seen him there. Yet the Christians would have us "come and see," some one who can't be seen.

I guess there's no room at the inn for us Thomases who doubt. At least our good friends at St. Mike's have Pope Pius at Rome, and the Bahai's have the whole World, someone and something to touch and see. But the Christians are preaching to a God "whom no man hath seen at any time". Are the blind leading the blind?

"For in and out, above, about, below,
'Tis nothing but a magic shadow show,
Played in a Box whose Candle is the Sun,
Round which we Phantom Figues come and go."

Life breeds doubt. Even a disciple of Jesus had his doubts. Thomas feared that God might be nothing dwelling nowhere, and life "but a tale told by an idiot signifying nothing."

If I doubt, where can I see and know that God is more than the reflection of my face in a window of an empty room? These Christians talk and talk religion. All religion means to me is God and devils and angels and hells and everything impossible. If God is, let the Christians present the proof, if there be any proof.

To most of us outside the fold, to us "lost violent souls", God is only a word. The Christians points to a creator behind the world and in the world. The earth must have a creator. Yet if the world could not make itself, and therefore God must have made it. I want to know how God can make himself and why.

I hear that Christ has come to save our souls. I wish the Christians were less interested in my soul, and more interested in me. Because I have never seen a soul. If I possess one, where did it come from, and where will it go? I know I had a beginning. I expect I will have an end. Yet the Christian says my body and my soul will be raised up after death. On the Judgment Day the angels will come around and pick us all up of the ground and put us together again. Most of us will have passed into grass and grain and trees, and will have been eaten by squirrels and worms and things until we are scattered all over the place. Only a miracle could bring us together. Not even all the king's horses and all the king's men could ever bring us together again. And still the soul goes on.

"And that inverted Bowl we call the sky,
Lift not thy hands to It for help—for it
Rolls impotently on as Thou or I."

These are the questions I, the doubter, ask. Is God but a "dagger of the mind, a false creation? Or is God real? What do you think?

Discrimination Week

The University of Toronto sits basking smugly in its tolerance, and at the same time celebrating a Discrimination Week on the campus.

With the arrival of the University Christian Mission, the campus has gone wholeheartedly Christian, rearranging residence facilities, throwing open its halls and its heart to the Missioners, and stepping quite out of character to do so.

This University has a long roster of non-Christian members. However, the wholehearted endorsation of the University Christian Mission which it has undertaken discriminates against them just as surely as if a hotel-keeper closed its door to Jews. But for the duration of Discrimination Week, the non-Christian is the forgotten man.

Still the University says, as a kind of a second motto, let all voices be heard. Where else, it asks, shall we find the Truth that Shall Make Us Free? Though the more conservative frown, the University allows free-thinkers and fellow-travellers to operate freely. It is even a little proud of its tolerance. And now, for a week, we repeat, the non-Christian is a forgotten man. It is tacitly expected that he will maintain a tactful silence for the duration of the Mission.

Of course, the agnostic is still all right. He's more than all right: he's what they're after. Where else do the converts come from?

This is not a case of our being against Missions. We enjoy them. Let's have more of them. Missions are fun for all concerned. Let's have a University Bahai Mission. Or a University Quaker Mission!

Toronto students through last year's All-Varsity Aid and this year's Student Help for Asian Relief and Education, are trying to tie closer the bonds between North America and Asia. What more logical, then, than a University Hindu or Moslem Mission?

Toronto is the city where, when a visiting negro celebrity was refused a haircut by a reactionary barber, the news hit the front pages. Probably the barber went out of business. But Toronto also restricts, by "gentlemen's" agreements, certain racial or religious groups from holding property in certain areas.

Toronto is the one city in this province that has an LPP Member of Parliament. It is rather proud of this achievement, as a point in its argument that it is not quite as staid and stodgy as other interests might imply. But note that LPP Members are limited to one or two.

Yes, Toronto is tolerant. It allows Jehovah's Witnesses to hand out literature on street corners and, to the annoyance of many, to do some door-to-door preaching. It even has a few bars and Sunday sports.

But is there possibly something hypocritical in this glorious freedom from discrimination?

Perhaps the reason why Torontonians feel they can afford to be tolerant is that they are sure of their cause—Christianity and the Christian set of morals—will win out in the end anyway.

OUR READERS WRITE

The Long And The Short

Editor, The Varsity:

Let me first express my delight at the most recent development of interest in radio for Varsity. As some of the writers have expressed, the difficulties are by no means as considerable as one might gather.

A station would probably cost, if the transmitter were built on the campus, no more than two thousand dollars. This figure is based on a revised estimate of the station costs at Queen's.

Once built it could act as a further training ground for the Engineers who would be so necessary in operating said station.

The greatest difficulty at present seems to be lack of facilities. In short, there appears to be no space available on the campus, build the station. Last year the greatest of efforts were directed into that field, but nothing concrete has developed. Now with the decision to further delay the building of the Student Union, the hope of finding a location for the transmitter on the campus has been further dimmed.

If, and when, this problem is resolved, then the establishment of a station here will become a matter of procedure. Until that time the best we can do is to continue in maintaining interest present, and to encourage the development of more of the same. In this regard, a group interest by the Engineering Faculty would bring this much closer.

How To Find Lusty Sections In Novels

(Scalped from The Varsity, Jan. 18, 1949)

Many novels printed nowadays, and we are speaking chiefly of the pocket variety, are nine-tenths trash. The only really interesting parts to the casual reader are the cover and the odd lusty section.

It is a generally accepted fact that these lusty sections "sell" the novel. The more there are the better the novel sells. Unfortunately, most writers, wishing to avoid the label of filth-slingers or semi-disgusting, include only two or three such worthwhile sections in each novel they create. This gives rise to the problem of wasted time among readers who are looking only for a bit of lascivious reading. Here are a few time savers:

1. Scan for naughty words—After a bit of experience you will find that this comes more easily. Be on the lookout, too, for valuable clue words . . . "ruby lips", or "eyes intense with passion", etc.

2. Watch the chapter titles—A harmless-looking title like "Mrs. Jones throws a tea-party" may prove very interesting while one headed "A walk in the woods" would tell of an utterly boring and fruitless search for some species of wild bird.

3. Note especially the final few lines of each chapter—It is only natural that the best is kept till the end, and one can save immense amounts of time by skipping the first ¾ of each chapter.

Student Conference

WAX IS FLYING TO RIO

Hart House Special

Four scantily-clad damsels disrupted the Hart House stupor yesterday. Stolidly eating lunch in the great hall, students were suddenly subjected to the sight of four girls in various stages of undress, prancing around on the top of a table.

Shouts of "What's all this?" "By Jove!" and "Hear, hear!" were echoed, and clam chowder went wasting as staff and students alike clamoured around.

The chorus girls sang about the forthcoming All-Varsity Revue and before the onlookers could recover their composure, the masked chorines vanished into the Hall.

AVR publicity director Jim Bacque said that the masked quartet would appear later on in the week at Strahan Hall, Skule lectures and at the male reading room at the library.

Brazil Pays Trip For Two Canucks

SAC president Syd Wax will be in Rio De Janeiro within a few days to attend a pan-Aerican conference for student unions, it was announced last night. Wax says he will leave for New York tonight where he will meet Jean De Margerie, president of the National Federation of University Students. They will then fly to Rio, via Port of Spain, Trinidad, on the Pan American Airlines flagship El Presidente.

Wax says that the trip came as a surprise as previously it had been thought possible only to send De Margerie as a Canadian representative. However Wax received a phone call from De Margerie in Quebec City Monday night and De Margie said that he had received cables from Rio asking that two Canadian delegates be sent. The Brazilian national Union of Students, Wax says, have offered to pay all costs for the trips except for some minor travelling expenses.

Wax was surprised to receive the call as he thought De Margerie was already in Rio for the conference which had been scheduled from January 15 to the 22nd. When he left De Margerie at the Edinburgh Conference, which Wax attended as NUCUS International Affairs Chairman earlier this month, it had been understood that De Margerie was going to Paris and from there his transportation to Brazil was being paid by the Brazilians. Wax turned down the trip as he did not feel he could spare the time from his studies in medicine.

De Margerie told Wax on Monday night that the conference had been postponed until the 25th and that the Brazilians had specifically invited Wax and himself. Wax has made arrangements to take time off from his studies.

The trip has been approved by the National Office of NFCUS in Ottawa, Wax said yesterday, but because of the sudden nature of the trip the National Executive has not been consulted.

However International Affairs chairman Wax said that it is his job to go, anyway.

Wax explained that at the 15th annual NFCUS conference in London last fall the International Affairs Commission had been instructed to continue the program of trying to develop a Pan-American Union. Wax said that this conference was the culmination of two years of work by past IAC chairman Denis Lazure, and him-

Students To Travel Half-Fare

Ottawa (Special)—A travel service has been established by the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Eight charter flights from Montreal to Europe have been arranged at less than half the regular fare with 62 seats for Canadians, as well as shipping accommodation on two Dutch ships also at reduced rates, as a joint NFCUS-USNSA-Dutch project.

This service was established following a meeting in Ottawa this week between Yves Pilon, permanent secretary-treasurer of NFCUS and representatives of the British National Union of Students and the United States National Student Association travel departments.

Last year charter flights were operated successfully by the BNUS, but this is the first year that Canadian students have been allotted accommodation.

NFCUS Exec. Will Examine Soviet Visit

The question of bringing Russian students to Canada on a tour of universities will come up at a meeting of the National Federation of Canadian University Students slated for Ottawa shortly. The issue of allowing Russian students to tour Canadian campi was raised last fall, when NFCUS vetoed such an invitation by Denis Lazure, observer for NFCUS at the Prague Conference.

The question raised a wave of interest and controversy on Canadian campi, and a representative vote of all Canadian universities upheld the principle of a Russian visit.

Since then no action has been taken by NFCUS to carry out the desires of Canadian students as indicated by the vote.

News of the proposed meeting was received by the Canadian University Press Editor of The Varsity in a letter from Yves Pilon, Secretary of NFCUS.

The letter said in part: "It is the feeling of the Executive Committee (of NFCUS) that consultation by mail in dealing with this important issue has become totally inadequate; that reconsideration of a decision taken by the NFCUS Council in Annual Meeting warrants closer thought and personal study; that in view of the multitudinous opinions and resolutions expressed and forwarded to the National Secretariat, the Executive deems it best, in the interest of Canadian university students as a whole, to give serious consideration to the problem at its meeting which is being called in Ottawa shortly."

VIC SAC

Doug Melhuish, III Vic, was the only man nominated this year for the Men's SAC representative. Anne Gordon, Marg Kell, and Audrey Jackum were nominated for Women's SAC rep.

No Contestants For Chariot Race 'Apathy Charged'

There may not be a Chariot Race this year after all, if student apathy continues at its present rate, disclosed Frank Yamada, Publicity Director of the Engineering Society, yesterday.

Although entries were called for last Thursday and yesterday was the deadline, no entries have yet been received. Yamada suggested that a publicity stunt might occur on Thursday, to replace the Chariot Race, and suggests that students keep one eye on the front campus and the other on the sky at 1:00 p.m.

Traditionally a publicity gag for the Skule At-Home, the Chariot Race has become an annual institution on the campus. Last year's race was decried as a farce, but a promise was made by the Engineering Society of, at least, a fair start this year.

Gay Blades Aid Asians At Stadium

"Though the results of the advance sales to the Student Help for Asian Relief the Education skating party held on Monday night are not yet in from all the faculties, we expect that the drive for $11,000 in cash for aid to South East Asia will be ahead by almost $400 toward its objective," announced SHARE skating party committee chairman Scott Symons last night.

"It was only in getting the best possible weather and backing from the students that the party has proved far more successful than we ever anticipated", he stated.

Despite serious last minute changes in the program to conform with the requirements of Varsity Stadium, the competitions as replanned were carried out with great success, said Cric Ketchum also on the SHARE skating party committee.

One competition of balloons, 200 of them, which was to be found between the arts facultues and the professional faculties could not be held when the stadium officials ruled that there would be too great a danger to the several hundred non-Varsity patrons that would be there. Races were ruled out on the same basis.

In the re-arranged program, it was decided to give the balloons out, one to each couple, turn the lights out, and let everyone try to break the other balloons. The prizes of ten dollars worth of jewellery and the records to the New York hit "High Button Shoes" were awarded to the last two with their balloons. Other prizes were awarded on an elimination skating routine and spot numbers.

Of the eight prizes awarded, five of them went to Varsity students, and the other three went to regular customers.

Howe Discusses Engineer's Role

Speaking at the fifth annual Walberg Lecture last night, Canada's Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe expressed the belief that "The history of government suggests that men with professional training have special qualifications that make for success in governmental administration."

The Walberg lectures were established in 1948 in memory of Andrew Emil Walberg. Howe paid tribute to Walberg whose "faith, courage, versatility, and optimism", he said, "were characteristic of the pioneering spirit that laid the basis on which the Canada of today has been built."

Outlining the tremendous industrial growth in Canada during this century, Howe pointed out that "wars and threats of wars have probably had a greater influence in shaping the character of our nation than any other single factor." It accelerated industrial activity, and enlarged agricultural areas, gave us national self-confidence, and made us fully appreciate the need for national research and development engineering, he said.

Howe added that "science, engineering and industry have had a great, if not greater, part in shaping the destiny and form of this country than have statesmanship and political philosophy."

"Governments' excursions into business and into the field of basic research have opened up opportunities for a profitable, exciting and satisfying employment of engineers and scientists in government service", he said. "The activity of perhaps one-third of our government departments is colored greatly by engineering style and technique." At least one-tenth of Canada's engineers are employed by the government, he said.

The supply of engineering graduates has been inadequate to meet the growing demand, Howe said. He urged engineers to "participate in the democratic process. Democracy has the best chance of working well when the men who make the laws, and who have the responsibility to the people for administering them, bring collectively a wide variety of experience and talents to the service of the state," he said

Sleepless Since Strike
Strained Staff Struggles

Normally copy is written, edited and headlined in Toronto, then goes to printers in Oshawa by bus. With the bus strike, the deadline has been moved up to 9:30 when a truck carries the copy out. Late stories are phoned to the printers where one of the staff (make-up editor, Marg Welch above) takes the story . . . stays the remainder of the night to finish up the tag ends, in order to have the paper out before noon.

Press breakdowns, financial difficulties, hoodlumism, and streetcar strikes have all been problems which The Varsity has had to face. But not since the paper ceased printing for a year in 1889, has The Varsity failed to appear in some manner.

The paper has often been late, and on rare occasions there have been holes in it (that's newspaper jargon for a blank space) but there seems to be an unwritten law that a paper must appear.

Publishing is a complicated job. Stories are assigned to undergraduate staff each day in the News Office of University College. "The Varsity attempts to cover all major events taking place on the campus . . . sometimes succeeds" read a caption in the 70th Anniversary Issue last spring.

Normally copy is written, edited and headlines put on in Toronto, then goes to printers in Oshawa by bus. But since the Easter term began the buses have been on strike.

Instead of sending copy on hourly buses from eight-thirty until eleven-thirty the final deadline has been moved up to nine-thirty when a private truck carries the copy out each evening. Lectures, and more important, meals have been forgotten by the staff in order to meet this early deadline.

Stories are written in a mad afternoon dash instead of early evening calm, photographers have been printing their pictures before they are developed, the temperamental cartoonist says he has to desert the KCR earlier every afternoon.

By munching milk and sipping sandwiches over the copy this deadline is usually met.

Man behind the scenes who gunfed paper to press at printing plant each night is Rotary Press' Night Superintendent Les Coles. He has saved The Varsity many an embarrassing error. Left is linotype . . . a glorified typewriter which turns out the lead slugs of bodytype which compose the paper. Like typing this procedure requires a certain amount of time; for this reason the strike-duration deadline has been 9:30 in order that the enormous volume of copy can be turned out by morning. Headlines are set by hand and lead castings made. As the stories are set up in lead proofs are taken and copy read by the printing staff for errors. Then the lead is sent on to the compositors.

The body type from the linotype and the headlines and advertisements are assembled in frames by the compositors. This begins about two a.m. and is completed around five. The compositor follows the dummy layout which is made up in The Varsity News Office early in the evening by the person-in-charge-of-issue and the night editor. If accurate dummies have been made up, all goes well, but on occasion holes appear (newspaper jargon for a blank space). The filling of these is one of the jobs of the Oshawa correspondent.

When the lead has been fitted into the frames and the frames locked, a cardboard impression is made of the lead by passing a heavy roll over the cardboard mat (matrix) and the frame. Above is a mat being prepared in the printing plant at Oshawa.

In order to produce a morning paper of the circulation required on this campus now, The Varsity is printed on a rotary press. If we used a flat-bed press, as before the war, the frames would be placed on the press. But to get round lead cylinders with the type on them, the mats are rolled and placed within a cylinder into which molten metal is poured. This metal roll is then trimmed with planes, and a router (similar to an electric drill) takes out all the parts which are not to be linked on the presses. The process takes place about 9:30 a.m. each morning The Varsity appears.

The reasons for working on The Varsity are many; to the news staff, accurate reporting to the students of what is happening on the campus, to the feature staff, an outlet for creative driting, to the make-up staff, the turning out of a well-laid-out, well-balanced page, to the photographers, pictorial reporting, to the cartoonist, light comment on the day's events, to the editors . . . well . . . editorial comment is taboo except on page eight, so you will find it there. To all it's fun and a great deal of hard work.

First issue of The Varsity appeared on Oct. 7, 1880. Since the "Weekly Review of Education, University Politics and Events" of that time appeared, the paper has taken on a very different style. At the time the 70th Anniversary issue was printed last spring, there had been approximately 12 million words in The Varsity, or four hundred miles of regular body type.

Originally a Joint Stock Company with paid subscription, The Varsity was forced to cease publishing back in 1889 from lack of funds. But better days came, and since that time the paper has never failed to appear somehow or another.

Once when the paper was printed at the University of Toronto Press, conveniently near the News and Editorial Offices, it was discovered just before deadline that the presses had been broken. This was done by a group of disgruntleds who couldn't agree with Varsity policy.

The next day, the editorial column appeared as a blank white space, with a few words bunched together in the middle, explaining what had happened. Aside from this instance, a blank is a very rare thing in the pages of The Varsity.

In 1929, Editor Pat Ryan refused to be balked by criticism, and continued publishing fiery, controversial, aggressive editorials. Finally he was fired, and his staff resigned. A new editor and masthead were appointed, and The Varsity, chastened, carried on.

A list of ex-Varsity staffers would include a number of famous names. Stephen Leacock, eminent late Canadian humorist and teacher, once was a Varsity reporter. The late William Lyon Mackenzie King "got his start" on The Varsity.

Formerly The Varsity had a women's editor and featured a women's page. Recently this procedure has been abandoned, on the grounds that the woman's point of view does not necessarily differ from the man's. But a glance down The Varsity masthead will show you that the women still have their word—and often the final one—in what The Varsity says.

As dawn breaks, the cylinders have been placed on the presses, the inking adjusted and the presses start to roll. Thrilling for staff members who have worked with the printers all night writing late stories is the sight of the first press run, and another completed issue of The Varsity. This is the paper as it appeared at 6 o'clock Tuesday morning. About ten thousand copies are run, in a little less than an hour. They are then bundled and delivered on the campus by truck. The strike has delayed the appearance of The Varsity at times, but since 1889 the daily issue of The Varsity has not failed to appear. There have been times when it was late Sometimes it has not appeared on the campus until the afternoon. The truck delivers the papers to buildings on the campus, including the Graduate Office. In an emergency some staff members go to Oshawa with the last copy run, to write late stories, remake the front page, or replace lost copy. Sometimes at about 4:30 large holes are found in the paper, and if no one is there with a news item to fill the space the Night Superintendent phones one of the masthead members. Staffers who go to Oshawa at night return to Toronto with the day's paper in time for their first lecture.

Radio Roundtable Decides Strikes Aren't Misused

Unions have not misused the weapon of strike according to the members of the Students' Administrative Council-sponsored Round Table program, "Of Minds and Men", last night. Only very rare examples of misuse could be cited by the discussers who carried the argument from union activities in general to the current TTC strike.

"People working for public utilities are not second class citizens", said Harry Waisglass, special lecturer, in reply to a suggestion by Ruth Snider, I P and OT, that all public utility unions should have compulsory arbitration. T. J. Ramakrishnan, Grad studies felt that if governmental arbitration was invoked, it would be necessary for the arbitrator to consider all society, and not just the principal parties involved.

'Management, in general, won't meet the workers fairly," claimed J. A. Lougheed, III Emmanuel, "and tends to needle them by misrepresentation of the facts." He cited the instance of the last railroad strike when management advertised the pay to running crews only, and left out figures on the poorly paid section-hands. Miss Snider said that this point had some application in the TTC strike, where management was using the increase in fares as a lever to defeat the strike. She felt that the matter of an increase in fares should not be considered until the strike was settled.

The program was the first of a ten program series. Harry Rasky, CKEY news editor, acted as moderator.

52,000,000 More Eggs

Ontario fish hatcheries operated by the Department of Lands and Forests are now stocked with more than a quarter billion commercial and game fish eggs as a result of fall spawning operations, just completed. This is an increase of 52 million eggs over 1950.

Licensed commercial fishermen of Lake Erie and Georgian Bay turned in 225,000,000 whitefish eggs, an increase of 50,000,000 over 1950. Commercial fishermen operating out of Sault Ste. Marie and Port Arthur collected 9,700,000 lake trout eggs—1,350,000 more than last year.

Grand Occasion For Historians

The History Department is having a house-warming tonight and official opening of their new Baldwin House.

Officers of department members have been painted in pastel shades. Fluorescent lights have been installed in most of the rooms. Clothes-hooks adorn professor's walls so that students' coats need no longer drag on the floor during a seminar as in the old building.

These changes may be seen by students tomorrow night when they may take tours of the new building. The Modern History Club is sponsoring the evening and has provided a programme of entertainment. Students may throw darts at their favorite historical enemy, watch skits performed by students and staff, see movies, or dance in the library.

Hal Brown, IV Vic, president of the History Club, said that all students on the campus are invited to attend the reception. Activities will begin at 8:00 p.m. when Professor Martin officially opens the new Baldwin House.

Baha'i Group Will Examine Religions Unity

"RELIGION FOR EAST AND WEST" will be the subject of discussion at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group today at 1:10 p.m. in Rm. 64 of U.C. The speaker will be Ron Nablo, IV Sociology.

"There has been a tendency if not a concerted effort on the part of religious groups of East and West, Buddhists, Hindus, Muslims, Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians to mention but a few, to emphasize the differences between themselves. It is essential that the points of unity which are basic and of supreme importance in these faiths be made the center of attention of all those interested in working toward a unified world," said Nablo in an interview yesterday. "The Baha'i Faith alone recognizes the essential unity of all revealed religions and is therefore a powerful force assisting in the process of creating understanding between East and West."

Time will be given for the asking of questions and discussion of the question.

Tomorrow Is Today

A falsified yarn on page 7 of yesterday's Varsity stated that a lecture by Professor L. C. Walmsley on "Archaeology and Early Chinese History" would be given at 4:30 p.m. "tomorrow" (i.e. today).

To prevent any students going to hear the lecture today and finding the theatre empty or otherwise unoccupied, The Varsity wishes to correct that statement. "Tomorrow" should have read "today". The lecture therefore took place yesterday.

Of 500 accidents reported by employees of the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, 70 were caused by axes. One man was bitten by a beaver.

By DAVID PEDDIE

As musical comedy goes, GUYS AND DOLLS, now playing at the Royal Alex for two weeks, is the kind of musical that I like. It's fast, noisy, sometimes self-satiric, and with as fabulous a cast of characters imaginable. The music and lyrics by Frank Loesser and the book by Jo Swerling and Abe Burrows are exceptionally good—all of which contributes to a very enjoyable evening in the theatre.

The story is based on one of Damon Runyon's old Broadway fables and revolves naturally enough (as do all musicals) around love, sex and money. Gambling is not usually looked on so cheerfully but when the gamblers are Nicely-Nicely Johnson, Benny Southstreet, Nathan Detroit, Harry the Horse, and Big Jule, who can feel dismayed. The dolls in this particular show are Adelaide, a singer at the 'Hot Box' and Sarah Brown, the leader of the Save-a Soul Mission (Broadway Division).

Sky Masterson, a big-time gambler, bets Nathan that he could take any girl to Havana—not figuring of course that Nathan will choose Sarah. Nathan intends to win the thousand bucks so that he can reopen "The Oldest Established Floating Crap Game". By promising her a dozen sinners for the next mission-meeting, Sky persuades Sarah to go with him, but, alas, the tropics and Bacardi-flavored milk are too much for the good little girl. She has a wonderful time and sets the stage for the story to end happily. Not only does Nathan marry Adelaide (after 14 years' engagement) but Sky becomes a soul-saving mission-worker.

The high points of GUYS AND DOLLS are the songs — that is to say the genuinely funny songs like "Adelaide's Lament", "Fugue for Tinhorns", "Take Back Your Mink" and "Marry the Man Today". There are the usual ballads which always sound something I've heard before a million times, and there are several straight pieces like "Follow the Fold", which is a work that ranks with "Onward Christian Soldiers" and "Luck Be A Lady" has a fine ring to it.

However, in spite of all the songs, some of the biggest laughs I got were from odd characters who did no more than walk across stage — the drunk who thought Adelaide's pots and pans "vulgar jewelry", and the two droopy Cubans with the long cigarettes and the weak backs.

The best performances were given by Julie Oshins as Nathan Detroit and Pamela Britton as Adelaide. Miss Britton outdid herself on both the Hot-Box numbers—"Bushel and a Peck" and "Take Back Your Mink", and of course the other girls were a great help—such voices! Mr. Oshins has a beautiful sense of timing—and he is such a dead-pan. It's unnerving to say the least.

Allan Jones as Sky Masterson, if not a tough like the others, was very much the man of the world and sang tolerably well as did Jeanne Bal as Sarah Brown. She was wide-eyed at all times and her drunk scene in Havana was really delightful.

Special mention should go to Jack Prince who as Nicely-Nicely Johnson sang "Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat" and to Slapsy Maxie Rosenbloom who was excellent as Big Jule from Chicago.

All in all it was a very enjoyable evening—but of course at the expense of the Royal Alex.

Employ Painless Process For Wax Blood Donation

"There's no feeling at all; it's perfectly painless" said SAC President Syd Wax after giving his pint of blood at the Red Cross Student Services Commissioner Irene McLellan, both regular blood Blood Donors Clinic. Wax and donors, were being fed coffee, cookies, and fruit-bread in the Clinic tea-room in exchange for their blood.

The Clinic, held in the old Hospital for Sick Children on College Street, is almost enough to make one believe the stories about people who drop in for a rest after a day of shopping. Soft music, colourful lounges, magazines, food, all await the blood donor. Everything is done to make the experience positively agreeable.

The donor, on entering, is given a number, and his coat is checked, to avoid any inconvenience. He then waits his turn in the lounge, supplied with magazines and Cokes by the blue-uniformed Red Cross workers. When his number is called, he goes into the office, where he is given a haemoglobin test, to make sure that he is physically able to give blood, and to determine the type of his blood. The actual time it takes to give the blood is only about five minutes, but he must lie quiet for another ten. Finally, refreshments are served to him in the tea-room. The whole procedure may take as little as half an hour.

There are absolutely no after-effects, say the supervisors at the Clinic. The amount of blood donated is somewhat less than a pint, only about 6% of the otal amount of blood in the body, they point out. Donations are accepted twice a year, which is only half as often as it is actually safe to give blood.

All the blood the Clinic receives is used for our armed forces, in Korea and elsewhere. The Red Cross has already sent 6,000 bottles of plasma to Korea, representing 18,000 individual donations, and more is needed. An individual case may need an incredible number of transfusions. One case with a hand wound had fifteen bottles of blood in less than two days. Any surplus will be used to form a stock-pile for civilian defence.

Next week, beginning January 28, is Blood Donor Week on the campus. It is hoped that there will be a good response from the students, Wax said, as the University can be the source of much needed blood. The SAC will sponsor a campaign for the Bloodiest Faculty.

Missioner Explains Existence Of Evil

Lecturing on "How God Deals With Evil", Canon Milford last night conceded that evil does exist. He added that it does not make sense, because it "spoils the pattern." Although evil is negative and self-contradictory it is a positive fact, he continued.

His address was the third in a series for the University Christian Mission being held this week, in Convocation Hall.

Two approaches to the problem of evil are the Yogi approach and the Commissar approach, Canon Milford explained. "The first is disillusioned from the start, and its adherents seek to escape from the world.

"The second is the approach of the worldly optimist who trusts to free enterprise and competition to rid the world of evil," he continued. These people, he said, are soon forced to resort to methods other than persuasion. We will, moreover, not be satisfied with the planned world these people would give us, he added.

"Some people try to make God look silly," Canon Milford continued. He cited two lines of attack; first, if God made the world he did not do a good job because evil exists; second, if the world is a fallen world, man's achievements are belittled. Canon Milford continued that there is something that tells us there is a God. "We're made like that," he said.

Four Bands To Blare At Noon For 'SHARE'

The Skule-sponsored band contest for Student-Help-For-Asian Relief and Education (SHARE) takes place this afternoon at 1:00 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Four bands, the Dixie - Combo band from University College, an "Ensemble" from the Faculty of Music, the Lady Godiva Memorial Band from SPS and the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Band from Victoria College, will compete to see which band can raise the most money for SHARE.

Each band will play a selection of music and after each selection money will be collected by 'some of the prettiest girls on the campus', according to Jim Montgomery, a member of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band.

The band which receives the most money will be judged the winner and all proceeds will go to SHARE.

A minor catastrophe may necessitate a change in the program of the Lady Godiva Band. The band members were perfecting an "Electronic beer-bottle organ" in the sub-basement practice room in the Little Red Schoolhouse. Last night the janitor, not recognizing the artistic achievement of the Skulemen, threw it out. The remains of it were salvaged today and the band members will work on it tonight to see if they can get it into shape for tomorrow's contest.

There is no admission charge to the contest.

'Pygmalion' Is Sold Out Completely

"Tickets for 'Pygmalion' have been completely sold out," Hart House theatre business manager James Hozack said yesterday. Not only the regular performances but also the special matinees for high school students are sold out. "Very gratifying," was Mr. Hozack's comment.

The situation is rather hard to understand because of the strike and other factors that would be expected to keep down ticket sales he said. The last time that a performance was sold out was in 1947 when "Pride and Prejudice" was being presented.

The whole year has been a very good one for Hart House Theatre, and this is the crowning touch, Mr. Hozack said. The theatre is booked up from now until May, so that it is impossible for "Pygmalion" to run any extra performances. Those who delayed in buying their tickets will have to miss the performance, he said.

AVR Tickets Selling Fast

The sale of exchange tickets for the All-Varsity Review is doing well, said Marv Goodman, ticket manager, yesterday. Wednesday and Saturday are almost sold out, but there is still an abundance of tickets left for Monday, and sales for the other days are coming along fine, he said. The tickets have been on sale for two days. Holders of these tickets will be able to exchange them for reserved seat tickets at the Hart House box office, starting February 4.

'52 Renewals To Pro Ass'n Open To SPS

Throughout Canada there is in every province a branch of The Association of Professional Engineers and the Association of the Province of Ontario is now accepting applications for membership and renewal of memberships for 1952 from undergraduate engineering students.

The membership fee is one dollar and this amount is deductible from the membership fee in the Association after graduation. Undergraduate members receive a four-page bi-monthly publication, "The Professional Engineer" and a membership card.

Each year the Association offers nine scholarships, making up a total value of $675, to undergraduate engineering students at the University of Toronto. Scholarships are given to high-ranking students.

Included among the benefits is a plan for group insurance which offers a uniform amount of $5,000 protection to every member and recorded student in the Association which may be carried up to the age of sixty-five years.

Bud Natanson To Quit Basketball

Bud Natanson, 6' 7" centre who has led the Senior Blue basketball team in points scored and in per game averages this year and last year, has decided to quit basketball for the season. The death of his uncle and the illness of his father, who jointly operated the family business, has made it necessary for Bud to take it over in his after-school hours. It is not entirely a financial difficulty, rather a matter of keeping the responsibility within the family.

Natanson scored an average of 14 points per game last year and ran up a total of 349 points in 25 games. He sank 119 field goals, 31% of his shots, and 111 foul shots for a 61% average. He had an average of 12.1 points per game so far this year.

Bud has not played in any of the games since New Year's, except the practice game with Tri-Bells last week. He has two more years at Varsity, and will likely be able to play after this year. However, it is very unlikely that he will rejoin the team this season.

Gets His Chance

Ray Monnot, freshman basketball star from Etobicoke Collegiate, will have the job of filling the gap left by Bud Natanson's departure from the team. Ray was top scorer in the game with Tri-Bells last week, with 17 points.

U of M Wins Over Laval

The high-flying Montreal Carabins added to their intercollegiate league leadership when they whipped the Laval Blue and Gold 7-4 last Friday night. At present the Montrealers shape up as the team that the Blues will have to master if they hope to hold on to their rank of league champions.

However, the task at hand for the locals is their coming battle with McGill this Friday at Varsity Arena. This will be the first home game of the season for the defending champions.

The Redmen lost much of their scoring punch when star forwards, Gord Knutson and Bob Marchessault decided to stick to studies. They are reportedly a big team, and have a win over Laval to their credit.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Nortown Tri-Bells say they are going to the Olympics this year as the Canadian entry in the basketball tournament. There is, of course, a small obstacle—the Vancouver entry, which swamped the Tri-Bells last year in the Dominion finals. There is also the question of eligibility—Freddy Thomas played semi-pro basketball for a year in Detroit, and Jack Gray and George Arnott played for Toronto Argonauts, who are not amateur in any sense of the word. Anyway, they're going to the Olympics.

His team having lost a practice match to the Blues last week by two points, coach Alex Fisher arranged a return game for last night. However, Freddy Thomas aggravated a leg injury early in the game with the Orphuns Thursday night, and Johnny Braithwaite got hurt, so last night's game was cancelled.

Since Thomas did not play against the Blues last week either, and since Sharpy Litvack (who also did not play last Tunesday) would more than make up for the absence of Braithwaite, they would probably have been able to floor just as good a team as they did last week. "Practice game" or not, they apparently don't want to mar their record with another loss to the Blues.

In spite of the fact that Varsity and Tri-Bells are without much doubt the two best basketball teams in Toronto, they do not have any games scheduled with one another. Tri-Bells play the Orphuns in the City League, of course, but the big team is supposed to be the Blues. It seems a little ridiculous to see both teams going out of town or bringing in out-of-town teams for every game, and not playing each other.

* * * *

Bud Natanson's decision to quit basketball has hit the Blues in a soft spot. Both last year and this year they had always built their system around him, feeding him the ball whenever possible, and relying on him for rebounds. The onus for that job now rests on Ray Monnot, a spindly 6'6" (175 pounds), with two chronically bad ankles. Monnot does not possess the shot that Natanson has developed, but he gets rebounds, probably fights harder for them than Natanson did. With McGill and Queen's to play this Friday and Saturday, the Blues are in bad shape, as Lukenda's finger and Binnington's ankle aren't expected to mend for a week or so yet. The team goes to Western a week later. Nevertheless, Bob Masterson injects a note of confidence in this otherwise disheartening picture—"We'll show up for the games, anyway."

* * * *

McGill should not present too much opposition since the team is substantially the same as the one the Blues beat last year in the first game by about 45 points. Basketball seems to play a very definite second fiddle to hockey at McGill. Their basketball publicity brochure is stuck on at the end of the swim team release. The line-up looks like Montreal YMHA's second team.

Queen's lost to the Blues by only one point in the first game here, and the big guns—Don Griffin, Harry Lampman, Don Bahner—are back, along with freshman Walt Mellor.

McMaster beat Varsity twice last year, and beat McGill in the season opened last week. 'Nuff said.

At Western, Johnny Metras thinks he has one of the best teams ever. They lack height—Doug McNichol, 6'4" and Wendell Wigle, 6'3" are the only tall men they have, and Harry Wade, Bob Phibbs, and George Arnott have graduated from last year's first line. That leaves only McNichol and Ray Truant back from the first string. However, in addition to Wigle, they have Glen Pettinger, who played for Varsity three years ago, and a Windsor boy, Bill Pataky, who we hear ranks in Big John's estimation as the best basketball player he has ever had.

Victoria Cagers Down UC Rogers High Man With 19

Victoria College Seniors downed UC III 31-24 in a group three game in Hart House yesterday. The Vicsters went ahead 10-4 in the first period after a slow start and looked good as they piled up a nine point lead before the end of the second stanza.

in a top performance. He scored most of the points when he eluded the UC guards and drove into the basket. Pete Gawinski dropped in two perfect set shots and was the top man for the losers with five points.

The game started off with a lot of fouls and very poor shooting and it wasn't until the final minutes of the game that both teams started to show a definite scoring punch. The winners showed a decided edge in territorial play and were also far superior in getting the rebounds.

Ruboff looked very good on the defence for UC; he was ably assisted by John Eaton who also played a good defensive game. If the Redmen had shown the same offensive power that they showed on the defensive they might have downed the Senior Vic team.

B-Ball Girls At Hamilton

Tonight the Senior and Intermediate Inter-collegiate girls' basketball teams are playing exhibition games against McMaster. In past years these games have been closely contested, but Varsity always managed to come out on top.

Coach, Micki Barnet, is having a difficult time choosing the team. In fact there will be fifteen girls going to McMaster instead of the regular twelve. Final eliminations will be made at a later date. Until that time tension among the girls will be at an all-time high.

Returning payers from last year's championship team are Sally Wallace and Joan Mooney on the forward line, and Heather Chipman, Marry MacDonald, Mary Lewis, and Beth Wade on the guard line. Basketball enthusiasts will remember that last year Sally brought honour to Toronto by being top scorer in the Intercollegiate meet held in London. Peg Walker, who had to be replaced when she broke her ankle last year is trying out again.

Alma Hatch has returned to Intercollegiate basketball after a year's absence. Two years ago Alma lead the Varsity team to victory in the tournament held at McGill.

Three newcomers, Beryl Lewis, Shirley Roberts, and Carol Dobson are also exceptionally good basketball players.

Although McMaster cannot enter a team in the Intercollegiate meet they can challenge the victors for the Bronze Baby trophy.

The Redmen did their best to get back in the game but despite some beautiful long shots, some of which had very unusual arches, they couldn't get within more than seven points of the winners by the end.

The outstanding player on the floor was Bruce Rogers. Rogers scored 19 points for the winners

Sportswoman

Meds whipped St. Mike's 6 to 1 yesterday in a lunch-hour hockey fest at the arena. The Meds girls held the bright side throughout the game and had it not been for the sparkling stick-handling of St. Mike's' "B. J." Fraser, the doctors' score might have been infinite.

In the first period, the Med crew sank two counters. The Irish came back in the secoid, with "B. J." hammering one home. The Medical five retaliated with a quick goal. Then Sally Sarles of the Hain-Somley-Sarles combo lit the lamp to make the score 4 to 1 for Meds at the end of the frame.

The Medics scored again early in the third period, and kept the play around the Irish net for most of the chapter, although they couldn't bat the disc into the goal. Marj Platts finally shot one into the corner to give the Meds gang a five-point margin.

Sally Sarles scored three for the winners with Irene Hains netting two and Marj Platts with one. "B. J." Fraser played in a style all her own, sinking the lone Irish goal. Barbara Markham also turned in a good performance for the losers.

Grudge Fite Friday Nite

The annual Varsity basketball highlight, the News-Sports grudge game, is tentatively scheduled for this Friday, according to Sports editor Mal Crawford. This game, for the Mugwump Bath Prize, is the best duo-sex basketball game of the year in the opinion of many sportswriters on The Varsity.

The news staff claim to have a triple-threat shooting star this year in five-foot-one-and-one half-inch Frank Moritsugu.

At first it was thought that the game would be played in the Lillian Massey Memorial Pool, but several players objected to the use of water. Originally the prize was for the winners of a rugby game, but due to the nature of the teams, play was delayed frequently by holding penalties.

Pitching Sportshoes

Major League competition in the Intramural basketball loop was restricted to two games yesterday, but the Minor League schedule was as heavy as ever.

Dents A topped Jr. UC 45-34 in one big league tilt as Fedder and Gilbert divided 22 points evenly for the winners. Brown swished 19 for the Redmen.

PHE B and Meds. IV yr. fought to a 33-all saw-off in minor b-ball. Tied 17-17 at the finish of the 2nd stanza, each team managed to hoop 16 in the final to bring about the draw. Narose and Birnbaum scored 12 for the Sawbone's squad while McFarlane dropped in eight for the Musclemen.

Vic Snowmen, inspired by the wintry weather, piled up a 51-9 score on the UC Huskies in another cage fixture as Lepper, Keith and Williams meshed 12 points each. Wolfson sank 6 for the Huskies.

St. Mike's Elmsley, Minor League finalists last year, rolled up a 53-12 count over IV Civil. Big Pete Tylenda netted 12 for the Mikemen while South managed five for the Skulemen. UC 73 Tigers coasted their way to a 36-22 win over Med I yr. with Thompson and Kerr-Lawson hooping 12 apiece. Spivak sank 10 for the Medsmen.

In the lone hockey game, 7-0 victory A trounced SPS II. Swartzman performed the hat trick. Hall, Horan, Booth, and Lindsay finished off the Wesley chopper's scoring. The game was just a bit rugged as two roughing and two fighting penalties were handed out, one to each side.

Strikes Are Fine

The resolution, "Public Utility employees should be prohibited from striking," was defeated by a vote of 14 to 9 in the University College Parliament yesterday. Speaking for the resolution were Prime Minister Tom Daly, I U.C. and Alice Lukacs, III U.C. Opposed to it were George Bridgen, IV U.C. and Aaron Brown III U.C. Speaker was John Medcoff.

Mr. Daly defined public utilities as water, transportation, electrical and garbage collecting services. He quoted the strike of dock workers in Britain as an example of the harm which strikes may cause. "Strikes seem a necessary evil, but the evil outweighs the necessity."

Mr. Bridgen, the first speaker for the opposition agreed that harm is done by public utility strikes but preferred compulsory arbitration, the method used with success in Australia, to prohibition of striking. "If you say, 'you cannot strike,' you have to enforce the law. You might conscript the workers, nationalize the industry, build more jails or revoke the resolution."

Miss Lukacs, second speaker for the government, said that strikes in the public utilities were most important since vital services were at stake. In the case of the T.T.C. strike in Toronto, 4,000 workers were affecting hundreds of thousands of people. She said there was a 40% slump in downtown business and an increase in accidents.

Mr. Brown, the second speaker for the opposition, stated that prohibition of strikes was undemocratic since it suppressed the voice of the individual. "It would endanger the power of the working class to determine their conditions of work. 'The right to strike can be prohibited, but never made impossible'."

Near East Crisis Is UN Club Topic

The explosive situation in the near east will be the topic on which Professor W. S. McCullough will address the United Nations Club this Thursday afternoon at Wymilwood. This topic will also be the subject of a Model Security Council to be held by the Club this term.

Professor McCullough is Associate Professor of Oriental Languages at University College. His extensive travel in the near east will enable him to make a first hand report on the conditions which have finally culminated in the nationalization program of Premier Mossadegh's government in Iran and the seizure of the Suez Canal zone by Egypt.

At the last meeting, U.N. Club President Rolland de Corneille, Trin., pointed out the value of contributing original thought to the solution of this situation since it has not yet been discussed in the United Nations proper. It was decided "that the delegates follow as nearly as possible the view of the country which they represent".

On February 7, the Club will meet in a Committee of the whole to frame a resolution to be debated for the Model Security Council. This, it was agreed, would afford students an opportunity to frame a resolution which would contribute to the solution of the problem.

In answer to questions from the floor by Dave Turnbull, III SPS, the President affirmed that discussion at this time would be limited to forming the resolution. Discussion of the resolution will take place at the Model Security Council meeting on February 12th.

Lecture On Love And Sex

Sexual relationship—the interpretation and interchange of the flesh and spirit of two people is a sacramental expression as well as the culmination of sexual desire and love, Dr. Ursula Neibuhr, Associate Professor of Religion at New York's Barnard College, said yesterday. She was speaking on Christianity and Sex as part of the University Christian Mission in Victoria College Chapel.

Marriage is an achievement of more than a natural union, involving as it does, the exercise of freedom, choice and responsibility. Dr. Neibuhr went on to suggest that the element of choice entered largely into natural selection of two people.

Marriage can be fun as well as solemn, Dr. Neibuhr said, deploring the absence of any great Christian poem or drama about marriage. This is a great lack in Christian tradition, she said.

For example, however magnificent Dante's Divine Comedy is, Beatrice was not Mrs. Dante, she said.

There is a great need for more inter-relation of men and women, she continued. The church fathers would not be nearly so coy when a woman wanders into their midst, if there were more women working with them.

self. At the Laval conference in 1950, Wax said, the conference had endorsed the principle that Canada should support and try to develop regional agreements with the Americas. He said there had been a great exchange of correspondence between Canada, the United States, and Brazil in an effort to organize a conference. Wax said that the Stockholm Conference had adopted the principle that regional conferences should be encouraged.

The Pan-American conference, Wax said, will be concerned mainly with discussing the problems of Pan-American students and the possibility of some regional organization for South and North American students together. Wax said that it is hoped that the results of the Edinburgh Conference can be tied in with the new organization.

The two Canadians, he said, will try to get the Brazilians to accept the seat being held for them on the six-man supervisory committee for the new secretariat set up in Holland at the Edinburgh Conference.

Re-Repeat Roulette Roll For Arts Ball Tickets

With only three and one-half days left before the 52nd annual UC Arts Ball, approximately one hundred tickets had been sold for the dance at noon-hour yesterday. Social Director of the University College Literary and Athletic Society Victor Beube (III UC), said the Lit executive had hopes of selling 100 more tickets.

In order to boost ticket sales for Arts Ball, the UC Lit set up a "wheel of fortune" in the rotunda of University College last week. This means of selling tickets proved so successful that it was decided to try it again yesterday from 12:00-2:00 p.m. The wheel of fortune will also be in operation today, and the person who is lucky enough games of chance may be able to buy a ticket to the Arts Ball for as little as twenty-nine cents.

Compared to last year the Lit is ahead on ticket sales and there is every indication that the Arts Ball will be highly successful this year, said Publicity Director Joe Goldenberg yesterday.

As in the past, a Queen of the Arts Ball will be chosen at the dance by members of the faculty. This year's Queen will receive several gifts and will receive her crown from the '51 Queen of the Arts Ball, Jan Morton. So far seven entries have been placed in the wooden box located in the UC Rotunda for this purpose. Any girl registered in University College is eligible to enter the contest.

Although the dress is optional at the Arts Ball this year, everyone on the executive of the UC Lit will be in formal dress.

The Big Sleep

At last, the NFCUS executive has become officially aware of the "mounting enthusiasm in favor of a tour of Canadian University campuses by a group of Russian students". We cannot bring ourselves to applaud their perspicacity.

It is fully five months since the annual NFCUS conference turned thumbs down on the proposal to invite Russian students for a three-week visit to Canada. Since then, university after university has reconsidered the question. One by one, they have taken a vote.

By early December, a majority of Canadian university members favored the visit. Much earlier, however, the whole question had reached controversial heights on many campuses.

Yet, since September, the NFCUS executive has simply twiddled its collective thumbs. They have not taken a lead in re-opening the question. Apparently a request from McGill University to call for a national referendum was simply ignored.

Yet, now, the proposed Soviet exchange has assumed a belated importance in the eyes of the NFCUS executive. It has become so momentous that the mail service, not effectively used in the past, has been given up for the present. Apparently, the executive members must meet and talk and break bread together before reversing September's decision—although a majority of university members have already done so. And if the international conferences continue at the present rate, there will be little hope of a meeting till mid-February.

Now, the elephantine gait of a governmental bureaucracy is one of the most enraging facets of our so-called democracy. From Ottawa, however, we have come to expect a degree of frustration.

From a smaller, less monumental organization, such as NFCUS, we can reasonably hope for a greater mobility. But the red tape procrastinations of NFCUS makes governmental delays seem to pallid pink by comparison.

The NFCUS executive could have avoided such inordinate delays by using the excellent mail services of this country and by calling for a national referendum—months ago. Yet they did not.

And now from Edinburgh come magnificent and elaborate schemes for an international secretariat, student exchanges, material and technical assistance and so forth. Unlike the proposed Russian visit, these ventures will need money—vast piles of it.

How will the lumbering machinery of the NFCUS organization operate on these plans, when a simple three week tour which has secured the approval of a majority of universities falls into the oblivion of inaction? Will not they, the golden plans and sterling principles of Edinburgh, "like chimneysweepers, come to dust"?

After all, the much-discussed, widely-approved Russian visit, with bursts of speed and good fortune, will arrive with our annual examinations. If at all. At that rate, Edinburgh will probably receive verbal arabesques from here to eternity.

Immigration

Straw And Vesuvius

This is the final in a series of two articles on Immigration — The Canadian Problem — by Michael Hind-Smith, Graduate Studies.

At the risk of burning our sensitive finger-tips we propose to stride up to the volcano that we imagined in our previous article on this subject and poke at some of the hot substance that goes to make up the immigration problem.

One of the most remarkable characteristics of an age as susceptible as this one to political demagoguery, is the comparative inviolability of the interests of organized labor. A far-cry from a nineteenth century where labour was indeed downtrodden and miserable, is an age when not even the most inveterate politician, who wishes to remain one, will even question the wishes of organized labour. The situation is an obvious development of an increasingly mechanized society, based as it is on the competition of men with machines, and of men with men for the control of those machines.

But in this anomaly lies the root of our immigration problem. The main influex of refugees of late, and of immigrants as a whole, has been labouring people, unskilled and fleeing a generally impoverished existence. This of course excludes British Commonwealth immigrants who are given master-race and white man's country treatment by the immigration laws.

From the time of the great immigration boom of the early twentieth century, these labourers have been consumed by the prairies and by the bush and have quickly become "Canadians". But as the government of Canada has become more popularly based, as these interests have been given political expression, the story has assumed a different slant.

Agitation of organized labour against increasing immigration has developed on two scores. One is of fear that immigrant labour would be cheap and willing to work for lower wages than unionized labour, and would therefore be hired by employers anxious about their costs. On this score Vancouver has been notoriuos for its bottle-throwing and unpleasantness, directed originally against the immigration of Chinese and Japanese at the beginning of the century, but later continued in less violent forms against recently-immigrated prairie farmers escaping the rigours of the prairie winter for the banana-belt climate of British Columbia.

The other is a more recent development precipitated by the arrival of a new class of refugee immigrant in the post-1945 era, an immigrant better-equipped in technical knwoledge and mechanical skills in many cases than his predecessors. Against these "foreigners" the self-appointed "Canadians" have raised a howl of anguish that they were "trying to take over the country".

How does this apply today? First, Canadian labour wages, bolstered by a series of productive strikes and the vicious circle of rising costs, are second only to those of the United States worker and it is not surprising to find a strong consolidation behind the labour unions. The strike weapon remains the most powerful stick to beat the head of the industriat employer.

The issue is already a political one. Read the pages of Hansard. But should it, as it may well, become an election issue, the political party line-up is a difficult one to visualize. The CCF, built up largely on the discontended farming elements of the west, is engaged in a last-ditch political re-orientation programme designed after the British Labour Party.

As industrialization grows in Canada so should the CCF grow is the somewhat wishful reasoning of these political soothsayers. But the effort to woo the trade unions has been a dismal flop. Of this the open alliance of the CCL Unions with the CCF party in the recent Ontario election is the most depressing example. Further, should the CCF, as might be conjectured, come out in favor of large-scale developmental immigration policies, would it not clash with the labour and farming elements on which its continued existence as a political entity depend?

Yet the crusading internationalism of the CCF leadership on foreign policy demands such an approach, while the body of the party are the ones who are decrying it.

And what of the Government? Increasingly progressive social legislation during the past ten years has left the original proponents of such legislation, the CCF, wallowing behind with only the wail that it should have been done years ago, or that the legislation doesn't go far enough. In this instance the government might well afford to tear another leaf out of the Coldwell copy-book.

Officials of the Departments of Immigration and of the Department of Labour have frequently been overheard thinking out aloud about what the other Department is doing. While Immigration brings more and more people into Canada, Labour complains that it doesn't know what to do with them.

Might this not be the time for these departments to work out a planned immigration policy involving large-scale capital development, planned so that vital projects of industrial expanston might be undertaken with the same ease as they were in war time?

Take the sad but seemingly best understood example of armaments for one. If we are to believe those who urge us to rearm, who squeal that Canada is lagging behind in its North Atlantic Pack commitment, then is there not an outlet? If we shall all pitch our arms into the ocean anyway or shall pile them neatly for the officials of the United Nations inspection commissions to look at, it would still have achieved its purpose—greater employment and prosperity for Canada.

But to embark on such a policy would take some extra-governmental stirring. Perhaps this would come from the immigrants themselves, those who are already here.

Or do we resign ourselves to one of two unfortunate conclusions—either to the paradox that a nation created and built up by immigrants that we don't like "foreigners" after all, or that as a nation we are afraid to look an inch further into the future than our industrial leaders will venture to peer.

As the Italian saying ruefully points out—"It takes more than straw to stop Vesuvius when it is aroused."

OUR READERS WRITE

Practice Principle!

Editor, The Varsity:

Back from Edinburgh, Mr. Syd Wax (IAC chairman) reports that "Canada is taking an increasingly important role in international student activity . . . illustrated . . . at the recent Edinburgh conference." (Varsity Jan. 15) We also learn from Mr. Wax that he and our other NFCUS representative at Edinburgh, Jean de Margerie, suggested the lines for, and offered four resolutions which set in motion plans for the new secretariat of Western student unions.

It seems rather contradictory that NFCUS representatives, like Mr. Wax, show no hesitation when abroad to act in the name of 45,000 Canadian students on matters about which the student body have not expressed themselves officially, while at home these same people hesitated and seemed reluctant (London NFCUS conference in September) to act on a relatively simple question, the Russian student visit, without first having some assurance that Canadian students would support them.

Now that this support for the principle of a Russian student visit has been clearly expressed, I think the time has come for NFCUS, and the IAC in particular, to demonstrate to Canadian students and to the world, their sincerity in seeking to find common ground for co-operation with students in Eastern Europe and Asia, through the IUS. For only when this takes place is there hope for a peaceful settlement of East-West problems on the student level. I believe the test of NFCUS's sincerity in this regard comes down to this. If they really intend to seek for improved relations with the IUS they will push, now that they have the assurance of student support behind them, the Russian student visit, with the same efficiency and despatch as they have shown themselves capable of at Edinburgh. Such an action by NFCUS, more than any other, would symbolize to the students of Eastern Europe and the whole world the friendly and non-aggressive sentiments of Canadian students towards them, at least as effectively as the Princess' tour symbolized the friendly ties existing between Canada and England. But if on the other hand NFCUS does not intend to improve relations with the IUS they will not encourage the Russian student visit to actually take place, even though they may talk favorably about the principle of the visit. I believe that Canadian students who wish to see Canada play a genuinely important role in international student affairs in the critical days to come must apply this test to NFCUS.

Lost Sheep Welcome

Editor, The Varsity:

The men of 73 St. George would like to invite the writers of "The Lost Sheep" and any other students of the same opinion to an evening bull sessions in the house on Wednesday or Thursday. We think it only reasonable that honest students should seriously examine alternative explanations of life. We have therefore invited a missioner to the house so that we can discuss the very questions that are so problematical not only to you but to us. Since when is honest inquiry discrimination?

Scots And U of T To Spar In Brading Trophy Combat

The controversial Brading Trophy will be the prize tonight when three debaters, representing an association of Scottish universities, meet the best of the Senior Intercollegiate teams in Strachan Hall of Trinity at 8 p.m. Two of the three Scots will oppose the two Toronto men chosen as best team in Senior Intercollegiate debating last term. Women will be admitted.

The topic for the debate, which the Scots successfully upheld at McGill earlier this week and defended last night at Queen's University in Kingston, is "Resolved that the Commonwealth of Nations should federate". The Scots team has debated on the affirmative throughout their tour of the Intercollegiate league of which Toronto is a member, and will do so again at Western next week before their return home.

The Toronto team will be John Barton, a Trinity senior, and his partner Neville Taylor, a freshman from University College. These two were chosen as Toronto's best in the debates trials last fall, and went on afterwards in the intercollegiate debating competition to down Queen's, McGill and Western teams to win the privilege of defending the Brading trophy for Canada.

The Scots will arrive here from Kingston on the 5:40 p.m. train. While there are no major official plans for a welcome, various college and University of Toronto Debating Union officials will meet them, as well as "the girl bagpiper from St. Hilda's", said Dwight Fulford of the UTDU.

The plans include a UTDU dinner in the Great Hall of Hart House with the Scots as guests of honor before the debate, and supper in the Provost's lodge at Trinity after; catering provided by Bradings. Friday they will attend the Trinity Conversation with, Fulford said, "selected St. Hilda's beauties". Saturday they will see the hockey game at Maple Leaf Gardens.

The judges of the debate will be the Hon. E. R. "Roly" Michener, labor leader Mr. Chas. Millard, and industrialist Sidney Hermant. On the basis of their judgment the Brading Trophy will be awarded to the winning team by President C. Allen Snowdon of Bradings Breweries.

Last Minute Entries Boost Chariot Race

The annual Chariot Race is being run today.

Thanks to last-minute entries by five groups of engineers and two outside organizations, the annual classic—which almost fell by the wayside this year—will take place at 1 p.m.

Tradition has been broken regarding the starting line, though: start and finish will be at the traffic island at the south end of the campus.

Seven entries will leave the post tomorrow when the Skule cannon blasts off. They are Victoria College Union, The Varsity, Engineering Business Club, Civil Engineering Club, Andy Molozzi & Co., Hank Tamowski & Co., Jim Moseley & Co. The last three are Engineers.

One person must ride on the chariot, and the chariot must be driven by manpower, according to rules prepared by the Engineering Society, the race's sponsor. Chariots will be able to cut in, but no dumping will be allowed.

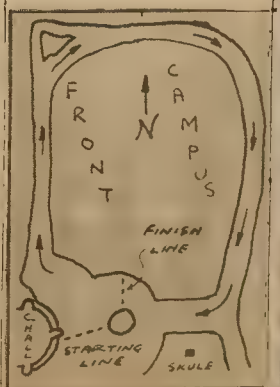
A fair start is guaranteed by the Engineering Society — but that body guarantees nothing else. However, marshals will be provided to keep the crowd back from the start and finish.

Winner of the trophy will get the Jerry P. Pott Trophy, Mark II. The original one was lost two years ago, when it was stolen by the Meds' terrorist Femury Gang.

The race will run around the campus clockwise. Cars will be removed from the inner edge to clear the track.

Chariots will be supplied by the Engineering Society where necessary. This year there will be only two garbage trucks available; other entries will have to use cement trucks. In previous years all entries have been supplied by the Department of Street Cleaning; however this year (according to Engineering Society Publicityman Frank Yamada) the DSC would only supply two chariots owing to breakage in previous years, and no other municipality within 15 miles of the city has such wagons.

Yamada says that there will be at least one decorated float in the race.



Two heats will be run. The four entries in the first will be Eng. Bus., Molozzi & Co., The Varsity, and VCU, in that order from the inside. Second heat will be between Tamowski & Co., Moseley & Co., and the Civil Club.

The heats will be timed, and the winner of the race selected from the two heat winners according to time only.

Impartial judges will be selected tomorrow. By "impartial", Yamada said he meant "not from Skule".

The Chariot Race is part of Ajax Commemorative Week. A publicity gag for Skule At-Home, it is traditionally won by Skule, though Varsity reports differ yearly.

Early yesterday it looked as if no entries would be made, and the race wouldn't be run. But by press time seven entries were in, and final plans made.

Employment Scene Bright For 1952

"We expect to have a very good season in placing students in summer jobs," said E. J. Halse of the National Employment Service yesterday.

Halse said that there were very few part-time jobs available now and that it was mostly interviews for summer jobs that being accepted. Hydro will interview any SPS and Commerce and Finance students. The Department of Highways will interview students from all years in civil engineering and chemical engineering and students from first and second year in Architecture.

In addition, Halse said that quite a few different companies have sent in requests for student help and that students are responding favorably to the jobs offered.

Miss A. E. M. Parkes, in charge of the women's employment service said that there are no summer jobs available as yet except for the odd camp councellor position.

"Jobs", said Miss Parkes, "never come in before March 1 at the earliest. I hope that there will be a National Employment Officer here previous to March 1 to register the students and make placements after the jobs come in."

"January," she added, "'is the worst month for part-time work and those jobs that are available are being filled from those names that are still in our file."

At right is a student who has a very unusual assignment — he's working out new ways to make people froth at the mouth. He's in the pharmacy lab, and one of the assignments there is the development of new and more effective dentifrices. All this work just for a row of pretty teeth.

They Just Can't Forget Ajax Skule Celebrates Saga Today

Ajax, like Texas, was a place of vast distances. To travel from lecture to lecture the Jaxmen either walked through the long corridors that were built between the buildings or else used one of the "Green Dragons", usually called a horse van. The "Dragons" were packed so tight that it took two men and a boy to close the doors. Women rode with the driver.

"Whereas it is held by the Engineers that Ajax, tho' a rough do, was a good thing;

"And whereas even those who would, find it impossible to forget the joint;

"Therefore be it resolved that the unforgettable shall not be forgotten."

With these stirring words, the ASSES (Ajax Survivors Student and Engineers 'Sociation) announced the inauguration of Ajax Commemoration Week in February of 1950, a week of contests in "chawin' tobacco spittin' ", "rollin' yer own" and "stoggey smokin' ". Skulemen fere forbidden to shave for the entire week, and on the final climactic day, featuring the chariot race, were to wear high-cut boots, ancient parkas, battledress, plaid shirts and dungarees.

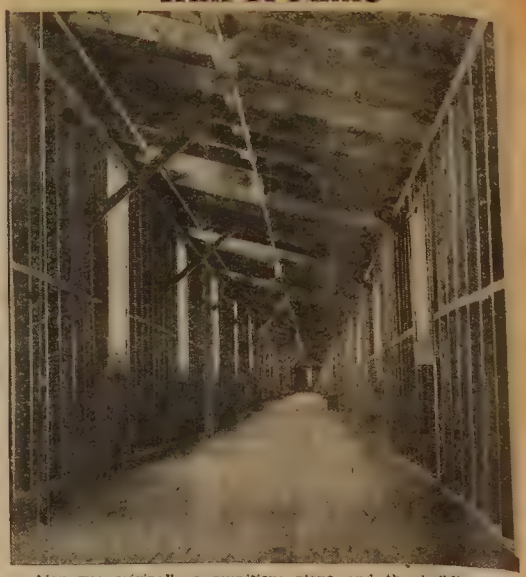
What was Ajax, that 3,000 Engineers devoted an entire week to the establishment of its memory?

The answer may partly be found in the calendar for the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering. An historical sketch states that in 1945, the University of Toronto leased from the Crown a shell-filling plant at Ajax, 25 miles east of Toronto. The location was obtained in anticipation of a heavy increased registration with the return of the veterans. As Skule expected the greatest increase, it was decided that the first and second years of Engineering would be given at Ajax.

Lectures for first year students began in January of 1946, and for second year in the following September, giving a total enrolment of 2,300 students.

The calendar goes on to describe Ajax as a "self-contained University Community" of 446 acres and 111 buildings, and further, that "the University operated such services as central heating, road maintenance, water supply, sewage disposal . . ." The calendar does not mention the house parties, Spruce Villa, Big Red (a dog who battled with the students for their daily bread), three-day bridge tournaments, and other such diversions which presented themselves to the Ajax student.

Finally, the calendar explains, in 1949 the Wallberg Memorial and new Mechanical Buildings were completed, and with the decrease in registration in the Faculty, these increased facilities made the continued operation of Ajax unnecessary.



Ajax packed up three years ago. The freshmen who began Engineering during its last year of operation were the class of 5T2, this year's graduating class.

The fear has been expressed by various members of this class that as they leave the university their "way of life and the influence of Ajax will disappear and be forgotten," unless steps are taken to instill the spirit of Ajax in "those who are left behind."

Understanding this danger, the Mechanical Engineers, 5T1, presented to the Department of Mechanical Engineering a mural depicting the more interesting features of life at Ajax.

Further, the Engineering Society has set aside Jan. 24 as Ajax Commemoration Day, a day in which the fabled giants of Ajax will attempt to show their fellow Skulemen and the rest of the campus how important the traditions of Ajax are to the University.

Hall of Fame

Ajax was originally a munitions plant, and the buildings were placed far enough apart so that if one blew up it would not detonate the remainder. This meant that long corridors had to be built over hill and dale to connect the buildings. On Saturdays some of the engineers rode bikes through these corridors while others were known to roller skate up and down the hills at "line three".

ABSTRACT FILMS AT HART HOUSE TODAY

Another in the regular showings of films in the East Common Room of Hart House will take place today at noon. There will be two performances, one at 12:30 p.m., the other at 1:30.

This week's films are sponsored by the Art Committee, and will deal with the elements of abstract art. The first, entitled "Elements of Design: Composition" will deal with the fundamental concepts underlying abstract painting.

The second film, entitled "Pen, Point, Percussion", is another of the experimental films prepared by the Ottawa producer, Norman McClaren. It applies the principles explained in the first film in patterns painted directly onto the film. McClaren has also experimented with painting soundtrack on film.

Next week's film will be "Newfoundland Scene", a new documentary of the tenth province.

Vic Outdoes Skule In Tuneful Tourney

By JOE SCANLON

Despite the boos and catcalls of the four hundred students in Convocation Hall, Victoria lege won the Student Help t.. ian Relief and Education (SHA... band contest yesterday. Vic Col- lected $453.42 to swell the Share funds. Skule supporters tossed in $104.27 to place second. Third place went to the School of Mu- sic with $16.28 and last place to the UC entry who could only man- age $6.67 from their ardent fans.

The only musical group there was the School of Music who play- ed for the large crowd with a ren- dition of "Young Man with a Horn" that had even the Engineers shouting.

University College were the first group to play. They started off with a rendition of "I Can't Love Anybody but You Baby." This was featured by solos on the trumpet, clarinet, and the traps. The musicians were neatly dress- ed and presented a sharp con- trast to the other motley outfits.

Skule started off with something that sounded like "Billy Boy." Then the LGMB acted out a ver- sion of "Anthony and Cleopatra" that would have had Robert Gill tearing his hair. The large crowd, mostly engineers, shouted out the school song as the engineers play- ed their last number.

Another outfit, the quintet from UC did their best to amuse the hecklers but attracted only paper darts. Three of their members al- so starred in other groups so the legality of their entry was doubt- ful.

The Vic band was dressed in the stolen Skule uniforms and a few basketball jerseys. They played the engineering song in funeral march time and succeeded in mak- ing a thorough mess of it. The Vicsters also brought along two girls who danced a Charleston to their first number. Vic insured first place by bringing along cheques totalling $300 and another fifteen dollars in bills. From the crowd all they received were pap- er darts, bags, and uneaten lunch- es.

To determine the order of the entries the MC picked several pretty girls from the onlookers. All the girls attracted whistles from admiring engineers in the upper balcony. The MC tried to crack off-color jokes at various times but these were drowned out by shouts from the boisterous crowd.

Chester Smith, who played in both the UC and Music groups, switched from clarinet to alto sax for his second appearance and played solos on both. Vern Tur- ner from UC also played in two groups as he appeared to be the only one in the band that knew "The Old Ontario Strand."

The affair was brought to a fit- ting conclusion when all the play- ers harmonized with "Old Lon- don."

TO ADDRESS R.C.I. ON POWER OF ATOM

Dr. K. H. Kingdom, technical manager of the Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory of the General Electric Company in Schenectady, New York, will address the Royal Canadian Institute on the sub- ject, "Progress Report on Power from the Atom."

The lecture will be presented in Convocation Hall the evening of Saturday, Jan. 26, at 8:15 p.m.

World Not Church Is Wrong—Milford

In his lecture on "The Weakness and The Glory of the Church" in Convocation Hall last night Canon Milford claimed that "the world does not like to look at the church because the world is wrong."

Canon Milford admitted that the Church has always been in an ambiguous position, partly succeeding and partly failing, but he pointed out that the Son of Man came to save the sinners not the righteous. As an illustration he said that a visitor from Mars being shown through a city hospital might argue that in this house of health he had observed more sickness than he had seen in a week.

He added that although the "treasure is in earthen vessels" it is here for those who have the eyes to see it. Our ideas may be distorted by movies and cheap literature but people should even- tually realize that those within the Church have something others lack.

The goodness of the Christian is an acquired taste into which men must be initiated, he continued, in much the same manner as one develops a taste for good music. He must recognize that he will be a better man in Christ and become initiated through an act of sub- mission to Him.

"It sometimes seems as if the actual Church is the last place in which to find Divinity" said Canon Milford. But he explained that al- though Christians do not agree more often, when they disagree they are still in fellowship. And although the Devid may have tem- porary triumph they usually hold together through racial and politi- cal differences and even war.

He pointed out that there is no one Christian type of saintliness And he cited the courage of a paralyzed missionary who truly lived the words of St. Paul, "My strength is made perfect in weak- ness".

In discussing the question "Are marriages made in Heaven?" Can- on Milford explained that it did not mean that they were neces- sarily prearranged but that mar- riages are made in Heaven by God in the process of living and added that repeat-forgiveness kept them from being simply "consecrated dog-fights".

Canon Milford stressed that the daily experiences of living are similar to those of the saints. "I have been guided," he said, but added that this could be explain- ed psychologically. That his pray- ers had been answered and that he has been forgiven cannot be proved logically but he has a clue to so much more that is promised to him and to all those who be- lieve that he realizes that the pro- cess of redemption is a daily ex- perience.

In closing Canon Milford said that the Church will always be up- held by the group of people who accept sorrow without wailing, joy without exhortation and so do not take the world too seriously be- cause they know that everything in it must die.

Canadian Trade and Commerce Minister C. D. Howe is depicted above in the Chancellory immediately before delivering the fifth Wallberg Lecture in Convocation Hall Tuesday night. Flanking him on left and right respectively are the deans of the two largest faculties in the university, Dean Beatty of the Faculty of Arts, and Dean Tupper of Engineering.

NATO Is Best Instrument For Peace Says Graydon

"The western nations have had to relinquish their hopes of amica- ble settlement of the world's prob- lems at the conference-table, and have tried to build up sufficient power and strength to talk to im- perialistic Communism in its own language," Gordon Graydon told the Political Science Club on Tues- day evening. Mr. Graydon, M.P. for Peel, vice-president of the parlia- mentary committee on external af- fairs, was speaking at Alumnae Hall at Vic on "The Uneasy Peace".

Mr. Graydon, who was one of Canada's delegates to the San Francisco Conference which plan- ned and initiated the United Na- tions, outlined the shift in the for- eign policy of the West since that date. The hope at the end of a hor- rible war that all nations would unselfishly strive to solve their problems gave way, he said, to a realization that Communism must be contained by a balance of pow- er to preserve an uneasy peace. He remarked that militant Commu- nism could be gauged by the in- crease in people under Communist rule since 1945—from one-twelfth of the total population then to one- third now.

He outlined the decision to form the North Atlantic Treaty Organi- zation, "after the Soviet govern- ment had previously signed no less than seventeen pacts with its satel- lites." In this connection, Mr. Gray- don commended "the intestinal fortitude" of the Turks who, despite a "menacing border", offered to join NATO "to fight to keep the peace".

More than 360,000 photographic negatives have been taken in con- nection with the forest resources inventory carried out by the On- tario Department of Lands and Forests.

Scrapbook Story Nine Aired Now

"Varsity Scrapbook", the week- ly radio show presented by the Radio Committee of the Students' Administrative Council over CJRT-FM, produces its ninth pro- gram today.

The play, "Rachel and Akiba", is the story of the teacher, philo- sopher and scholar, Rabbi Akiba, and his wife. A shepherd to Rachel's father, Akiba fell in love with the young girl, and, his suit rejected by the father, ran away with her. A self-educated man, he began his formal studies in Jeru- salem at the age of 40, and became the foremost teacher in Israel.

Dramatized and produced by Pearl Parnes , the cast includes Faye Firestone, Stan Korchuk, John Turnbull, Doug Butt, Ralph Wintrob and Gilda Fine.

These radio programs are pre- sented on successive weeks, by the Drama Societies of the four Arts Colleges. "The Necklace" by Guy de Maupassant, presented, by Trinity College, and a scene from the life of Sir Thomas More, pre- sented by St. Michael's, are among the past productions. This week's show is under the sponsorship of the University College Players' Guild.

ART REVIEW

Artist Walsh Sees City In Varied Perspectives

Not many Canadians paint their cities. Not many people paint night scenes. John Walsh does. Vigorously and quite well.

The paintings shown can be roughly divided into three groups according to the themes: the City from Within, the City from Above, Suburbs.

The scenes representing the city from the point of view of a pedestrian show it as moody, man-made and man-inhabited surroundings. The streetscapes range from the friendly to the forbidding. "Briglet City" and "The Little Cafe" show the spectacular and the more human friendliness.

"Quebec Street" and "Night in the City" on the other hand, show the overpowering might the man-made surroundings can have.

In the group of paintings where the city is seen from above, it is possible to feel a certain loneliness — the loneliness of the men who has been left out from all that is happening below him. The night scenes in this group are interesting mainly by showing what could be called the negative of a city. The roofs, ordinarily well-lit, are dark. The streets, dark in the daylight, are flooded in light. This light creeps along the walls, but never seems to reach the top. This is best illustrated by "Quebec from the Terrace" and "Quebec Roofs."

"Oil Refinery at Night" and "Lachine" are representative of the surburban series.

John S. Walsh loves the city in both its glory and its ugliness, in both its friendliness and its forbidding coldness. He likes the boldness of the city's geometry, which comes out best when unnecessary details are covered by the kind darkness. He knows his city and paints for those who know it also. His interest lies mainly in the moods the city can produce, or the moods which produce the city.

It does not seem to be the search for the romantic which makes John Walsh paint scenes in the darkness or in the rain. He is not a straight-forward romaticist. He is only showing his subject under those conditions which bring out its qualities in their full richness.

There is a great variety of techniques even within each medium: oil, water, color, chalk. Both the obvious and the subtle changes in the techniques enable him to capture the exact mood of each scene. In the "Lachine" he uses heavy textures to accentuate the life in the leaves of the trees. In "Quebec Roofs" he uses smooth surfaces and indefinite lines to accentuate the quietness of the city at night.

All the paintings are vigorous and honest. Although many influences can be traced, the work shown is integral and quite personal.

The show will remain in the Gallery until February 3. It will be reviewed by Mr. Paul Duval on Wednesday, January 30, at 5 p.m.

SCIENCE NOTES

Mislaid Mutton

By JIM ANDERSON

Present campus discussion has moved this columnist to mention matters theological.

A lost sheep writing recently in this paper states that Christians are preaching about a God "whom no man has seen at any time." In the practice of medicine, men pass their years in desperate attempts to keep Life within a human body. Yet this Life to which they devote all their attention has not been seen, is not understood, and cannot be successfully defined. In this light, discounting God on grounds of impalpability seems a rather dangerous position even on purely practical grounds.

In the present age of science with a capital S, it is easy for a casual observer to walk gently out on a limb. One heartening thought is that those who take science unto their bosom and oppose it to its aged stepsister Religion, are those whose acquaintance with science has been the manufacture of foul gases in a High School laboratory. They, the enlightened, scorn anything so naive as a belief in God. Besides, in present day living it is the untruth that makes you free, and many souls crave freedom at any cost.

The trouble lies not so much in the dangers of exposing a tender young mind to the devastating impact of university high thinking. It stems far deeper than that, for youth apparently approaches the portals of learning with their cerebral functioning tied up in two neat little bundles. One contains their daily methods of living and empirical observations; the other, with perhaps a prettier bow fastened about it, contains their Sunday concepts of religion and morals

Evidently they did not early enough realize that carrying around a blfid personality is not considered psychologically healthy. What a shame they did not try to increase their moral education at the same pace as their secular one. When one phase of their thought is at University level and the other is somewhere honorably past kindergarten, it is inevitable that they become the furtive wooly sheep coyly elusive behind one of Hugh Niblock's boulders.

And there they hide, rather proud of their misplaced title of agnostic. If they were truly agnostic, they would be honestly and methodically trying to find out, "hoping it might be so." Our great maturity can be summed up in the deathless words of a pretty coed overheard the other day telling a friend "I'm just worn out! I thought so much last weekend."

It has now become fashionable to believe in Santa Claus, but not in God.

Although such subjects are outside my field, I expect that the plan of the present campus Mission, together with the Newman and Hillel organizations for Catholic and Jewish students is to enable sheep of all hues to improve their religious understanding. It may then fill a respectable niche in their philosophy.

So now the Science Editor has preached a wee sermon.

Of Cars And Thefts

Carelessness in locking one door of his car cost one Victoria student an expensive auto rug Tuesday night. Parked outside St. Hilda's College while attending a club meeting, he returned to find one door unlocked and the rug missing.

When contacted last night, Detective Massey of the City Police said that thefts from cars in the University area were not rare, that there had been on noticeable increase in the average number recently.

Bold Ballerina

Here is Ruth Gillis of the Royal Conservatory Opera School, dressed for her part in Smetana's folk opera "The Bartered Bride". She plays Esmeralda, the impish circus dancer who almost gets married to the village idiot. At the coming Hart House Sunday evening concert, however, she will appear in more modest guise as one of the three Spirits in "The Magic Flute".

Conservatory Opera At Hart House Concert

The Royal Conservatory Opera School, some of whose members will be heard at next Sunday's concert in Hart House, is a relatively young organization. It is not yet three years since its first full-scale production, Smetana's "The Bartered Bride", in Eaton Auditorium.

From modest beginnings, the Opera School has grown into a large-scale concern. It puts on the annual opera festival in Toronto, and its productions are now staged at the Royal Alexandra to accommodate the larger crowds it attracts. It also produces full-scale performances of opera in other cities of Ontario. Many of its members are also members of the CBC Opera Company, which averages one opera broadcast a month during the season.

Although stars have, of course, appeared in the company, its directors will make a special point of the blending ensemble singing rather than individual prowess. Consequently the operas of Mozart, and those of those of Puccini are special favorites of the Opera School.

Sunday's program will be made up of selections from the operas to be acted out in the coming opera festival. A group of about 50 singers, under the direction of Nicholas Goldschmidt will perform songs, duets, and choruses from Mozart's "The Magic Flute", and Smetana's "The Bartered Bride". Owing to the large number of people involved, there will be no acting this year as there was at last year's concert.

Nicholas Goldschmidt has been the musical director of the Opera School since its inception, and has conducted nearly all its performances. Trained in Europe, he earned himself a reputation as operatic conductor there. Since 1937, he has lived in North America, and before coming to Toronto was opera director at Stanford and Columbia Universities.

Tickets for the Sunday evening concert are available to members of the House free of charge at the hall porter's desk, or through faculty representatives. Ladies may be brought as guests on double tickets. The concert starts at 9:00 p.m.

Unsung Heroes

Rather unique among the unsung heroes of the theatre is the book-holder—or to use the more archaic, and less distinguished title—prompter. Not only must this responsible hero know how to read be able to follow the actors, but he must be a master of a quiet patient suffering suggesting that rehearsals have already lasted months.

This attitude can be further broken down into the two very distinct ses of book-holder. There is the Acting Book-holder and the Direct- Book-holder. The latter is supposedly learning by watching, but his ering should always imply this dissatisfaction with his mentor. The Book-holder must have that wonderful air of quiet conviction he can act any of the parts better than the actors. Of course the erienced book-holder (such a one is R. G. D. George) carefully pre- one speech that he knows the lead has not memorized. He gives speech with a style and intelligence beyond the actor's dreams. The either quits, or goes all to pieces, while the director is convinced has ability to cast a play is non-existent. Rules for novices:

(1) Never get ahead of the actors. They can't help it if you read lines.

(2) Be patient—plays always end sooner or later—so do rehearsals—

Andres Segovia Reveals Wonders Of The Guitar

What a reviled instrument the guitar is! And small wonder, when anyone who can strum a tonic-dominant accompaniment to "Home on the Range" says he can play it. It took a very great virtuoso to revive for the 20th century the ancient glory of the guitar. That virtuoso was Andres Segovia, whose name means great guitar-playing the world over. Segovia was a serious professional musician from the start, and turned to the study of the guitar with a conventionally thorough musical education. By the mid-1920's he began to gain recognition for himself and his unusual instrument. Now a man of nearly 60, he has lived to see the triumph not only of his own art, but of the music written specially for him and his instrument by some of the greatest of contemporary composers. Spaniards and Frenchmen in particular have responded to his playing, and such composers as Albeniz, deFalla, Roussell and Granados have contributed to the new literature of the guitar. Segovia has returned to the style of guitar-playing prevalent in Spain in the 17th and 18th centuries. At one time, the guitar was the usual household instrument in Spain among all classes of people. Guitar style even influenced the keyboard style of Domenico Scarlatti, who lived in Spain for much of his life. Later, with the introduction of the harpsichord and the piano, the guitar gradually declined in importance, becoming eventually the instrument of beggars and musical connoisseurs.

In its heyday, the guitar was both a contrapuntal and a harmonic instrument. That is, it was customary to play on the guitar not only chordal accompaniments, but real melodies, and often several simultaneous melodic lines. Segovia performs classical works for guitar as well as modern ones. The compositions of Fernando Sor (1780-1839), called "the Beethoven of the guitar" form a prominent part of his repertoire.

With slightly different tuning, it is also possible to perform one the guitar works written for lute. A whole vista of compositions is opened up in this way, for a great many 17th and 18th century composers, including Bach, wrote for this instrument.

To increase the possibilities for variety still further, Segovia has written transcriptions of harpsichord and piano pieces for the guitar. It surprised me to learn that the range of the instrument extends almost two octaves below middle C, which explains the remarkable richness of these transcriptions.

Many people will argue that the guitar can do little that a harpsichord or piano cannot do better and more easily. Certainly nobody but a virtuoso can play even simple music on it, let alone intricate counterpoint such as Segovia plays.

Nevertheless, as great an authority as Hector Berlioz says (in his "Grand Treatise on Instrumentation") that music on the guitar possess "real charm, when performed by a really good player", Andres Segovia, who certainly has that qualification, plays in Eaton Auditorium Saturday, Jan. 26.

Jupiter Theatre Evaluated Opening Play Inept Choice

It is a pity that the Jupiter Theatre picked the week of December 17th for their first production GALILEO, not only because exams and Christmas jobs took precedence on the campus and kept many students away, but because the week of December 17th was filled with little more than snow, traffic jams and crowded streetcars. Consequently when the time came to balance the books there were many long but determined faces in the "Jupiter" management.

As for GALILEO the play, it was undoubtedly a poor choice to open a career with in Toronto. The Jupiter Theatre seems to have felt that since it had the blessing of such a distinguished actor as Charles Laughton, who translated and first acted it, and such a distinguished critic as Eric Bentley, the play would 'ipso facto' attract all the intelligentsia of the city, who are, after all, the people for whom the Jupiter Theatre was formed. But the people, though perhaps interested in GALITEO and curious to see the original and unique method of dramaturgy employed by the play's German author Bertolt Brecht, expected 'the play to have some little dramatic value. There was no attempt at characterization on the playwright's party; he merely told the old story over again with a great deal of repetition and made the humanizing of the people the actors' responsibility.

Enough of them knew how to accept this responsibility and did, but too often they either didn't know or didn't care to make their characters live. The most outstanding performance was given by Colin Barberini (later Pope Urban VIII). Barberini was a clever scientist trying to uphold scientific truth yet at the same time the leader of a Catholic world which he felt was not ready for scientific truth, and his prayer for guidance was the high point of the production.

John Drainie who played Galileo did a fine job of acting. He was seldom off stage and had to be the bulwark and strength of the whole play against the impossible odds of incompetent, careless and indecisive acting. He grew from robust middle-age to an unbane and very alert old man in a believable way, and generally tried to inspire some life into the others.

Noteworthy in smaller parts were Donald Glen, who changed characters as easily as he changed noses, (as a philosopher we was excellent) and Lorne Greene, who played the Inquisitor, Cardinal Bellarmini.

Most of the audience was amazed at the manner in which directed at the manner in which director Herbert Whittaker made use of the tiny Museum Theatre Stage. Fourteen scenes were played, with two intermissions, yet not once during the play was there a holdup to change scenery. The whole thing moved easily and quickly and only when there were more than six or seven people in the back part of the stage did the smallness of the stage become obvious. It shows what imagination can do. Even bigger and better things are promised when Jupiter produces SOCRATES in February.

Before that they are presenting Dalton Trumbo's BIGGEST THIEF IN TOWN. I sincerely hope they recoup some of their losses with this farce, which I think will appeal much more to the public than such a dry and poorly written piece as GALILEO. I hope too that in this next play the management inspires in the cast some feeling of making a success of their work. It was all too obvious last month that the actors disliked GALIELEO as much as the audience—in fact more.

David Peddie.

Redmen Visitors In Puck Opener

Tomorrow night at Varsity Arena the hockey Blues play the McGill-Redmen in the opening home game of the 1951-52 season. Two regulars will be missing from the Blues' line-up due to injuries and exams. Veteran Norm Fox will sit the encounter out due to twisted knee ligaments, and Pete Vernon also will not see action due to his final exams in Meds on Saturday.

Just who will be brought up from the Intermediates is not known at this time. The selection will likely depend on the performance of the Intermediates against Osgoode Hall tonight.

Jerry Henderson will fill in for one of the absentees and will play centre with Al Conboy on one of the wings. The rest of the forwards are all set for the game with the Rope-Wheldrake-Adams and Frey-MacKenzie-Arrowsmith lines ready for the contest.

Al Fasan, Gerry Fitzhenry, Joe Kane and Red Stephen will likely form the defence combinations with either Orr or Ross in the nets.

Although the McGill team has only won one game and that against Laval, it is likely that it will be tough competition on the Arena's small ice surface. With several holdovers from last year the Redmen will likely turn in their usual rough, hard-checking game.

Two bright newcomers to the Redmen roster are Al Schutz and Norm Lupovish. Both have had plenty of hockey experience in senior leagues and at present are their team's highest scorers. Freshman coach Rocky Robillard, a former great in many sports at McGill, will have veteran Bob MacLennan in goal with a strong rearguard headed by all-star Ron Robertson.

Tomorrow night's game is a must for the Blues if they hope to retain their championship laurels. With the band in attendance as well as an expected crowd of about 3,000 the evening should prove to be a good night's entertainment for all. The admission as always is free after producing an A.T.L. card.

Bluebells Win Two Contests Defeat McMaster In B-Ball

ZBy JOAN HAGGART

Hamilton, Jan 23—(Staff)—The Varsity Intercollegiate Basketball femmes scor a double victory over McMaster last night, when they won both the Senior and Interme ate games at an exhibition tourney in Hamilton with scores of 39 to 23, and 26 to Although McMaster is not in the Intercoll league, they are entitled to challenge the lea winners, and a win last night might have made the challenge a sure thing.

The Intermediates teed off with the Varsity team taking an early lead and holding it throughout the tilt. The first quarter saw the gals in blue swish the net for ten points. Their checking was solid and the McMaster squad couldn't penetrate into foreign territory long enough to sink the elusive sphere.

McMaster opened up in the second stanza and, led by Barb Ross, they hurled the ball home for eight counts. The U. of T. team copped one basket to end the quarter with a 12 to 8 lead.

In the third frame both teams played fast and loose ball. Varsity added 7 points to their tally while the Hamilton Hoopsters chalked up 3.

The final chapter was a re-take of the third, with Varsity sinking 7 points to McMasters' 3.

Donna Howson was high scorer for the Blues, while Ira Karila turned in a well-rounded performance for U. of T. McMaster's Barb Ross starred throughout the game, collecting 11 of Hamilton's 15 points, with her long shots.

The Senior game was fast and tight with both teams concentrating on their checking. The Varsity gals flashed to the front in the first quarter, sinking 13 points, while McMaster banged the board for 5. The Bluebells kept the upper hand in the second and third chapters with the score 15 going into the fourth.

In the last frame, the Mac started to click, lobbing in 8 to Varsity's 6.

Dorothy Burton, Mac's star ward was the outstanding on the floor, accounting for Hamilton's 23 points. Ev followed with 6. For the Alma Hatch turned in her high-calibre performance, scor 9 counters, while newcomer Lewis came in a close second 8.

Gaunt Takes Squash Final Three Straight

Rick Gaunt, III Trinity, won the University squash tournament at noon yesterday, defeating Tom Dancy, IV Victoria, 3-0. The match was hard played throughout, but Gaunt's experience showed in the tough spots, as he took the series in three straight.

Gaunt was down 14-10 in the first thilt, but Dancy made several errors under pressure, and lost the game 17-14. In the second Dancy held on, keeping even with opponent until the score was 9-9, but then Gaunt pulled away and won 15-10. The third game was more one-sided, with Gaunt winning 15-8.

This tournament showed Gaunt to be one of the top Intercollegiate players, as he won it without losing one contest. In last week's TCS invitation tourney, he played Henry Foster, present US Intercoll champion, and lost a close 3-1 decision.

Hart House players will be entered in the Ontario Squash Racquets Tournament being played this weekend at the Carlton Club. Gaunt and Cameron will play in the singles, while Gil Toppin, Ed Roth, Dancy, Barry, Barry DeVeber and John Walters will be entered in the team tourney.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

We read in the January issue of the Football News, which is being published monthly in the co-called off-season, that Argos are considering trading off Joe Krol because he does not fit into either the offensive or the defensive platoon, having become strictly a kicking specialist in his old age. If Argos are to use a complete two platoon system, Krol could not be dressed merely as a kicker under the present 24-player dressing limit. There is no limit to the number of players that can be carried on a team in any of the bigger football leagues in Canada, just limits to the number that can be dressed for a game. The Western Interprovincial League lets the teams decide between them how many they will dress for each game, but in the Big Four and the Intercollegiate here, 24 is the fixed maximum.

Of all the rules, regulations, and wastes of ink in the rule books of these last named associations, the 24-player limit is surely the most useless. Every Friday during the football season eight coaches, four in the Intercollegiate and four in the Big Four, have to decide which of the players they would like to use will have to sit the game out. Every Saturday half a dozen or so good players on each team, after slogging through a week of practices with the rest, have to watch from the stands.

Varsity generally carries about 30 men on the first team and about the same number on the Junior Varsity, more or less a fluctuating number of hospital cases. No team can afford to carry any less, otherwise a string of injuries like the one Varsity ran into a year ago last fall, in which nearly the whole first string was rendered hors de combat within about two weeks, would sweep the bench as clean as Mother Hubbard's proverbial cupboard. Not many more could be carried because of limited practice facilities and finances.

If this extra half-dozen are good enough to make the team, and have to be carried, what possible reason could there be that they should not play?

Judging by Argo President Bob Moran's statement regarding Krol, Argos are apparently not confident that they will be able to get the limit raised, or changed to a team limit (rather than a dressing limit). The Scullers, or anyway the coach, Frank Clair, have made it clear that they want the change made.

The inherent trouble with rule-making in sports is that it is invariably done by men who have not been engaged in the sport for anywhere from 20 to 50 years, and who seem to think that it is their duty to oblige the athletes currently active to play the game as it was played in their day.

A collection of ballots from the players on each senior football team could be held at the end of each season to find what rule changes the players want. These should be referred to the rules committees of each league when they meet in mid-winter, and come up for consideration if any idea is suggested by say, 20% of the players. If over 50% plug for some change, it should be automatically put in effect.

Pitching Sportshoes

The Group 2 hockey leaders, Trinity A, lost their second in a row in yesterday's only hockey action as they dropped a game to Jr. SPS, 4-1. The slumping Trinity men gave up three goals in the first period and never got back in to the picture. Mollenhauer led the Skulemen with a two-goal display. He was supported by Kent and Yeigh who also scored. Creole saved the Buttery from a shut-out. The teams split six penalties.

There were a pair of games in the major basketball series. UC took Med III, 37-16. Murat had 14 points for the Redmen. St. Mike's C edged Arch A, 37-24. Rossi led the Irish with a 13-point performance while Linogeran was the big man for the losers, scoring eight.

The More House team from St. Mike's piled up 76 points against Vic Midgets who managed 12. Among the Double Blue scorers were Sorgenfrei with 18, Baxter and Parente who each got 16 and Coghlan with 14. Moote was a lone man for Vic getting 10 of the 12 markers.

Fencing

SPS won the Intramural foil last night at Hart House in the two-day eliminations, thanks to the skill and endurance of Lucien Goldenberg, IV SPS, who won 18 matches.

Second was Bill Anderson of St. Michael's, and third was George Kovatch, also of St. Mike's.

Flautist, Soprano At Hillel

The concert held at Hillel House last Tuesday evening was a thoroughly unorthodox one. For one thing, it included a solo flautist, Julius Constant, an event rare enough nowadays to call for special comment. Also, the nature of the program was rather unusual.

Esther Ghan, the well-known soprano, was the chief performer. She sang two rather nondescript groups with a preponderance of full-bodied, not to say sentimental music, and a group of Hebrew songs. Julius Constant ably performed three 18th century works (including the fantastically difficult first movement of Mozart's D major Flute Concerto) and two stylized arrangements of American folk-songs.

My only acquaintance with Hebrew music had been the rather forbidding works of Bloch. Consequently, Miss Ghan's group of songs came as a startling revelation to me. I was struck forcibly by their resemblance to the songs of southern Spain. Textbooks talk of oriental influence on Spanish music, and one can well believe them. The intervals, the rhythms, the very turns of melody of these eastern songs were, to my ears, Andalusian.

Miss Ghan was at her best in these songs. They provided her with some opportunity to display her technique, which is well worth displaying, and also of exercising her musical originality more than in such trite music as the "Hymn to the Sun" or "Musetta's Waltz" (which is completely meaningless out of its context in "La Boheme").

Ruth Zysman and Naomi Socol were the accompanists. It is rather sad that the totally inadequate piano did not give them much of a chance. The concert as a whole, however, was attractive—informal in spirit, but with proper respect for the music on both sides of the instruments.

SOCCER

There will be a meeting of the U of T Soccer Club on Thursday, January 24th, at 5 p.m. in the Staff Room, Hart House.

Pagan Sprites

Once again, the Great Chariot Race is with us. The classical wheels of mythology will roll around the front campus today, once more, for the benefit of those who missed the Graeco-Roman sport.

Actually, the chariot has had a long and honourable history, not just as a sport, but in the noble battles of the ancients. As far as we can gather, it was in bronze chariots that the Assyrians descended upon the Hebrews.

Not until the Egyptians and Persians long passed from the scene, did chariot racing degenerate into a sport. That angle was simply devised by the super-civilized Greeks and Romans.

It is difficult to say precisely where the matter stands at the University of Toronto. Is chariot racing sport or battle?

Now, Doug Sherk, President of the Engineering Society, has stated that "this year the hell-raising will be organized". The term "organization" inevitably implies a degree of civilization. Yet, there is an inescapably barbarous quality about the phrase "hell-raising".

This being an age of compromise, we can only assume that today's race lies betwixt and between the two extremes. A sport that is dangerous but fun.

Of course, things have changed since the good old pagan days. No longer are the chariots a blazing bronze, their drivers armoured and helmeted. Today, the earnest chariot racer must resort to cement buggies and street cleaning vehicles, with little more adornment than a bloop—or a frail unsubstantial tweeper.

However, it is the spirit of the race that counts. The technicolor will have to be left to Hollywood.

The conflict between the Christian Mission and the Chariot Race is rather awkward. The midday burst of paganism maybe somewhat difficult to quell by late afternoon. On the other hand, a wild infusion of decadent classicism might make the student body really ripe for a good round of Christianity. And after all, it was in pagan surroundings that Christianity first blossomed.

It is, of course, still up to the Engineers to decide whether they will allow paganism to run rampant about the front campus. In the past, they have prevented other faculties from showing their true colours. We call for a little All-Varsity spirit about the chariot race. Why should one faculty be intent on harboring all the pagans on the campus?

The Engineering Society has promised every entry a fair start—which is somewhat more generous than usual. Possibly, they are under the gentle influence of charity (entry proceeds are going to SHARE), and perhaps we are simply being charitable, but there seems to be some hope for a race.

After all, if an entry is given an inch, it may take a mile.

OUR READERS WRITE

You Asked Me

Editor, The Varsity:

I suppose I should begin all this with "Dear Larry Darrell". The only thing is I really don't know who you are, having never heard of you before to-day when I happened to read "The Lost Sheep" on the editorial page of The Varsity. However, let us hope that such imaginary drawbacks as the lack of an introduction won't place unnecessary encumbrances on the friendly sort of letter I should like to write to you.

In writing you at all, I am acting on the assumption that your article in Tuesday's Varsity was written with some semblance of sincerity. It is not my personal view that you are trying to start a furor, although no doubt you have. I only hope that people will do a little thinking themselves before they start criticising you.

You have asked several questions, Larry. You have numbered yourself among the "Thomases who doubt". You have referred to yourself and to others like you as "Those outside the fold"; people "to whom God is only a word". Our questions are intelligent. But I doubt if even the wisest person could answer them—the way you seem to want to be answered.

You see, you want everything proven to you, Larry. "Let the Christians present the proof, if there be any proof. You doubt things, but you doubt because you can't see and touch." Don't you know, Larry, that the greatest things that exist cannot be seen or touched? Take the air that you breathe—you cannot see it—but you cannot live without it. You cannot see things like justice and goodness, and love and understanding. But they are there just the same. You may see the manifestation of these things, but I defy you to tell me you have seen, touched or felt the "absolutes".

I like the sentence where you say, "I wish the Christians were less interested in my soul and more interested in me." The real Christians, Larry, are interested in you, from all aspects—even to whether you like jam or marmalade on your toast in the mornings. A real Christian who "loves his brother" loves his whole brother, and not just his brother's soul. It seems to me that you must have been meeting the wrong type of Christians.

Of course, on the other hand, did it ever occur to you why the Christians might be interested in your soul at all? Did you ever think that the Christian derives a good deal of happiness from his love of God, and might just want to ring you in on it too? I think I would be safe in saying that's usually the motive behind most missions.

Don't you believe in miracles, Larry? Think how dull life would be without them. Maybe science has an explanation for snow, but I don't think it can explain the intricate and beautiful design of the snowflake you might see if you were to examine one under a microscope. Or the beauty of a rose-petal or the colours in the peacock's tail.

"Life breeds doubt" you say, I agree with you. You see, we all have doubts sometimes. How much we doubt depends upon how much we believe. The thing is, we can believe a great deal that does not have proof. Belief and understanding are not synonymous terms. One may believe something implicitly, and yet not understand it—not need to understand it.

The human mind is a very intricate mechanism. But it is very finite. That is why it cannot always understand the great mysteries of religion. You want to know "How God could make himself?" "Why?" God is ipsum esse subsistens—pure existence. He never had a beginning. No human being can hope to understand that, but many millions of Christians believe it just the same. It is just too great a thing for the finite human mind to grasp. So you see you are asking questions no one can answer. But that does not mean that there is no answer.

Is there any objective proof of anything, Larry? Proof implies certitude—but then is not certitude something subjective? What I am trying to say is that regardless of proof, one may still believe and believe validly, for the Truth itself is an objective thing—an absolute. Science may offer "Proof" of certain phenomena but is not "Proof" of science merely a series of demonstrations which for a certain length of time all arrive at the same conclusions? What guarantee has science that in perhaps 200 years, the same experiments "Proving" so many things, will work at all, one can say.

Not even you, Larry.

Don't you think people need a Mission now more than then? Don't you think there is a need in the world for more brotherhood, and love, and understanding? Don't you think Larry, that wars would cease if people stopped thinking of themselves, and thought about others for a change—and about God who made "The others"? Don't you see that if people really awakened to the fact that the endless progression of centuries with their births, lives, deaths and their more births all over again must be leading to something? What a mockery shallow existence, if it must all end with the grave. And if it does end with the grave as you other sceptics will say, how can you justify restless yearnings of the human heart that seek to find their only satisfaction in the "intangible" at which you so flagrantly scoff.

No Larry, God is not "a dagger of the mind, a false creation." God is "real". God is very real.

You asked me what I think.

And now I've told you.

III St. M...

Osbert Dill may be the Director of Hart House Theatre and he may mean well, but after all, when it's a matter of losing the Suez Canal for the sake of one lousy week of Pygmalion, I feel that he should stop and think.

Well, the story really goes back to just after the war. Because of Britain's dollar shortage, all American movies were banned. All their ideas were used, but the titles were changed: The Black Rose became Black Narcissus, Angels with Dirty Faces became The Mudlark, etc. In fact, George Bernard Shaw was commissioned to steal the story of Born Yesterday for The Festival of Britain. He called his little play Pygmalion after his mother's daschund. Who would dream that the play would be smuggled to North America?

Osbert Dill, however, is an individualist; he isn't hidebound by conventions or theatrical customs. He brushed the customs aside and smuggled into Canada two packages of Peak Frean's assorted, two Mark VI Jaguars, and a copy of Pygmalion.

Well, Churchill wasn't fooled for a minute. He realized what had happened and foresaw the terrible consequences if the plagiarism were discovered by Representative Sheean of Chicago. Back royalties would be so vast that not even the surrender of Canada, South Africa, and the Queen Mother herself would begin to pay Britain's debt. He told his cabinet that he was going to Washington on a Trans-Atlantic Carabin Weekend, handed over the reins of government to William Glenesk and told Bernard Shaw to drop dead. (His death was dutifully reported by Time and The McGill Daily.)

Churchill sailed that day for the New World and had it not been for the gales on the North Atlantic (God bless the Flying Enterprise) which delayed him, Osbert Dill might never have got away with it, but by the time Mr. Churchill arrived, the damage was done.

Winnie docked in New York, but when he saw that there was to be no ticker-tape parade, he sensed that the jig was up. He immediately hid his "I like Ike" button and bought a ten-dollar-season ticket to Margaret's concert series. Truman thought this was splendid and promised to overlook the whole Pygmalion affair.

Churchill then decided to take a trip to Ottawa to see for himself whether or not Louis St. Laurent was really wearing flowered shirts with his striped trousers. As might be expected, he made a speech. Everything might have been all right had he not mentioned the Governor-General's World War II campaign in Egypt.

You see, although Churchill expected GBS to drop dead on the spot as he was told, Shaw decided to wait until his sphinx-portrait was finished and he rushed to Egypt. While ... for this portrait, and ... to Churchill's Ottawa ... over short-wave, he ... had a brilliant idea for ... Festival of Britain. "What ... you think of a sequel ... Caesar and Cleopatra?" ... ed King Farouk who ... sitting for his sphinx-... "Perhaps I'll call it Gov-... Alexander and Queen ... Rex Harrison and Bett... would be a good team ...

This, of course, was ... cause of the Egyptian ... now we shall probably ... Suez Canal.

As I said, if only Osbert would stop and think. ...

Why Not?

Secret Ceremony Divulges Derelict

The original Jerry P. Potts Trophy is back—and has been presented to The Varsity staff.

In a secret ceremony late last night the former custodians of the trophy presented it to Varsity Editor Barb Brown and her team of virgin charioteers, pictured above. (The top picture is of the Skule trophy case, taken shortly after the Potts Trophy was stolen in 1950.)

The trophy is now in a "secret place", so secret, according to Miss Browne, "that nobody on the staff—including myself—knows where it is."

The original trophy has been missing for two years, ever since it was stolen by a group of Medsmen in the cleverest theft this campus has seen in years. The trophy presented to the chariot race's winners yesterday was carefully marked "Jerry P. Potts Trophy, Mark II."

The unexpected presentation was made close to midnight last night, after Miss Browne received an anonymous phone call offering her the trophy.

Its custodians explained they were giving it to The Varsity because the paper's entry in the classic was the "most virtuous."

"While the original Jerry P. Potts Trophy was the prize," they said, "the Chariot Race was infamous for being fixed so that Skule would always win. Therefore we feel that under our control, the trophy should be presented to the most virtuous entry. In this way we hope to purge it of its unpleasant aroma."

The trophy was stolen in 1950 by a group of Medsmen who hoped to set up an impartial sponsoring body for the race. It was never returned. This year, it appears, the Engineers gave up all hope of getting it back.

Agree Chariot Classic Was Fairly Fair This Year

The annual Skule chariot race was a race this year—even though it was won by an Engineering club.

Although there were cries from some hotheads on this paper's staff that The Varsity really won, the editors decided they would not contest the decision given by the Engineers.

The agreed with the official Engineering Society description of the race: that it was "a fairly fair race, run by honest Engineering methods."

The Jerry P. Potts Trophy, Mark II, was presented at the end of the classic to the Mining and Metallurgy Club. They rounded the course in a record 2 minutes and 56 seconds.

Second in the race was The Varsity (3:15), and third was Engineering Business (3:55). Quoted times were from the official Engineering timer, the Society's president Doug Sherk.

There wasn't much interference from spectators in this race this year—at least not offered the Engineering teams. The Varsity ran into some difficulty during the course—but Meds and Trinity were the only teams that "didn't come in." And Meds were given a 10-second handicap! Trinity turned turtle when it tried to jump to track and cut across the campus.

About 1000 people ringed the front campus and crowded around the starting line at the south end of the campus. They were well-behaved, broke up quietly after the race was over, and contented themselves with a few Toike Olkes—led from the official truck.

The race — basically a publicity gag for the Skule At-Home — was a success, according to Sherk, who reports ticket sales spurted upwards immediately after the closing cannon boom.

But Skule wasn't the only body to get publicity: the UC Arts Ball was represented by a trio, singing their own version of "Down Yonder", which started "Next Friday in West Hall UC, there'll be an Arts Ball for you and for me."

A low-flying sports plane which buzzed the front campus, bombing the spectators with At-Home ads, supplied an additional thrill for the crowd. Once the leaflets even landed near the crowd; the rest of the time they were blown to one side, or lodged in the tops of trees.

New types of chariots were modelled at this year's race. In addition to the standard cement truck type, fans saw a new four-wheeled type, put out by some of Mr. Ford's friends. And Meds had a special light-weight type which looked as if it should be on a golf course with a club bag.

The race gave the Engineers an opportunity to bring out their cannon, in one of its few outings of the year. They weren't taking any chances on its being stolen, though: the mighty mite was securely chained—and padlocked—to two hefty miners.

A burial—of All-Varsity spirit—started the meet off in a happy note, particularly when out of the ashes rose the spirit of Skule. Between races the crowd was beguiled by the sweet tones of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band.

"A typical Engineering symbol of superiority" is the way Engineering Publicityman Frank Yamada describes the Jerry P. Pott Trophy, here being presented to the Mining and Metallurgy Club. That's Yamada giving the pot to the winners. He also commented that, in accordance with Skule's progressive ideas, the new pot was steel, not ceramic like the Mark I.

Finis

Varsity Editor, Barb Browne whipped her team to place third in yesterday's chariot race, at three minutes and 25 seconds. The big smiles and gestures above are due to the fact that the picture was taken just as they crossed the finish line. This heat was run against Trinity, who finished in the middle of the front campus.

Musical Caedmon

A modern musical setting of a poem by the earliest-known Anglo-Saxon poet, Caedmon, will be a special feature of the Trinity Centenary Concert on Saturday, January 26, at 8.30 p.m. in Strachan Hall.

Title of the choral work to be sung by the English Madrigal Singers of Toronto under the direction of John Sidgewick is "Hymn to the Creator."

The poet Caedmon was a pupil of the seventh century Anglo-Saxon religious leader Saint Hilda, after whom St. Hilda's College, Toronto, now residence and social centre of Trinity College women, was named.

Skule Oil Movie Shell Production

The first Engineering Society noon-hour movie of this term will be held at 1 p.m. today in Room T-252 of the new Mechanical Building. The 40-minute show will be on the oil industry, and is produced by the Shell Oil Company.

Next Meet Of UC Lit To Hear Dean Wright

The University College Literary and Athletic Society will have a guest speaker at its next meeting. He will be Dean C. A. Wright, of the University of Toronto School of Law. As Dean of the Law School since its formation in 1949 and Dean of Osgoode Hall Law School for some years before that, he speaks with considerable experience on his topic "Legal Education In Ontario." The meeting will be held Tuesday, Feb. 5th, in the Junior Common Room.

Vincent Massey

Toronto is the only university in Canada with a Governor-General for its Chancellor. The appointment of Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey (pictured above) to the country's Number One post was announced by Buckingham Palace last night. No one is sure just how long the University will keep that distinction though; the President's Assistant, Dean Bissell said last night that presumably it would be up to Massey whether or not he wanted to retain his Chancellor's post. "It's never happened before," commented Dean Bissell.

Two Flags Flying As Vic Pranksters Cause Commotion

The Victoria College flag staff sported two Union Jacks yesterday, one wind-tattered, the other relatively new. The appearance of the second flag, the lacerated one, was a mystery to everyone questioned. The Victoria offices offered no explanation. Mr. Stokes, superintendent of buildings, stated that he presumed "it was a student prank". Stokes had the second flag removed from the mast shortly after 3 p.m.

It was rumoured among Vic students that the torn flag was one which had lain in a dusty tower room since 1918. This flag was accompanied by a sign which read: "For four years this tattered ensign registered Victoria's loss in World War I as for four years it never flew but at half mast". Superintendent Stokes merely said that the flag was an old one which had been replaced.

In order to hoist the second Jack, the pranksters had to move the regular flag from half-mast. It has been flown at this position apparently in memory of Ken Wilson who died in the recent American Airlines crash in New Jersey. Wilson was a Vic grad (class of '2T6) and a prominent Canadian political economic journalist.

Scot Debaters Win As Judges Favor Good Presentation

Although they lost the Brading Trophy Debate by a House Vote of 60 to 31, the Scotch team of Ian MacGregor from Edinburgh, and Tommy Tomlinson, from Glasgow, won the trophy by the judges' decision.

The chairman of the judges, D. Rolland Mitchener, said that they found difficulty in reaching agreement and that they had based their decision on the Scots' ease in presentation and in language as well as on their material. The other two judges were Sydney Hermant and Charles Millard.

The Toronto team of Neville Taylor, I UC, and John Barton, IV Trinity, looked very young in comparison with the veteran Scotch debaters.

Taylor and Barton based their opposition to the motion that "The Commonwealth should federate" on the basis that their opponents were proposing a third power which would be a cause for war rather than creating peace. They said that the United Nations offers the example needed for world peace where a group of individual nations are working together. The South-East Asians were cited as an existing third power.

The Toronto team felt that federation would not work because of military, political and economic reasons. The Commonwealth countries have a widely divergent foreign relations, according to the debators, where Canada is dependent on the United States for defence, and India is pursuing a middle of the road policy between the U.S.-led democracies and the Russian-led bloc.

In the political field they cited the difference caused by South Africa's racial segregation policy, while in the economic field they felt that unity would only benefit the United Kingdom and restrict free trade.

Tomlinson, speaking for the motion said that the Toronto debators had been seeing everything in black and white. When the Scots proposed a federation he emphasized that they did not include India because India was not ready for federation. He further stressed that federation did not necessarily mean that the commonwealth would pursue a policy of complete self-sufficiency. The Scots made no mention of free-trade, Tomlinson said, because while there would be a great deal to be gained by the freeing of trade, a great deal would be lost by the immediate freeing of trade after a federation was effected.

The Scotch team accused their opponents Barton and Taylor, of having a worms' eye view of the world and of being parochial.

Power Talk By McGill Anatomist

The subject of an address this Sunday by Dr. C. P. Martin, head of the Department of Anatomy at McGill University, will be "Power." He has written several books, of which The Decline of Religion (1940) is recognized as an authority in its field.

He has been invited to the Toronto campus by the Versity Christian-Fellowship as the third speaker in a series of monthly ad-Wycliffe College Chapel at 7:30 dresses. He will be speaking at p.m. Sunday.

Dr. Martin came to Canada from Dublin, Ireland in 1936 where he was Professor of Anatomy at Trinity College. He received his education at the same college, with the degree of M.B., ChB., MA and DSc. At present he is the Robert Reford Professor of Anatomy at McGill.

Dr. Martin integrates his medical interests into the broader context of life as a whole. Whenever he speaks at McGill, he is well received, especially by his own medical students.

In addition to his talk on Power, Dr. Martin has been asked by the medical students of the Varsity Christian Fellowship to speak at their fireside at 9 p.m. in the East Residence of the Toronto General Hospital.

More than 360,000 photographic negatives have been taken in connection with the forest resources inventory carried out by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests.

Conservatory Students' Works New, Different And Dissonant

Wednesday afternoon's concert in Hart House of a new works by Conservatory students was all it promised to be: different, dissonant and avant-garde. The questions asked by members at the end were significant; one asked for a definition of music; another, why modern composers felt they had to shock their audience.

Of the four works performed, one, quite frankly, meant almost nothing to me. Morris Eisenstadt may, for all I know, have written very significant music in his suite for Clarinet and Piano. However, it took me so long to settle down to his idiom that not until the last movement could I even begin to detect repetitions of musical phrases.

The easiest way by far to appreciate at first hearing was the set of five songs on poems from the "Child's Garden of Verses" by Charles Wilson. Here the words provide a handle by which to grasp the intent of the music, and also, I think, the melody must be more comprehensible in order to make it vocally possible.

I thoroughly enjoyed these songs. Some of them were obviously related to the words (The Railway Carriage"); in some others ("The Swing") it was the overall spirit that determined the musical pattern. And I am fairly sure there was an intentional reference to Schumann's "Soldier's March" in "Marching Song"—a bright touch.

Feggie Shiff's Violin Sonata was more difficult. The fast movement, at any rate, had readily discernible form, but the tunes of which it was made up already have the sound of cliches. This impression may be due to my lack of discrimination, but I felt I had heard them (or something very like them) quite often before in compositions comig from the Conservatory.

The Piano Sonatina by Paul McIntyre seemed to me to be the most coherent, unified, and also original work on the program. The composer has the ability of forewarning the listener of focal points in his form, making his design completely lucid—in fact, enabling the listener to ask, where to now? before the composer shows the way.

This point wants elaboration, and I intend to write a long article a week from Thursday, after the forthcoming concert of student compositions at Wymilwood.

Christopher Helleiner.

Our Convocation Hall, that pagan stone turtle, is being monopo by the capital "C" Christians this week. So it was rather fitting yesterday, a chariot race should be held on its front steps and a co detonated at intervals to exorcise the demons within. And it was fitting that a barbaric circus in the Roman tradition should take the Hall last Wednesday at lunch hour. Proving, of course, that is the freest of all possible worlds.

The purpose of the Roman carnival on Wednesday was impl Christian: to raise funds for SHARE. But the tone of proceedings decidedly pagan, even including some futile if heartfelt "stoning the Christian element.

The contest was a clash of music vs. school spirit. And the m for SHARE was much more concerned with the side-issue of whic to happen to the Lady Godiva uniforms pilfered previously by opportunists.

So the fact that Victoria's entry won the contest with over collected has very little bearing on musical merit. In fact, while Lady Godiva band was easily popular favorite, in a Hall packed Skulemen, the Music and UC groups played music and received critical ovations.

The Music Faculty offered a 12-man orchestra playing stock arrangements of Ray Anthony and Stan Kenton familiarities. There no great imagination, just good reading. The audience loved them

The UC group mixed Dixieland with modern solos, leader Che on the clarinet shone here. The few minutes of startled silence Smith went into a fluid solo and then the happy applause was the genuine things in the contest. (Smith is gathering a jazz group Convocation Hall jazz concert for SHARE, in the next couple of He led the group that played for AVA and a packed house in West Hall last year.)

So all in all, the contest had all the trimmings without the m dollars of a QUO VADIS spectacle. The humor, of both the MC the Lady Godiva skit, was of typical Skule variety, indicating the interest in sexual deviations. And when a Vic type clambered onto stage clad in a Skule sweater and a rubber Darwinian mask, the S men greeted this heavy insult with sullen silence and then a great th ing of rolled-up lunch paper and Varsities. Then too, the two Scarlet Gold lassies who Charleston-ed with the band showed Christian gen in refusing to dance on the stage, keeping it down to the front aisle

All in all, a great blow for noncomformity.

I have now seen THE RIVER for the second time. And it is inte ing to note that there has been much campus discussion of Re masterful film about adolescence and India.

As far as can be seen, there are two points of consistent criticism. One is that technically, THE RIVER is disappointing, comes from purists of the Film Society and their kind, and they Renoir has let them down in cutting, camera use, etc.

To these purists, I have no answer except that THE RIVER is imaginative and satisfying than practically all the stuff we get the usual film factories.

The other point is a more important one. The film is beautiful it lacks a plot, the plot is unsatisfactory, or the plot is unimpo Quite a few say this. I disagree entirely with this view. To me, RIVER's greatest achievement is the subtle and sensitive study change in the three girls from girlhood to womanhood with attendant joys and pains. In the very personal experiences of Valeri and Melanie is shown the terrible life-and-death quali adolescent experience.

Projected against the constant and permanent river, which life and takes death, what happens to the girls shows the proc dynamic life in its very indefiniteness. This change, augmented sudden seemingly meaningless death of the boy Bogie and the of a new sister for Harriet, is the story of THE RIVER, where "th ends, the end begins."

Offer Film, Exhibition On Soviet Friendship

Mr. Dyson Carter, writer and scientist will be guest speaker at the opening of the Canadian-Soviet Friendship Society National Convention, Friday, Jan. 25 at 8:15 p.m. at Bathurst Street United Church.

Mrs. D. Nielsen, Executive-Secretary of the Society said that Mr. Carter, author of such books as "Sin and Science" and "Russia's Secret Weapon" would speak about the activities of the Society, the question of Canadian-Soviet Friendship. "The Childhood of Maxim Gorki", a Soviet film with English subtitles will be shown Friday evening.

Mrs. Nielsen said that because of the recent question about the Russian student exchange it was felt that University of Toronto students would be interested in the activities of the Society and an ad appeared in yesterday's Varsity as well as in the downtown papers.

Saturday afternoon and evening and Sunday morning there will be an Exhibition of Soviet Life at 83 Christie Street. Films and photographs will be shown and paintings and books will be on exhibit.

3½ Quartets Hart House Contestants

There have been three and a half entries to date in the Hart House Quartets Contest, said Dave Gardner, Assistant Warden, yesterday. The half entry is coming from McMaster University in Hamilton where there is a very active quartet spirit. Since entries must be members of Hart House, however, the McMaster entry is ineligible to compete, but will be present as guest performers.

Entries have already been received from the Floor Polishers, the Four Artsmen, and the Four Minims. It is hoped that there will also be entries from Meds and Skule.

The quartet that Gardner would like to see is one that Hart House officials have dubbed the "Mystery Quartet." Down in the corridor of Hart House where the barber shop is, there has been a quartet practising at noon hours. They are not regulars, but no one seems to know who they are. Gardner has been down several times to see them, but they have always just left, or have not yet arrived. Their favorite selection seems to be "Margie."

This is the third year for the contest, originated by Gerry Hart and Charles McCurdy. It is spinsored by the House Committee in Hart House.

Entry forms for the contest will be available at the Warden's office until January 25. Eliminations will take place at sing-songs in Hart House on Tuesday and Friday, between 1:30 and 2:00, beginning the week of January 29. The two finalists will appear at the Vic At-Home on February eighth to determine the winner.

Real Feeling Not Ceremony True Christianity—Milford

In the last major speech of the Christian Mission Canon Milford last night urged that the students of the University study Christianity as they study their other subjects. "You must be willing to read a few books", he added, but no more than you would for anything else.

Many people are content with a very infantile concention of religion, Canon Milford said. He continued that their religious knowledge consists of half remembered stories and pictures of "a bearded grandad in the sky."

Comparing human beings to a symbolic Jacob's Ladder, Canon Milford said that we are related to both earth and heaven. Christianity is the connecting link, he added, between the eternal and time, between God and earth.

Prayer provides the reciprocal movement on this ladder, Canon Milford explained. Liturgical worship in the Church is general and timeless whereby we go through the motions of loving God and man, he said, and it is often unreal.

Canon Milford charged the student with exploding the airy words and pretentious substitutes for reality, which obstruct the connection between God and Man. He was referring to the various "'isms" saying such theories and generalities are not real, but constitute an "occupational hazard" for theological students.

It is an atheistic approach to regard your university studies as having no intrinsic interest, he continued. This insults both the subject of God.

"A competent, well-trained, accurate mind will help us lay hold on the real world for Him' ", Canon Milford said.

We must accept the "here and now" as given by God, Canon Milford asserted. The love of God is a concrete "particular"; it is life and it is eternal, he added.

"The Christian lives to glorify God thus helping him to realize that he is the heir to Eternal life," he said. He explained that there is no need for favorable circumstances.

Part of the acceptance demanded by God is an acceptance of your own limitations, Canon Milford said. The human race is neither omniscient, omnipotent nor eternal, he continued. He illustrated this by saying that in the next ice-age although there may always be an England it can well be imagined somewhere under the ice. The Biblical text "My word shall not pass away", stands in marked contrast he said.

He pointed out that the imminence of eternity stressed in the New Testament, and said that Paul planned for this eternity not for the future.

McCullough Tells Of Egypt Tension

"Nobody has the right to abrogate the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty (of 1936)", declared Oriental Languages Professor W. S. McCullough of UC, speaking on "The Explosive Situation in the Middle East" before the United Nations Club at Wymilwood yesterday.

This treaty states that Britain has a right to station forces in the Suez Canal Zone in co-operation iwth the Egyptian armed forces to insure shipping, he said, adding that it also provides for revision in twenty years.

By adopting Iranian methods, the Egyptian government thought they might get the British out, Prof. McCullough claimed. "The breakdown in friendly relations between the two countries is most serious," he stressed.

He explained that Britain declared Egypt a sovereign nation in 1922. This caused much resentment in nationalistic circles; groups who thought they had the right to make the declaration. The treaty was only signed because Egyptians feared Mussolini's military advances in Africa, Prof. McCullough said.

Egypt is a narrow ribbon of water and humanity "with rather limited resources", he said, continuing that while landowners and merchants are wealthy and have a fairly good education, the bulk of the population lives in filthy mud huts amidst ignorance and poverty. "Islam's code of morality is very high, but it never inspired conscience for civil or social reforms," he concluded.

Blues Vs. McGill At Arena To-nite

Local hockey fans will get their first real look at the Blues tonight in the game against McGill, which commences at 8.15 p.m. and inaugurates Varsity's home season. The Varsity team went through a light drill last night in preparation for tonight's encounter and seem to be in good shape.

Goalie Jack Ross suffered a facial injury during shooting practice when he attempted to stop a high flying puck and it caught him on the head. However the steady playing netminder will line up in goal tonight for the Blues against the Redmen. Paul Prendergast has been moved up temporarily to a forward position along side of Jerry Henderson and Al Conboy. There is still a possibility that Jim Wilkes might play also. By playing two previous games with the Blues he has become ineligible for intermediate competition.

This season the intercollegiate league seems stronger all round with all the teams more evenly matched than last year. The calibre of college hockey which has produced exciting action in the past should be even better this season. Besides many of the regular Blues who are holdovers from last year's team this year's edition boasts an unusually large number of former Junior A and Senior competitors. It is only natural that players such as Jack MacKenzie, Don Rope, Jack Wheldrake and Red Stephen will add much prestige and class to the league.

To-night's Line ups...

Two intramural hockey games took place yesterday. Forestry B defeated St. Mike's C by a score of 5-0, in a penalty-studded game. Wadell was the high scorer for Forestry with two goals, while Nelson, Earle and Tomkins each dented the twine once. Wadell also collected two 2-minute penalties while Trainer from St. Mike's collected three. In the other game, Sr. Vic edged out St. Mike's by a score of 2-1. Littlejohn and Cougham sank the counters for Vic while Godin scored for St. Mike's.

In the Major league basketball games SPS IV swamped Trinity B by a score of 39-19. McCann and Woiczorek were the high scorers for Skule with 7 and 6 respectively. Fisher from Trinity was the high scorer of the game with 9 points. In another contest Law A defeated Forestry B, 33-14. The best players for Law were J. Torrance and B. McDonald, with 14 and 9 points.

In the minor league contests, UC Emm Pees completely routed Viv IX by a score of 65-5. For UC, Rostoker scored 16 points and Cooper 15. Vic Smoothies defeated Pre-Meds IIB by 34 to 21. Pridham from Vic topped the scoring with 14 points while Shatz from Meds led his team with 8.

Forestry A water polo team came from behind a 1-0 half-time deficit to defeat UC III by a score of 2-1. Jim Catto, UC, opened the scoring, while J. Scott and D. Bell scored for Forestry. Vic B defeated Forestry B by a decisive 4-0 score. Al Lavis scored three times and Don Mason added another one.

SPS IV walloped Trinity B in a one-sided game. The Skulemen were only ahead 10-9 at the end of the first period, but they won 39-19. Top scorer in the game was Trinity's Stew Fisher who scored 9. Tom McCann with 7, Stan Wiezorek with 6, and Bruno Lepora with 4 sparked the Skulemen. In the last quarter the winners outscored the Buttery Boys 20-9 and turned the game into a rout.

Sportswoman

HOCKEY

PHE1's trounced Vic I's 5-1 in a decisive hockey game at noon-hour yesterday. Both teams played well but Phys-Ed managed to keep ahead throughout the play.

June Plant and Barb McNab vied for top scoring honours for PHE with two apiece. Anne Sharpe also climaxed an outstanding performance with a goal ably assisted by Frances Wood.

The second period saw Vic's lone goal shot by Eva Hutcheson. Further attempts at scoring were blocked by stellar defencework by PHE, as that team out-played, outshot and out-scored their opposition. Barb Weatherhead, however, played an excellent game for the losers.

VOLLEYBALL

Nurses scored a decisive victory last night as they trounced St. Mike's 47-27. Both teams settled down to a steady routine in the first half which was non-rotation. Here the Nurses showed that they were a well organized crew, all working together and the results of their efforts were shown by the score which was 21-16 at half time.

During the rotation second half, the Nurses exploded for 26 points. They showed their ability to play any and all positions whereas St. Mike's seemed to be a little confused at times. For Nurses, the front line of Reycroft, Flint and Thompson excelled in their spiking efforts and serves, and Helen Blot was a great asset to the team in setting up serves. For St. Mike's, Janet Fraser and Mary Mahon both played an excellent all-round game, but their combined efforts were not enough for the rampaging Nurses.

The U.C.-Phys-Ed. game was cancelled because of a skiing expedition, taken by the Phys-Ed. gals.

Swimming Competition Deadline

A girls' swimming meet has been arranged for the March 1st Athletic Night when the young femmes will give an exhibition of synchronized swimming. Applications for competition are to be made at the Lillian Massey gym and may be picked up from college bulletin boards.

The deadline for entries has been set for 1 o'clock next Tuesday with the teams being picked on Wednesday. It is hoped (by the male population) that all faculties and colleges will enter an aggregation of Esther Williamses.

Blues Head For McGill On To Queen's Saturday

The Senior Basketball team left yesterday for Montreal for a two-game road trip which will open the Blues' portion of the Intercollegiate Basketball schedule. The team plays McGill tonight, and goes on to Kingston Saturday to play Queen's. McGill has played one league game already, which they lost to McMaster. Queen's game with the Blues will be their league opener.

The Blue line-up will present a large number of changes from the way it was a month ago. Bud Natanson is gone, and Art Binnington has quit because he found playing basketball every night made him too tired to study. That leaves Ray Monnot and Lou Lukenda as the tall man to play the "in" position. Bill Corcoran has been brought up from the Junior Varsity to replace Binnington. Corcoran, 6' 3" in height and about 190 pounds, is tall enough and rugged enough, though his shooting needs polishing up before he becomes another Natanson. He was nearly always good for at least 20 points a game in high school last year, when he played the bucket position for UTS. The previous year, he and Don Fawcett were a hot combination with the same team. His elevation to the Blues restores the combination on a somewhat higher level.

Ed Brennan will not be available for the McGill game, as he is occupied with a function at St. Mike's Friday night, but will join the team at Queen's Saturday. Besides Lukenda and Monnot, the first line against McGill will probably be made up of Bill Huycke, Ed Maynerick, and Gary Glover, Brennan taking over from Glover on Saturday. Bill Wilson will play the other "in" position in all probability, and Don Fawcett and Steve Oneschuk will play "out".

Pick Ski Team This Weekend At Collingwood

This coming week-end the Varsity Ski Team is heading for the Osler Bluffs Ski Club near Collingwood for the Southern Ontario Ski Zone Championships. The results of these races are expected to play a major part in determining who will represent Varsity in this year's competitions.

There are about a dozen men still in the running for the six positions on the team. Even last year's team members are not assured of their positions, although Hal Golding and Per Berg-Johannsen of the 1951 team look like sure bets to repeat again this season.

Coach Bill Beck has inferred that he will not disclose the composition of the team until the week before the Canadian Intercollegiate Championship meet at St. Sauveur on February 8th, and 9th. The week following this the team will be competing in the McGill Winter Carnival races also held at St. Sauveur.

With the races being held this week-end at Collingwood the University Cabin has been reserved exclusively for the use of the race entrants. This will assure them of a good night's sleep so they will be well rested for the competition. Also it will keep secret the formula of the waxes brewing on the stove overnight.

Suzanne Morrow Wins Abroad

Suzanne Morrow, the University's sole entry in the 1952 winter Olympics, won the women's figure skating championship at the Garmisch winter carnival at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany. Suzanne has been in Europe for a little less than a month preparing for the Olympic trials the first of next month.

A first-year Vic girl who graduated from Lawrence Park Collegiate in Toronto. Suzanne placed second in the 1951 North American Championships at Calgary. First place went to Sonja Klopfer of New York.

Osgoode Hall Nips Intermeds

Osgoode Hall clipped the Intermediates 5-4 last night in an exhibition hockey game played at Varsity Arena. The lawyers spotted the J.V.'s a two goal lead in the last period to come from behind with three goals.

The Osgoode team was led principally by two former Blues, Gord Ecclestone and Don Winslow. Most of the remaining players are former inter-faculty players.

Ross Holden, a freshman from U.T.S., again led the Baby Blues with a two goal effort. Singles were added from the sticks of Tovey and Bodnar. Bates and Hadlow shared the net-minding duties.

Wrestling At Central

The Varsity wrestlers take part in the mid-season Toronto City Championships today and tomorrow, at Central Y. The programs are to be held in the evening both nights.

Nearly all the wrestlers will be entering the tournament. Arthur Zutis (123), Walt Pitman (130), Orie Loucks, Bill Bush, and Dan Cucin (157), Jim Berard (147), Phil Henderson, Bill Chykaluk and Leon Smith (177), Larry Skitch and Doug Hamilton (191), and Harry Robinson and Ernie Dryden (Heavyweight) will be among the Blue wrestlers. Tom Hatashita, who put up the best fight in the bouts with Ithaca, before having to stop due to a nose injury, will be a notable absentee. His proboscis has not yet healed sufficiently for him to wrestle. Joe Goldenberg will also be absent, due to the Arts Ball.

DR. NIEBUHR

Married Missioner

Toronto's respectability and conservatism certainly do not come from any English tradition or influence. Scots and Irish. Quite Scots and Irish. English people are rather more decadent, Dr. Ursula Neibuhr was saying in her broad natural English accent.

Visiting the campus to take part in the University Christian Mission, Dr. Neibuhr is an Associate Professor of Religion at New York's Barnard College, the women's undergraduate branch of Columbia University. She teaches the Old and New Testament with emphasis on the biblical origin of the various concepts we accept today.

Dr. Neibuhr was one of the few women in the history of Oxford to graduate with a first in theology. "But when I got that far I was faced with a problem," she said.

"There isn't much of a place for women in the church. You can be a church worker or maybe a deaconess," Dr. Neibuhr said. "But to be a deaconess would apparently have meant remaining single. I was not sure whether there was much sense in that. I don't see why a woman cannot marry and still serve God. After all He made us to serve Him and each other," she continued.

After leaving Oxford, she was given a travelling Fellowship and came to New York, where she met Dr. Reinhold Neibuhr, who was teaching at the Union Theological Seminary there. They were married in 1931 and have two children.

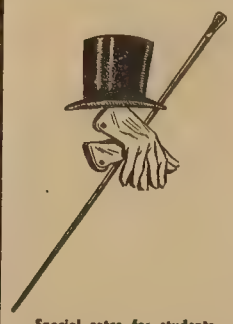
"I really love living in New York." The one greatest heresy among people is to make God in their own image, she said. "But New York with its glorious collection of peoples, races and types suddenly makes one realize the marvellous diversity of mankind and shakes one out of the tendency to want people to conform to your own prejudices of what they are like," Dr. Neibuhr said.

But what a glorious, yet proper thing, New York is—the racial and religious conglomeration, the tremendous interpretation of types and kinds, she said; being English you might say that New York makes me feel like I have been freed a little from that sin of particularity.

Dr. Neibuhr said that she finds fascinating to teach the different kinds of people that Columbia attracts. She is particularly interested in the biblical doctrine of creation to culture and patterns of life.

She emphasized the need for Christians to adopt a critical yet constructive attitude to politics. The Bible is concerned with man, the individual and how he faces society, its forms and pressures, she said. It stressed the importance of the community and yet looks at the community from the view of how much it reflects the justice of the Kingdom of God, she said.

Both Dr. Neibuhr and her husband take an active interest in politics and labor problems. "It is no good just to be critical," she said.



"I know how people consider America as the lusty giant, or overgrown child that makes them rather fearful of the capability of wielding its tremendous power in the world today. It is quite true that America is an enormous and in a sense, inflammable country. But it is hardly surprising considering different kinds of people and temperaments, with everyone reacting differently to different situations."

But the country has gone a long way, she said, from isolationism to a sense of its present international responsibility. The biggest issue in the coming election is how far domestic policy can be geared to foreign policy. We know, for example, how Eisenhower stands on foreign policy but he has never commited himself on domestic issues, she said.

Dr. Neibhur said that she finds having a full-time job enormously interesting, although complicating in relation to her home life. But even for mothers who do not work there is no perfect time for the children to have the measles. It is good for the children not to have a mother brooding over them as they grow up. But a good husband of course helps and "my husband is very good." Besides, she said, I am a great believer in individualism.

No Surprise

Finally, the open secret has become a straight fact. No longer need anyone discuss whether or not Canada should have a native born Governor-General, knowing full well that Ottawa was on the brink of appointing one.

Nor was the Government's (more euphemistically the King in-council's) choice a surprising one. The Right Honourable Vincent Massey is certainly primus inter pares as far as "candidates" for this very high office are concerned.

His long and distinguished career, both as an educator and a diplomat, has fitted him well for a position of such high honour. And, save for one ill-fated endeavour, he has taken no part in the open arena of practical politics.

Through his book "On Being A Canadian" and his chairmanship of the Royal Commission on the Arts, Letters and Sciences, he has divested himself of political attachment and earned the designation of "Canadian".

While the nationalism which decrees that Canada should bestow its highest honour on a native son is fraught with political dangers, the present choice is unquestionably justifiable.

Undoubtedly, the new Governor-General was in some sense a political choice. Yet, neither Conservatives nor the CCF could seriously question the integrity of the man. For the Right Honourable Vincent Massey has managed to stand outside the political battles of the day.

In the future, however, it may be difficult to handle the appointment of Governor-General as apolitically, or at least as satisfactorily, as has been managed in the present instance. Indeed, the Governor-Generalship might even become the prize of the outgoing Prime Minister—the award of his grateful party.

There are very few possibilities for Governor-Generalship aside from the straight political appointments.

There are very few Vincent Masseys.

Comment

Chariot racing can once again be classified as a sport at the University of Toronto, if yesterday's race is taken as a new precedent. Non-Skule entries were allowed to run (although Meds were discouraged). Unfortunately, few colleges and faculties benefited from the opportunity. They were either scared or apathetic cats, we suppose. Next yera, however, we should be able to hope for both race and entries. . . . Tonight's Brading Trophy Debate is a splendid instance of international relations on a student level. The whole tour has provided a unique opportunity for Scots and Canadians to meet each other both in formal and informal gatherings. Perhaps it takes the money and organization of a brewery to accomplish such exchanges. Maybe NFCUS and the Russian question should simply be handed over to O'Keefe's for ~~ossification~~.

Proof of God

Editor, The Varsity:

I read with some enjoyment Larry Darrell's article, "The Lost Sheep".

Larry raised a number of interesting questions, all of which can be answered and, which is important, in a manner I should think acceptable to Larry.

In particular, he demands as follows: "If God is, let the Chritsians present the proof, if there be any proof." I select this because it seems most important, though I'd rather tlak about Hell.

You might say that I stick my neck out considerably in promising to prove to Larry the existence of God. But I don't think so. If God is, as I claim, the ruling force in our world, there should be no difficulty in proving it.

We'll begin this proof with a little bit of simplification. There is God, Jesus Christ, Canon Milford, organized religion, a period of thirty-four years, two thousand years ago, and the month of January 1952. We throw out of the argument Jesus Christ, Canon Milford, organized religion, and a period of thirty-four years, two thousand years ago, retaining for our own use simply God and the month of January, 1952.

The problem then is, quite simply, to prove the existence of God in January, 1952.

Now Larry is no fool. He is reading intently by this time and expostulating to himself in naughty words.

O.K. Larry, leave us go looking for God.

And what, or whom shall we seek? Shall we seek for a man? But God is not a man. Shall we seek for a thing? But God is not a thing. Then for what shall we seek?

We have arrived at a critical point namely the definition of God.

I proceed to this definition. At every moment of passing time in the month of January, 1952, men are making decisions, as men have always made them and as men will make them until the world falls away. Now these decisions arise from different causes, as hunger, thirst, the biological urge, and so on, arising from the organs and nerve centres of the body. Such urges as a beast might know.

But there are other decisions which arise not from the flesh. As a man might put his hand into the fire, saying, "I do this for my friend". These decisions constitute God. And the man becomes God for the time.

Therefore, if Larry seeks God, he may find Him, unexpectedly, in himself and in his friends.

As a case in point, I recall the story of Corporal Joe. The corporal had led his section across a field which was being shelled quite venemously. One of his men being wounded, the corporal went back for him and was himself killed. I think of the corporal walking upright amid the white flames of the exploding shells and I say that God walked again among us.

God Again Proved

Eritor, The Varsity:

As a Christian I appreciated the front-page publicity that The Varsity gave on Monday to the Christian mission. I wonder whether you published Larry Darrell's article on Tuesday to show the irrationality of the type of agnostic who is so articulate in the University, or at least in The Varsity.

Mr. Darrell asks, "Who is God?" It is a most pertinent question, but Mr. Darrell's answer that "God is the given quantity in the question" is inconsequent and unintelligible. God is the explanation of the physical order that we see in the universe and of the ideals of moral order that we find in our own minds. Mr. Darrell asks further, "Would God create a world like this?" In return I ask him if God did not create the world, how did it come into existence? Newman one said, "This most elegant system of suns, planets, and comets could only arise from the purpose and sovereignty of an intelligent and mighty being."

Perhaps Mr. Darrell's question refers not to the physical universe but to mankind and to the errors and crimes for which men are responsible. If so the relevant question is, "Would God create a being like Man". The fact remains that Man does exist and owes his existence, if not to creation, to the rather less credible alternative of some unaccountable chance.

Mr. Darrell's objection to God and the soul is that he has never seen them. This would be serious if the only acceptable evidence for everything were ocular evidence. But men born blind attain a lot of knowledge. And human beings have other faculties of knowledge besides the five senses. Many animals have keener senses than man, but even agnostics believe human knowledge to be superior to animal knowledge. By his question "Would God create a world like this?", Mr. Darrell appeals to our judgment of values. How can values be known by the five senses? His own question implies knowledge that is not sense knowledge. He is asking for the reason for things which means the cause and purpose of things. The Christian answer is that God is the cause and purpose of things. What is the agnostic answer?

Stephen Sommerville,
St. Mike's

Ashamed Agnostic

Editor, The Varsity:

Because of profound indolence and mincing sense of decorum and good taste, I am not given to the writing of vociferous letters to newspapers. However I was shocked from my decadent lethargy by the heterogeneous character of the material presented on the last page of Tuesday's Varsity. The cartoon was funny and as a consequence beyound criticism. The editorial was, I thought, slightly suspect but innocuous due to the ambiguity of its blundering innuendos. The letter by one Mr. Darrell I found offensive in the extreme.

I am not a Christian; neither have I the courage to be a respectable atheist. I am with Mr. Darrell an agnostic. But I am not proud of this lamentable fact. Agnosticism is the position of a coward, of the man temperamentally too weak, in the face of the inscrutable mystery of life, suffering, and death, to make the crucial leap into absolute faith or else utter faithlessness and then be consistent according to his commitment.

Moreover let the pitiable weak ones listen with respect to him ment, be he Canon Milford or Bertrand Russell. It is the tone of smugness in Mr. Darrell's letter even more than its execrable literacy style that I found so revolting. Somehow I personally felt deeply ashamed upon reading it. I cannot exactly discover why and I am afraid to make too great an effort for fear I might . . .

Away With Wool

Editor, The Varsity:

In a rapid attempt to put an end to the "wool-gatherers" and the "anti-wool-gatherers" who have dominated your columns with pointless trash lately I would like to make the following comments:

a) The Middle East with whom many of us seem to be concerned needs many more doers now than they do High Lifers

b) Our country and the USA need more High Lifers than they do doers.

In short, there is a place for the doer and for the High Lifer and for all those that fall into the infinity of categories between the suggested extremes. Let us therefore make sure that our education system produces both—and let us in Arts and Science or Meds not indulge in "other-faculty-baiting."

Bob McLellan, McGill goalie, looks over his shoulder in time to see the Varsity's first goal being scored in the first period of Friday night's hockey game. Gerry Henderson, who scored it, is going around the back of the net. Jim Wilkes, who passed it to Henderson, stops short in front of McLellan, McGill defenceman Don Robertson (3) is at Wilke's back, and the other defenceman, McGowan, watches from the far side.

Repeat Voided Vic Vote

Victoria College will have another election to choose next year's women's SAC representative this Friday. President John Devereux of the Victoria College Union called for a new election Friday night after discovering irregularities in the voting for the women's representative.

Associate president Barb Taylor of the VCU said last night that the ballot boxes had been closed but not locked at the opening of the polling booths. Later the boxes were seen open by a Varsity reporter but scrutineers were present. Miss Taylor said the election was cancelled because some persons had access to the ballots.

Devereaux cancelled the election without counting the ballots.

Three co-eds from Vic are standing for election this Friday: Marg Kell, Anne Weldon, and Audrey McKim. Doug Melhuish III Vic, was unanimously elected as men's rep on the SAC.

RUSS VISIT TOTAL

Ottawa (CUP) — The proposed visit to Canada of fifteen Russian students was approved last week by Carleton College students.

To date, students of thirteen Canadian universities have supported the Russian visit and three campi have rejected it.

Lectures, High Schools Cause Failures – Smith

Poor lecturers and inadequate secondary school training are two reasons President Sidney Smith sees for an "alarming failure rate" in the first year of some courses. The president laid those charges in his annual report, released over the weekend.

He pointed particularly to a 65 percent failure rate on a "simple examination" in English, given to all Pass Arts students taking that subject. The test was designed to test the student's knowledge of punctuation, the range of his vocabulary, and his ability to summarize a piece of expository prose.

"The results were, in the highest degree, alarming", the report adds.

This indicates that the training in English given by the high schools is no longer adequate equipment for work in the university, the President charges, and adds "it appears to be incumbent on the university to make sure that illiteracy no longer dwells in easy partnership with the possession of a degree."

In another part of his report, the President also suggested that teaching methods may have some bearing on failure rates.

"Independent thinking and intellectual power cannot be developed by a droning dictation of lecture notes, sometimes unrevised from year to year or from decade to decade, to be slavishly copied in students' notebooks", he said.

The student who depends solely on such notes will be at a loss to answer exam questions that involve a different approach or broader consideration, the report continues. "And rightly so", it adds, "the mere repetition of the undigested ideas of others ought not to earn a passing mark."

In his report, Dr. Smith quotes Professor Galbraith (of Oxford), who once remarked that a lecturer must be "en rapport" with his audience, and this can be done only by impromptu lectures—the more impromptu the better. "In my opinion", the quotation continues, "the most universal custom of 'giving' lectures prepared months before in note-books has done more than anything else to shake the faith of the young in learning."

Concluding this section, Dr. Smith suggests a frank self-analysis and self-appraisal by faculty members, which might be followed by general discussion within teaching divisions on how to improve the instruction.

The President also reports that admission requirements have been raised in several courses, with the idea of stressing "quality, rather than quantity."

"We have neither room nor time for those who lack the mental and moral capacity for the sustained, self-disciplined effort that a university course demands", he says, and adds: "It is no kindness to admit to a university young men and women who are not equipped by nature and prepared by schooling for advanced study."

I ask seriously whether the criteria for admission should not include something more than examination records, he concludes.

Slavic Studies

Royal Teacher

By ADELE KREHM

"White Russian" must not be taken literally. It is only another name for the language Byelorussian, which is spoken by the people around the city of Minsk. The only course in this language offered on the whole North American continent is given at the University of Toronto by the School of Slavic Studies.

Although Russian has been taught since 1947, the department was formally established in 1949 with a grant of $100,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation. Since it was organized, the department has always been located at 67 St. George Street, often on different floors, but now it is moving to its new permanent quarters in the new Baldwin House.

Only Russian is taught to the undergraduate students but in the graduate courses proceeding to an M.A., other Slavic languages such as Ukrainian, Polish, Old Bulgarian, Czech and Serbian are taught. This year there are five graduate and sixty undergraduate students registered in the School.

Probably the only member of the teaching staff at the University of Toronto with Royal blood may be found on the faculty of the School of Slavic Studies. G. N. Koulikovsky, a nephew of Czar Nicholas II of Russia, specializes in teaching conversational Russian.

The School of Slavic Studies is now planning a series of three public lectures on a theme to commemorate the death of Nicholas Gogal, a Ukrainian-Russian writer. Gogal was of Ukrainian origin but wrote in Russian, and Ukrainians and Russian alike claim him as their own.

The first lecture in the series will be held on February 1 when the guest speaker will be the head of the Department of Slavic Studies at Columbia University, E. J. Simmons.

The University of Toronto is not the only University in Canada to have such a department. Universities in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ottawa and Montreal all have organized departments of Slavic Studies.

President Sydney Wax of the Students' Administrative Council gave his pint of blood at the Red Cross Blood Donors Clinic in the old Sick Children's Hospital before flying down to a student conference in Rio De Janeiro. The Blood Donor Compaign on the campus starts today, and the SAC is holding a campaign for the bloodiest faculty. Any blood given is kept in one of the army hospitals for 21 days and if not used by then is made into plasma for the troops in Korea.

Must Find New Solutions In Asia — Owen Lattimore

The more mutual assistance projects and exchanges on the student level between this country and South East Asia the better, Owen Lattimore, Director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Affairs at John Hopkins University in Baltimore, said in an interview yesterday.

He commended the efforts of Canadian university students for their efforts along these lines.

Lattimore is in Toronto to make an address at Holy Blossom Temple tonight on "the Roots of Conflict in Asia."

He added that it was particularly desirable for students in South-East Asian countries to come to study in North America so that they might become better acquainted with our point of view. "However," he said, "we assume that the best thing is to just have students from that area study here. But students from North America should make every effort to visit South-East Asia," he said. "It is the best way of giving them the assurance that they are not carrying their own torch alone."

Schooled in England, Lattimore lived in China from the time he was 19 until he returned to the United States to take up his present post in 1938. He gained his extensive knowledge of the country first hand by travel and study while he conducted an export-import business in Shanghai.

"We are floundering around in a world where old solutions to problems do not work and where new ones have not yet been found," Lattimore said.

In South East Asia the whole order of magnitude has changed, he said. When India first asserted its desire for independence in the massacre of a hundred years ago and China half a century ago in the Boxer Rebellion, it took only a few ten thousands of men to re-establish order, he said.

But in recent years, for example, the Dutch could not set Indonesia right with 250,000 troops, and the French, with about 140,000, have been stalemated for six years against the rebels in Indo-China, he said.

OWEN LATTIMORE

The people in these countries can no longer be pushed around. New methods must be found, he said.

Only by being friendly and dealing with South East Asian countries as equals can we retain their support and friendship, Lattimore continued. He commended the British government for its constructive attitude in India and Pakistan prior to granting them independence. He said that the British had not told the leaders of the former colonies that they would get their freedom IF they had such and such a government, but that they were going to be free and had to prepare for it.

Lattimore also commended the principle of one British oil firm using Indians and Pakistani as managers for their enterprises, in recognition of the new state of affairs.

The newly independent countries in South-East Asia, Lattimore said, are opposed to any organization by foreigners. It is possible to give them aid and help to develop their countries without intimidating them, by negotiating with them as equals and not demanding control for risk involved in investments.

Lattimore said that he could not offer any snap judgments for problems in Asia because of their complicated nature, besides the fact that accurate information is not as readily available from that area.

There is no real satisfactory solution for most of the problems in Asia, he said. We are in for a long period of uncertainty and makeshift solutions provided that someone does not pull a trigger.

"We must be careful not to patronize the leaders of South-East Asian countries. Most of these men know the insides of the west such as few Europeans know about far-eastern countries."

New Movie Venture To Star Western U

London, Ont. —(CUP)— The National Film Board plans to make a feature-length movie on the life of a Canadian university co-ed.

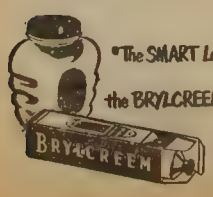
The University of Western Ontario here and three hundred of its students, plus professional actors and actresses will take part in the production.

The NFB, shooting the movie in February, will call on one hundred and fifty UWO couples for a dance scene. Seeking "a typical informal university dance" scene, the Board has already booked a dance band for the occasion.

Following a survey of all Canadian universities, Western's campus was chosen because of its beauty, size, landscaping and buildings.

The film will be made with the sociological point of view to show the therapeutical values of college life—for this particular girl, an aid to conquering an inferiority complex caused by hating a father in an insane asylum. The home background of the heroine will be a small Western Ontario centre.

The NFB plans to show the completed film across Canada this fall.



More than 5,000 square miles of Ontario have been set aside for provincial parks, according to the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests. Largest is Algonquin with 2,741 square miles and the smallest is Rondeau, eight square miles.

Short Success Story

NOT TOO MANY YEARS AGO A YOUNG MAN LABORED, SURVIVED THE GRUELING GRIND AND EARNED A CHERISHED CHEMICAL ENGINEER'S DEGREE. AFTER SEVERAL YEARS HE RECUPERATED, AND IN AN UNGUARDED MOMENT BECAME ENSNARED WITH AN OCCUPATION IN HIS SPECIALIZED FIELD. PURELY BY ACCIDENT, AND AS THE RESULT OF A FRUITLESS CHEMICAL RESEARCH PROBLEM, HE STUMBLED ONTO THE FORMULA FOR BRYLCREEM.... BRYLCREEM THAT'S ALL, BROTHER — BUT-THAT'S ENOUGH..... BRYLCREEM (IN SPITE OF A NAME AS HARD TO PRONOUNCE AS THAT) HAS BECOME THE WORLD'S LARGEST SELLING HAIRDRESSING. IT'S A PERFECT HAIRDRESSING — NO DRYING ALCOHOL — NO STICKINESS, OILINESS OR GREASE, JUST A TRACE OF HE-MAN FRAGRANCE, A WHITE CREAM THAT CONDITIONS THE HAIR AS IT GROOMS. — TRY A TUBE OF BRYLCREEM AND YOU'LL SEE

Pinafore and Trial Return to Toronto

Once again, the Victoria College Music Club is presenting a week of Gilbert and Sullivan in Hart House Theatre, and tomorrow is the opening night. After two years of wandering among the more unusual G. and S. operettas (Ruddigore and The Sorcerer), the club this year returns to the familiar double bill of TRIAL BY JURY and HMS PINAFORE.

Seven performances in all will be given, five evenings and a Saturday matinee. Tickets, available in Alumni Hall, Victoria College, and at Hart House Theatre box office are $1.25 for evenings, and 75c for Saturday matinee.

The productions are under the musical direction of Godfrey Ridout of the Royal Conservatory and the CBC. Stage director will be Geoffrey Hatton, formerly of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, the original producers of the G. and S. operettas.

Rehearsals have been going on for this production twice weekly since early in the fall. Final rehearsals have now taken place, and the show is ready to go on. Scenery, including a complete courtroom and the Pinafore's quarterdeck, has been constructed, and bridesmaids' dresses and naval uniforms fitted.

Good seats are still available for Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoon, John Emerson, publicity director of the Victoria College Music Club announced.

Quartets Vie For Vic Job

"Four more entries have been received in the Hart House Quartets Contest" announced Dave Gardner the assistant warden on Friday. The new entries are the Forestry Four, two Meds groups, and a quartet from Emmanuel College. The entry expected from Skule had not arrived at that time. The newcomers swell the entries to seven and one-half.

The eliminations begin at the regular sing song periods and start to-morrow noon. These will continue until the two finalists are selected for the Vic At Home on February the eighth.

Despite the best efforts of the staff of Hart House and of The Varsity, the Mystery Quartet is still a mystery. The singers who have been entertaining barber shop patrons at noon hour were last heard on Monday. Gardner remarked that he is just as curious as anybody else about the singers.

Pax Specialist Brought Here By SCM Club

"Peace is in our Hands" will be the subject of Mr. Bruce Mickleburgh of the Canadian Peace Congress in the third of the series on "Nature and Attainment of World Peace" sponsored by the Political Commission of the SCM with the support of other interested campus organizations.

Mickleburgh, who will speak in West Hall, UC at 4 p.m. tomorrow, taught and wrote in British Columbia before coming to Toronto to act as Canadian Peace Congress Public Relations Director and Editor of Peace Review. He returned recently from the World Council of Peace in Vienna.

Mickleburgh's address follows similar talks by Mr. R. G. Cavell of the Canadian Colombo Plan Administration and Mrs. Ursula Niebuhr representing the Church. Cavell stressed the need for a "functional" approach to international problems as opposed to an abstractly "philosophical" approach.

The Marshall and Colombo plans, he said, represented good functional approaches. Mrs. Niebuhr emphasized that there could be no peace without justice, that it is meaningless to talk of "peace" when the existence of injustice everywhere implies unceasing warfare.

Dr. Smith On:

Salaries . . .

While, speaking generally, the graduates of 1951 accepted employment with a consciousness that they have much to learn "on the job", yet there may be a latent danger in the large salaries which many of them are getting at the initial stages of their careers.

Naturally a large stipend is welcome to a young graduate, but it may engender a false sense of values. It may cause him to believe that he is fully equipped for life and needs no further study, development, or self-discipline.

In my career . . . I have observed many graduates who on the receipt of a large salary have never moved upward from their first position. The best condition for growth is to be confronted with the challenge to strive, to improve, and to advance.

. . . Graduates should be warned against evaluating the chances that lie before them only in terms of the starting salaries they are offered.

Faculty Participation...

Last year I discussed the proliferation of extra-curricular activities, especially the kind that is not in itself an educational process. I am happy to report that the problem did not bulk so large in 1950-1.

To some extent financial developments have dictated a partial solution. Smaller income from student organization fees has curtailed, and will curtail activities.

. . . Student executives have taken steps to correlate extra-curricular activities and to exchange information.

. . . May not the confusion and irrelevance of many activities grow out of lack of interest on the part of the faculty.

(Quoting a paper presented by Tom Symons, Trinity 5T1, to the National Conference of Canadian Universities): "Abdication by the faculty of a share in student extra-curricular life seems contrary to the fundamental concept of the University as a single community."

I am convinced that students welcome faculty participation and are eager to avail themselves of the advice of those who, besides being more mature, have the asset of permanency.

General Courses . . .

The success of the new course will depend, not only on the number and calibre of the staff and facilities for it, but also on the attitude of the teachers in the Faculty of Arts towards the students enrolled in it.

Will these students be regarded as playing second fiddle to the honor course students, and receive only such personal attention, time, and energy as are left over after the needs of the students in the honor courses are met?

The design of the new course, with its balance of distribution and concentration, should attract and be worthy of first-class students. I would advise many students who now register for honor courses to enroll in the General Course, affording as it does a foundation in three areas—the humanities, the social sciences, and the natural sciences. The specialization to be found in most honor courses is not necessarily the best acedemic diet for all able students.

I crave for the general course the parity of esteem and that attitude and effort on the part of the staff and students that will engender pride in it.

Housing . . .

The first question asked me when I interview men and women for key positions on the staff, in at least five cases out of ten, is "Will I be able to find living accommodation for myself and my family in Toronto?"

In several instances in the past few years we have been unable to engage a first-class man because we could not find for him, or suggest to him a means of finding, adequate accommodation at a cost within his means. The Housing Service of the Students' Administrative Council has been of inestimable value; but the present situation is beyond the scope of the Housing Service and is rapidly becoming worse.

The comment applies particularly to men from the United Kingdom, who are unable by reason of foreign exchange control to bring much capital with them to make the first payment on the purchase of a house.

Hybrids . . .

There are some professional teachers who do not dispute the thesis that the humanities are essential to higher education, but who nevertheless demand courses that are tailored to fit the peculiar professional needs of their students.

Praiseworthy attempts to graft a humanist branch on a professional tree have resulted, in some universities, in such hybrid growths as Medical English, Engineering German, and Pharmaceutical Latin, and have weakened the offerings of their Arts faculties.

In taking steps towards a greater liberalizing of professional education, we must not do so on the assumption that a student in, for example, Engineering is not capable of assimilating an Arts subject; nor should we assume that the humanistic part of his course is an addition of secondary importance, at which he need not spend much time and in which he must on no account be failed.

Seminars...

The quality of an honor course depends largely on the extent to which instruction is given a personal emphasis in group work and in discussions with individual students.

During the crowded years of the post-war period, the student in the honor course has often been denied this fundamental right. In certain departments, seminar and discussion periods have been assigned to class assistants, or have been dispensed with entirely. We must take steps to restore what is lost.

It is no adequate solution to fall back on junior members of the staff who are just groping their way to some familiarity with their teaching responsibilities. The successful conducting of a seminar or a group discussion is perhaps the ultimate test of teaching ability.

. . . For this reason it is of immediate importance that senior members of the staff should have their lecturing loads lightened in order that they may have time to assume tutorial and seminar responsibilities.

Employment . . .

Sometimes it has been asserted that Canadian universities are graduating more young men and women than can be absorbed in our national economy. I assert on the contrary that Canada is on the eve of greater expansion in every sphere, and that university graduates will be required to match that development.

There were those who viewed with alarm the large enrolment of Canadian universities in the post-war period. Their ominous predictions have not been fulfilled. University graduates in the six years since 1945 have entered an employment market that has absorbed all but a few who are unadaptable to the wide range of vocations.

Fellowships . . .

I hope that any federal scheme for assisting students will embrace scholarships for candidates for higher degrees in the graduate schools of Canadian universities. Canadians are watching their most gifted graduates go to the United States for postgraduate training, because valuable fellowships are available in American universities on a scale unknown in Canada. These young citizens may intend to return to their native land, but associations made during their graduate work may draw them inexorably into American industry, professions and academic life.

. . . We are attempting, through the development and advancement of the School of Graduate Studies, to keep postgraduate students in Canada. . . . The School of Graduate Studies is performing a national service. Measured by international standards of scholarship, our School compares favorably with institutions of the first rank in Great Britain and the United States.

The following facts illustrate the gap that must be closed if we are to keep at home Canadians of fellowship calibre. The 37 members of the Association of American Universities have an average of $100,000 a year for fellowships, and Canadian applicants are welcomed with open arms; whereas our School of Graduate Studies in its best year distributed $23,961 in fellowships.

. . . There is also an urgent need for fellowships to enable graduates from other countries to enrol in Canadian graduate schools. Our campuses would be enriched by the presence of more students from other lands with their various backgrounds, traditions and aspirations.

Departmentalization...

The honor course is characterized by its intensive program in certain disciplines and cognate fields. It encourages a strong departmental emphasis.

For the most part this is healthy, since it leads to the development of departments that provide expert instruction in all branches of the subject.

Yet herein lies also a danger. The department may well develop a sense of splendid isolation, and force the student into an ever-narrowing field.

Or it may develop an equally dangerous, if more subtle, technique of aggrandizement: that of giving specialized instruction that properly belongs in other departments.

. . . A member of the faculty who is unaware of the methods of those who work in cognate fields will be a poor teacher and a second-rate scholar. . . . Yet it would be a serious threat to the body academic if the economist, for instance, were to insist upon teaching his own rarefied version of political economy, history, anthropology, sociology, and psychology.

SCIENCE NOTES

Voids Populi

By JIM ANDERSON

Odor be in England
Now that Airwick's there.

The age in which we live will probably go down in history as the era of odor consciousness. It is obvious to all that the principal threat to human happiness lies not in the clash of ideologies, social insecurity, or possible death from radiation. Rather, it dwells insidiously in household odors, body odors, and (gasp) halitosis.

Seeing with clearer vision than statesmen the true cause for fear, industry has toiled ceaselessly to develop weapons for the banishing of these dread conditions. Progress so far has included substances to be sprayed, sucked, swallowed, gargled, chewed, dropped, brushed, injected, and evaporated. Such a concentrated program should lead us all in wonder to the basis of it all, our sense of smell.

In order to be smelled, a substance must be dispersed in the air in molecular particles which are inhaled. The receptive site for odor perception is about five centimeters square and is situated in a blind pocket of the nasal passages just above the course taken by inspired air. Thus, in order to reach this area particles must be carried upward by eddy currents set up in the air flow. This is accomplished by the socially unacceptable sniff.

The vapor particles in the eddy current reach the olfactory epithelium, a sheet of tall pigmented epithelial cells, and are dissolved in the secretions of the glands of the area. Protruding between the bodies of the lining cells are the fine hair-like fibres of nerve cells which act as end organs for the sense of smell. Since these processes are composed largely of fatty protoplasm, odorous particles that are soluble in oil produce the strongest olfactory sensation.

Adjoining fibres unite to form about twenty olfactory nerves which pass through tiny apertures in the bone, merge into the olfactory tract, and so reach a special site in the brain cortex where the perception of odors occurs. A disease process in this area such as a tumor or abscess may result in loss of the sense of smell or in olfactory hallucinations.

Although in man the sense of smell is less powerful than that of the lower forms, our olfactory acuity is in some instances many thousand times greater than our sense of taste. We still fall short of the male moth who is attracted by the odor of his lady fair at a distance of one mile.

The female of the human species tries to duplicate this procedure through the assistance of synthetic scents. Ah, Evening on the Humber!

Andres Segovia

Once again last Saturday, a Toronto audience had living proof of the guitar's stature as a concert instrument. Andres Segovia played a guitar-recital as self-contained as any piano recital.

The program consisted of three groups, the first including classical guitar and lute music, the second transcriptions of harpsichord and piano pieces, and the last, 20th century guitar music. For encores, Segovia played three Spanish folk tunes, including the little Christmas carol that seems to be a special favorite of his.

It was not only the primitive thrill of sheer virtuosity that made the program attractive. True, Segovia's performance sometimes suggests the acrobat's, but it also gives real satisfaction, and often reveals his profound musical insight.

The amazing and fascinating variety of tone which Segovia manages to get out of the guitar made the very limitations of the instrument into assets. Instead of imperceptible gradations of tone such as are characteristic of the piano, the guitar makes a point of bold contrasts. On Saturday, as on previous occasions, Segovia's playing reminded me of a harpsichord, with its sharply defined registers.

One soon becomes accustomed to the rather harsh technical noises — clicks, squeals, etc., inevitably produced by the instrument. After a while, they merely have the effect of accentuating the percussive quality of the sound, and are accepted like the twang of the harpsichord string or the click of the piano key.

Perhaps the most astounding trick of all was produced in the "Sevillana" by Turina. Twice the guitarist tapped the sound-box of the strument while stopping the strings. The effect was reminiscent of the kettle drum — a thud, but with distinct pitch and overtones.

One seldom hears an audience as quiet as Saturday's. The small, weak-sounding instrument, striving to fill Eaton Auditorium with sound kept them almost holding their breath lest they should drown it out with the slightest noise.

Christopher Hellleiner

Toronto Symphony

The failure of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra last Wednesday night was more in its choice of music than in its performance.

The main work of the evening was the Schumann Third Symphony, which, aside from a few pleasing melodies, has little else to commend it. The rest of the program consisted of Bach, arranged by MacMillan, some Mozart, arranged by Tchaikowsky, some Gretry, arranged by Mottl, and Brahms on a theme of Haydn.

The orchestra's treatment of the Schumann work was on the whole dull and lacking in intensity, without sufficient change of pace, or mood. The last movement caught the lyrical spirit of the work better.

The Tchaikowsky "Mozartiana" suite suffered at times from an over-sentimentalizing, especially in the third movement. The first movement, "Gigue", sounded more like Mozart, with its delicate interplay of the various string choirs.

Only in the Gretry Ballet Suite, a gay, sparkling piece, did the orchestra seem to come alive for the first time during the evening.

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra is a fine orchestra, potentially the best in Canada. Its concert on Wednesday night was, however, more soporiphic than symphonic, proving there is nothing wrong with the orchestra that a good bit of imaginative programming won't cure.

Bernard Papernick

Finnish Fees Force Frosh To Enter Late

Helsinki, Finland (Special) — A survey of all the 9,200 students at Helsinki University has revealed that the average of students is 24 years and nine months. The men at Finland's largest institution of higher learning average 25 years and two months, the survey showed.

Average age for first year students is 21 years and six months. As far as is known this situation is unique in Europe and it is caused by social conduitions including better housing and increased scholarships, the Finnish student paper said. A professor at the university commented, that the average age could be lowered if so many students did not find it necessary to finance their studies from their own earnings, thereby prolonging the age at which they can enter college.

Centennial Concert

Last Saturday, Trinity College presented a Centennial Concert. The first half of the program was designed to present music by composers living either in 1852 or 1952. The potentialities of this scheme were not realized, because either the music or the performance was inferior. Indeed, an otherwise unmemorable evening was saved from oblivion by a performance, in the second half of the program, of Schubert's "Trout" Quintet by four members of the TSO and Leo Barkin.

Of the first half, I find very little good to say. The Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzer opened the proceedings. It seems that no matter what is done to these pieces, something of their spirit remains. The English Madrigal Singers entered into the spirit only occasionally, afraid to commit themselves, most of the time. Pianists John Lynn and John Sidgwick gave straightforward, uninspiring readings.

Lynn then attempted some of the vignettes which comprise Schumann's "Kinderscenen," ending with Traumerei. His idea of how to play them is to compress as much rubato as possible into each bar and wonderfully expressive music will result. All that remains is a straining for effect, and no music. Lynn was later joined by Sidgwick for a performance of six or so ditties by William Walton called Duets for Children. Sidgwick seemed to restore a sense of rhythm to Lynn and together they gave a performance which emphasized the humor in the music.

Meanwhile, Sir Ernest MacMillan's Christmas Carols had been performed by Mary Sidgwick (soprano) and a string trio of members of the TSO. The strings gave sensitive performances, but Miss Sidgwick seemed inadequate. To conclude the first half, the English Madrigal Singers returned to perform Godfrey Rideout's setting of Caedmon's Hymn to the Creator, composed especially for the occasion. By this time, having been bombarded by so much music of diverse characteristics, I found it difficult to penetrate to the essence of this music. However, it was an interesting number, but did not seem remarkable. The performance was comparatively good, but lacked sureness in the women's parts.

The members of the TSO who performed in the Schubert were Hyman Goodman, (violin), Eugene Hudson (viola), Marcus Adeney (cello), and Sydney Wells (bass). Leo Barkin was up to usual excellence, and the others were at all times good. Wells managed to keep his instrument part of the ensemble rather than just letting it rumble along on the bottom as it so often does. However, after so uneventful an evening, one did not bother to analyse this performance, but just sat back to enjoy it.

LEAP YEAR

Winnipeg (CUP)—After a three-year absence, emancipation of "girl" in boy-girl relationships is with us again. It is said that when they were setting up the calendar many hundreds of years ago, they discovered that fickle ole' sun preferred to remain around one day extra every four years. This day naturally had to be accounted for, and in a gesture of unprecedented benevolence, they gave this extra-day very four years to little February, the mite among months.

Being a resourceful type, woman immediately claimed this extra day as her own. Her arguments ran something like this: Man is master of every situation every day of every year. You've got this extra day, and it's just a teensy-weensy iddy-biddy one every four years. Whaddya say, big boy?

And so man gave her February 29 as woman's very own. But man underestimated his foe and, being the resourceful type, woman drove home the thin edge of the wedge she had thus established, and now she has the whole year—officially. Soon they named it "Leap Year," upon discovering that every year in four woman was leaping at the opportunity, and man was leaping out of the way. Historical data, released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, reveals that more of the former have been successful than the latter.

At first man tried to fight against it—after all man is the rational animal. The draughtsmen of the American institution decreed that every fourth year there should be elections for the president of that great republic, hoping that the populace, both male and female, would be so absorbed with this quadriennial three-ring circus, they would forget about leap year. There was also the underlying suggestion that to think of anything but elections every fourth year was un-American.

But even the members of the constitutional congress, those paragons of so many other virtues, underestimated their foe. An eternal orchid for subtlety must go to her who successfully cultivated the idea that it is only consistent for woman to run for man at the same time as man is running for office.

The hand that rocks the cradle is always careful to school her daughter for the time when the younger one must go into the world and find a mate. Consequently, technique after technique is passed down from generation to generation, with slight adaptations to particular environmental conditions. Only the blatant aspect of this purpose is revealed during Leap Year. Actually, woman's aim in life remains fixed all the time.

The late, bewhiskered George Bernard Shaw (a married man himself) warned his brother men in Major Barbara, when he stated: "A man chases a woman until she catches him." Therein lies the key to the whole matter. By playing one man's vanity, by allowing man to think he is the master of the situation, woman leads man into the trap which he springs for himself when he proposes, and she generously accepts. Then he spends the rest of his life blindly recounting how he wooed her.

Coyness and reluctance, with just the right degree of interest, seem to be the main characteristics of the various techniques utilized by woman. Such feminine statements as "You really want little old me to go out with you" should put the would-be bachelor on his guard, but the natural line of reasoning which inevitably follows is: well, I must really be something and here's a girl that appreciates it, at last. He's hooked.

The girl who seems distant and aloof is equally dangerous. To the average man she presents a challenge (that damn vanity again), and in the process of meeting the challenge . . . well, you know the rest.

There is the type who plays a number of her gentlemen friends off against each other until the one she wants finally comes through to keep her away from the rest.

The sneakiest trick of all, however, is utilized during Leap Year itself. This is the habit of running pictures of eligible bachelors on the society pages of the newspapers. This is as much as to say: "Here are your targets, girls." The effect on men is the desired one, for, although openly ridiculing the unfortunates selected by the society editor, they are secretly jealous and set out to show they are just as eligible as the eligibles pictured.

By being on his guard against these mixed subtle and blatant activities, the average male may yet survive 1952. Let this be the clarion call for the preservation of bachelorho . . . oops, there goes a button off our shirt—and we wanted to wear it to the sorority party tonight.

By DAVID PEDDIE

Bert Hutchins, undertaker, Shale City, Colorado, is an all to honest and upright thinking man. But as such he is fond of western culture—"such a pleasant little culture," and in thinking of these things he is led to the conclusion, that if he were a Renaissance man, he would be a success. The Renaissance man must steal, dissemble and take what he wants, ruthlessly and boldly; he must become THE BIGGEST THEIF IN TOWN, and mild little Bert proceeds to become just that. What he wants, he steals—the corpse of the multi-millionaire, John Troybalt, who is actually a far bigger thief than poor Bert. Unfortunately there is a little back-sliding from the Renaissance ideal when the corpse is found to be still "warm as toast". Bert has finally to fall back on the Christian side of western culture—the parable of the talents—in order to achieve the success he wants.

* * * *

Dalton Trumbo's play THE BIGEST THIEF IN TOWN is one of those very rare plays that are genuinely funny about very serious things from euthanasia (mercy killing) to high finance, from bringing up a daughter in inflation in the mortician's trade. It is a farce that can be appreciated by intelligent and, if I may venture the word, sophisticated people. Anyone who finds the play offensive should be given a pass to all Walt Disney shorts and kept out of the way of people who take their enjoyment seriously, or who like serious subjects dished up with careless abandon.

* * * *

The characters who wander through the undertaker's parlour on the night of John Troybalt's passing are all very real and, what is unusual for a farce-comedy, they are not stereoptyped. The Jupiter Theatre have met the situation by having unusually competent actors, who under Roberta Beatty's direction, have presented us with an even rarer phenomenon—a very professional home-grown theatrical production.

This is most noticeable in the fact that the small parts have not been given to small actors—Ruth Springford as the nurse, Miss Tipton, was excellent. She acted the bit-part as if it were a lead. Alex McKee as the corpse, and Niel LeRoy as his advisor and hanger-on Col. Rumley played with precision and effectiveness.

Beth Robinson playing Laurie Hutchins was especially good in the first scene with her father, and Norman Jewison, her young man, did a first-rate job as the determined, self-assured boy, who is so touchy in his relations with the older men.

Of the four older men I thought Ed McNamara the weakest. There was a certain monotony in voice and manner. Editor Horton Paige is more imaginative and less noisy. I must admit though, that I liked his Hallelujas. Sidney Brown, the apothecary Sam Wilkins, was the surest-footed on the stage. All his lines were delivered with the comedian's sense of what to throw away and what to play to the hilt. His revival meeting was farce at its best.

As Dr. Jay Stewart, Gerry Sarracini played carefully and with great strength. Bert's friend and drinking companion, he provided a warmth and the worldly wisdom of a disinterested observer, and was as well a helpfully sane influence.

* * * *

Budd Knapp in the long and difficult part of Bert Hutchins deserves most of the praise. There were fine undertones in the more serious scenes, and all the honesty and thoughtfulness of a quiet small-town tradesman implicit in his most drunken pronouncements. His greatest handicap was that he could not always be heard, and a few of his gags never got past the footlights.

Most likely it is the fault of the play—perhaps the director—but the first act seemed to be underplayed so that the audience never got really interested until the second act when a good case of drunkenness settled in just around the entrance of Sam Wilkins.

* * * *

In conclusion—Miss Beatty has done a very able job, and instilled a proper unity of purpose into the performers that is so essential to good theatre. And Larry McCance's set was in the best taste of Bert Hutchins and to the advantage of the action of the play.

Washington Dismisses 5 Students

St. Louis (Special)— Five students have been dismissed from Washington University following a series of student breakings of campus buildings and offices to get examination data. As a result, the authorities are guarding the exam papers with double vigor, The Nation, undergrad paper reported.

The ring of students gained entry to offices with a master key, but all the locks have been changed following the exposure of the breakins.

At the same time the paper reported that cheating was widespread on the Washington campus following a student survey.

"Discussion in university circles throughout the country indicates that student insecurity over the draft and world conditions has led to a decline and breakdown in student behavior and has increased cheating," Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Chancellor of the University commented.

A few weeks ago Washington University refused to admit a Negro girl to study at the university on the grounds that it did not wish to risk placing itself outside the community, though St. Louis' other college, St. Louis University has removed racial barriers.

Bob McLellan stops a shot from Varsity centre Don Rope (15) while lying on his back. The puck, deflected by McLellan, lies on the ice to the right of the goal. Rope had better luck on a later occasion, when he deked McLellan in the second period after cutting in past defenceman McGowan.

Varsity Boxing Team Lose Meet To Army

Toronto's Boxing Blues had the blues on Saturday as they lost all eight bouts to the Cadets from West Point. Six of the three round bouts went the limit and two of them were second round TKOs. The TKOs were scored by Jim McIrevney who won over Toronto's Howard Greenly in the 175 pound class and by Kalore Crews who beat Toronto's Pete Petcoff in the 156 pound contest.

In the heavyweight class, Mark Wiant did his best but he lost the decision to Frank Hicks of Army. This was the only heavyweight bout.

There were two bouts in the 165-pound weight class. Both of them were very close but they both went to the cadets on decisions. In the first bout Norm Green of Toronto was decisioned by B. J. Hughes of Army. The second bout saw Larry Wade drop one to Kurt Brewer of the Cadets.

Toronto also had losing ways in the lighter weight classes but again the scrappers fought some thrillers before going down by decisions. In the 147-pound tilt Jack Porter won the bout for West Point by downing Roberto Couciero of the Blues. One hundred and thirty-two-pound Jim McGee dropped Mike Riley, one of Varsity's first-year men on the team. At 125 pounds Nick Betz lost out to Paul Driscoll of the Army Cadets.

The Toronto team, accompanied by Coach Tony Canzano, left for West Point on Friday and will arrive home this morning. Their trip marked the first time since before the war that a Toronto boxing team has made a trip south of the border for a dual meet.

On the way back home the boys expected to take a little bit of time to have a look at New York.

Speaking Of Sport

By IRWIN GUTTMAN

Irwin Guttman, formerly Associate Sports Editor of the McGill Daily, covered hockey at McGill for three years. He is now taking post-graduate work at the University of Toronto.

As a tied hockey game leaves us colder than the ice surface it was played on, the only constructive thing we thought Friday's game between McGill and Varsity showed (and very plainly at that) was that as far as hockey is concerned, the CIAU needs, and in fact, must hire its own officials. To elucidate:

Eddie Metham and Jim Primeau, two of the Big Time's best linesmen (Primeau has even refereed in the NHL), attempted to officiate the opener of the 1952 Varsity season. The result was near disaster and complete chaos—the game was never at any point of the contest in control of the officials. Flagrant offences went undetected; those that should never have been called were, and so on, ad nauseam.

This situation, which has become a common observation associated with all Senior Intercollegiate hocked games, must stop before it ruins College hockey.

The reasons for this deteriorating situation are varied and many. But the most important ones are that there are different officials handling different games and that the ones who inevitably make their reappearance are the worst refs from other local leagues. The officials handling U of M-McGill games are a case of the later point, while the former was well represented by last Friday's game. For the Metham-Primeau duo are competent officials — they've proved this in the N.H.L. — but not being used to the style of play in the college loop, and being used to NHL hockey, they let certain infractions go at the beginning of the game, and thus lost control of the game right then and there. This wouldn't be so tragic if they really cared, but as they were not responsible to loop officials, instead of working harder to regain control of the game, they seemed to relax and let the players do exactly what they wanted, when they wanted. They seem to care so little that frequently both referees were behind the play. No more striking reason could be offered to league officials for hiring their own hockey referees.

Dots and Dashes: If the Blue and White Society were still awarding Silver Skate Awards (as they should be) Toronto-born Bob McLellan would undoubtedly have captured one. The McGill netminder saved the game on no less than three occasions in the latter stages of the game.

Varsity McGill Tie Friday's Thriller 3-3 In Overtime Hockey

By BARRY THOMAS

An aggressive McGill hockey team, playing with a never say die attitude, fought an uphill struggle to gain a 3-3 tie wtih Varsity Blues last Friday night at the Arena. It was only in the last minute of regulation time that the Montrealers managed to rack up the tieing marker off the stick of their right winger Whitey Shutz. There was no scoring in the overtime period.

The game was rough and bruising to say the least and several times threatened to break out into open warfare. The Blues who looked sharp early in the game, had scored their three goals in the first two periods before a return goal by McGill in the last minute of the second period.

The Varsity effort certainly wasn't helped by the loss of their rugged defenceman Joe Kane who crashed heavily into the boards in the first period and was carried off the ice with facial cuts and a slight concussion. Approximately 20 stitches were required to close the cuts. The injury had somewhat of a demoralizing effect on the Blues but it was more the fact that the locals seem to tire faster than the Redmen that spelt their downfall.

Al Conboy was also another casualty for the Blues, getting nicked twice in the face and requiring stitches to close the wounds. After Conboy had retired in the last period Coach Bill Wade used only his first two forward lines with the three defencemen. It was during the last period and overtime session that the McGill team, which was at full strength, seemed to be the fresher of the two teams.

All three Varsity forward lines shared in the scoring honours with Jerry Henderson potting the first goal, assists going to Wilkes and Fitzhenry. Don Rope made it 2-0 when he rapped home a pass from Al Fasan. Captain Ernie Frey completed the Blues' scoring by knocking the puck past MacLellan in the McGill nets after a goal mouth scramble.

Gene Robillard, Pete McElheron, and Schutz were the McGill marksmen with the latter getting that all important goal with only 50 seconds of the game left. It was veteran goalie Bob MacLellan in the McGill nets who several times saved the day for the Redmen with sensational saves especially in the overtime session. Down at the other end of the rink, goalie Jack Ross was as equally brilliant for the Blues. In the last and overtime periods when McGill was pressing, he came up with some spectacular stops.

Rink Remarks: Fitzhenry, Fasan and Stephen bore the extra defence duties well after Kane's departure . . . Joe, incidently provided a couple of his famous body-checks before being injured . . . Jim Wilkes brought up form the Intermediates at the last moment seemed right at home in senior company . . . the refereeing at times left much to be desired . . . even though sixteen penalties were meted out there could have been a few more for high-sticking and roughing earlier in the game . . . Varsity had fewer but better chances of scoring in the overtime period . . . Wheldrake especially, went right in on MacLellan only to be out-guessed by the clever netminder . . . the Mackenzie-Frey-Arrowsmith line had the best chances for the Blues with Rope and Wheldrake also turning in good games . . . Red Stephen led a couple of fine rushes from his defence position . . . the McGill defence of Robertson, Appleby, Shaw and McGowan all turned in strong games . . . in the first period one of the McGill players lost an unmentionable in the middle of the ice . . . the referee gingerly removed same to the Redmen bench . . . considering the fact that three of the four Arts' colleges held their formal dances on the same night as the game, the turnout was very good . . . this Friday the local ice palace should be jammed to capacity for the Blues' first home game with the classy league-leading Montreal Carabins.

University of Toronto—Goal, Ross; defense, Fasan, Kane, Fitzhenry, Stephen; forwards, Wheldrake, Adams, Arrowsmith, Frey, Conboy, Wilkes, McKenzie, Rope, Henderson.

Bob Coulter Toronto Delegate To Rules Committee Meeting

Bobby Coulter's appointment as the Toronto delegate to the Intercollegiate Football Rules Commission in Montreal as the Toronto delegate was ratified by the Athletic Directorate at a meeting on January 22. Coulter was formerly coach of the Blues, handing over the reins to Masterson in 1948.

The Directorate tentatively approved an exhibition football match between the Blues and the Sarnia Imperials on September 27th. The Imps frequently play teams with Intercollegiate teams but they have not met a Varsity team since 1949.

The Directorate recommended that the appointment of Senior Intercollegiate football officials be made by the Rugby Advisory Committee, and that this recommendation be forwarded to the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union.

It was also approved that a U of T track team would compete in indoor track meets this spring. It was recommended to the C.I.A.U. that Toronto is in favor of keeping the Intercollegiate track meet on an individual entry basis and not solely a team championship as suggested by the Intercollegiate Standing Committee.

Pitching Sportshoes

Two interfaculty hockey games were played Friday by five o'clock, both of them culminating in losses for SPS entries. Vic walloped SPS III 7-1 in the noon-hour match. Shirer and Angus both put in two goals for Vic, and Sheridan, Kirkwood, and Spencer counted one each. Mumford got the Skulemen's lone goal. Vic went ahead early, had a 5-1 lead at the end of the first period.

Trinity C's beat SPS VII 3-1, in a tight game which was broken open in the second period, after the first had ended in a 1-1 tie. Ryler, Spencer, and Wright scored for Trinity. Taylor scored SPS' singleton.

SPS VI won the noon-hour basketball game, 36-25 over Vic V, Don Ottaway leading the way with 15 points. Deuchars scored 7 for the Skulemen, as did Frank Corner and Laurie Manson for Vic. Vic was ahead 6-5 at the end of the first period, but SPS had a torrid second period and went ahead 20-11.

Dent C's beat UC VI 32-19 later in the day. The game was a tight match till the last period when the taller Dentists started finding the mark. They were ahead 13-11 at the end of the first, and there was no score by either side in the second. Cucin of UC and Opaski of Dents scored 9 each.

In Minor League Basketball, II Electrical defeated PHE C 49-33. Algar scored 16 and Shinteni 12 for the Skule entry, while Don Peart netted 12 for PHE. St. Mike's Fisher defaulted to IV Chemicals in the other game.

Swim Team Wins At Buffalo State

The Intercollegiate swimming team came up with a winning effort in Buffalo on Saturday. They downed the Buffalo State teachers College 49-35. George Stulac, Doug McElroy, and John Bate were the big men for the Blues but Al Haig also gave a good performance. The Blues won seven out of the ten events as they gave a very good account of themselves.

Stulac won the 150 yard individual medley a new event this year and swam on both the winning relay teams; McElroy won the 200 yard back event and also helped cop the 300 yard medley relay; Bate won the 200 yard breast stroke.

In the diving competition Toronto's Hugh Sutherland won first place and Al Roger won third. The Blues also dominated the 200 yard style as Doug Gibson and Al Hodgins placed first and third respectively.

Most of the times were slow as there were no markings in the pool. "However the diving board was made of aluminum and the diving excellent," commented John Stulac. The meet was held at the Buffalo Athletic Club. This weekend the Blues head back to Buffalo and this time they face Buffalo University. The university team scouted the Varsity team at this meet; so the Toronto swimmers will probably find the going pretty rough in their next competition.

Complete Results of the Dual Meet:

300 yard medley relay: Time 3.15.5—1st, McElroy, Bate, Stulac (T).

220 yard free style: Time 2.25.9—1st, Gibson (T); 2nd, Fudella (B); 3rd, Hodgins (T).

50 yard free style: Time 26.2—1st, Keeney (B); 2nd, Haig (T); 3rd, Yacos (B).

150 yard individual medley: Time 1.43.9—Stulac (T); Kissell (B); McElroy (T).

Diving: Sutherland (T); Hartenstein (B); Roger (T).

200 yd. back 2.28.1—McElroy (T); Kissell (B); Langer (T).

100 yd. free style: 56.8—Keeney (B); Fudella (B); Capraru (T).

200 yd. breast: 2.39.0—Bate (T); Massimilla (B); Sciortino (B).

440 yd. free—Schluntz (B); Capraru (T); Hackbourne (T).

400 yd. free relay—1st, Gibson, Haig, Hodgins, Stulac, Toronto.

Wrestlers Fight City Champions

Experiencing a great deal of difficulty with the Olympic rules the Wrestling Blues didn't fare very well in the Toronto mid-season championships over the week-end. The only one to take a championship was Jim Bedard who ended in a three way tie in the 147 pound class. Bedard fought two more bouts than either of the others so he was awarded the title.

Leon Smith placed second in the 191 pound class. He was followed by Larry Skitch who placed third. In the heavy weight class Ernie Dryden grabbed second place losing a decision to the winner.

Bill Bush picked up another second place for the Blues when he came through in the 160½ pound group. Bill Chykaliuk won two out of three bouts in the 174 pound but he was eliminated because of the point score against him. The Varsity team didn't place in the 136½, 125, or 114 pound classes because of a lack of entries.

Under Olympic scoring a wrestler is eliminated when he has five points scored against him. If he loses a bout three points are scored against him. If he wins by a decision one point is scored against him. If he wins a split decision he has two points scored against him. Under these conditions a man who won all three bouts, two split decisions and one unanimous decision would be eliminated.

The Olympic rules also permit holds that are barred in Intercollegiate competition. Orie Loucks was made numb when he had a full nelson applied to him. Under the NCA rules this would be illegal. As many of the wrestlers were completely unfamiliar with been very good experience for them.

Western Top Mac

Western stopped McMaster's winning ways over the weekend as they trimmed the Rams 68-51. Three players shone for the Mustangs as McNichol with 13, Wigle with 12, and Truant with 11 sparked the win. Al Foreman hooped 9 and was best man for the losers.

McMaster had previously beaten both McGill and Queen's on their opening road trip. This was Western's first game of the season. The Mustangs had control for most of the game as they came through with the win.

In the first game the intermediate Colts handed Mac a 35-26 beating to sweep the twin bill.

Sportswoman

UC II and St. Hilda's II matched stride for stride to come to a 2-2 conclusion in a four o'clock hockey match at Varsity Arena Friday. Di Walker got the Red and White off to a good start when she sank a long covered shot, in the first period.

The Trinity team evened the count when Connie Bazos flashed the disc into the net on a breakaway by Sheila Ames, in the last part of the second frame.

The third period saw both teams pull up their socks. The Saints took the lead with Connie Bazos lighting the lamp again. The UC squad fought hard and finally managed to tie up the score when Carol Haddow disentangled her stick from a pile-up in front of the net and scraped the puck into the open corner.

Di Walker and Liz Scroggie shone for UC, while Connie Bazos starred for St. Hilda's. Wendy Wright also played well for Trinity.

No Caballero Yet

By 1960, With Luck

After the unique experience of witnessing the Christian mission and the annual chariot race in the same week has ceased to titillate the undergaduate imagination, we return to the sudden departure of SAC president Syd Wax to the Pan-American conference in Rio de Janeiro.

"You'd think he was Mike Pearson," commented one student, a little awed and considerably astounded. There is, of course, a grain of truth in the comparison, none whatsoever in the equation of the two positions.

For the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) has its foreign affairs, albeit a far cry from those of the Federal Government, and the responsibility for carrying out its policies lies with the University of Toronto. And the chairmanship of the International Affairs Committee is in the hands of Syd Wax

All of which does little to explain the present trip to Rio, following hard upon the Edinburgh conference. And the eternal "why international activities" still remains.

The whole purpose of these seemingly endless conferences with their voluminous reports, their high-sounding phrases, their co-ordinating schemes is action.

Action means relief programs like SHARE, exchange tours like the Russian visit, international scholarships like those offered by ISS to DP students to study in Canadian universities. All such plans have some meaning, even some importance to university students.

The success of any conference can be judged only in terms of the results which it can effect. This means "practical results," the implementation of at least some of its programs, so that students can become aware of some of the international spirit their delegates exude.

Everyone on the campus who has talked to European or Asiatic students is aware of the value of such contacts. It is nothing so condescending as "coming to understand how the other half lives"; rather it is the stimulus and challenge of viewpoints different, possibly more profound, than his own.

In a university like Toronto, where students are drawn from relatively homogeneous backgrounds such challenges to ingrained complacency are invaluable. But this is only one of many programs which international confrences usually embark the ultimate metaphysical explanation.
ing.

From Rio, of course, we can expect nothing so startling as the mass importation of twenty gay caballeros, one for each university member of NFCUS. Rather, the most we can possibly hope for, and this is rosy optimism, is the formation of a Pan-American national student union. Through such a union NFCUS could work to effect relief programs and student exchanges.

The chances of forming such a union have, in the past at least, been slim. Universities with totally different standards, lack of student organization, a smattering of communist splinter groups — rumours as thick as the lower Amazon jungle have been rampant.

The truth is, of course, that no one, not even the delegates, seems to know much about South American universities and, thence, what can be expected from the Rio meeting. However, the formation of any such union seems to fall into the general pattern of regional organization which both the Stockholm and Edinburgh advised, and which NFCUS has been urging.

First we will have to see whether South American countries sport recognizable universities, then whether aside from the Brazilians, they care to be organized.

Maybe by 1960 a caballero or so.

Christianity

Faith Via Mind

The following is the first in a series of articles on the intellectual bases of Christianity, written by Stephen Somerville, III St. Mike's.

Testimony of the interest which the subject of Christianity has for us is apparent by the frequency with which it is discussed in The Varsity, if in no other place. The widest range of views from the frankly irreligious to the warmly Christian is found. The campus was recently host to a Christian Mission which had become for the purpose of telling the students why they should believe in the Christian creed and what such belief means.

The case for Christianity must begin with the reasons for accepting the doctrine of God's existence. There are various lines of reasoning that show there is a God. Sir Isaac Newton, in his "Principia Methematica", epitomized one of them when he wrote: "This most elegant system of suns, planets and comets could only arise from the purpose and sovereignty of an intelligent and mighty being." This proof from design was expressed differently by Francis Bacon with the same result: "I had rather believe all the fables in the Legend, the Talmud and the Alcoran than that this universal frame is without a Mind. And therefore God never wrought miracles to convince atheism because His ordinary works convince it." To attribute the universe to chance is absurd, and to self-causation, impossible.

Another proof, more fundamental, stems from the very idea of causality. Whatever exists must have a sufficient reason for its existence either in itself or in something else. The objects of our experience have their reason for existence in other things; they are the effects of causes as Hart House is the effect of builders and an egg is the effect of a hen. These causes are themselves the effects of other causes and a chain of causes and effects can be traced a way back. No matter how far the goes it requires a beginning; there

Black Pot

Editor, The Varsity:

The United States seems to be the object of growing criticism from Canada, a trend which emerged from obscurity more than a year ago when General MacArthur led his "U.N. policemen" into North Korea. The recent flood evoked by Senator Sheehan's proposal to annex Canada, reminds one of the old and oft-ignored platitudes: "The pot calling the kettle black," and "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam which is in thine own eye?"

Indeed, the level of foreign knowledge among Americans is low, but Canadians can't brag. Certainly we know — or think we know — more about our "great" southern neighbour than they do of us; 'tis natural that we should. Economically, not only do they o'ershadow us, but we depend greatly on them for the position we do hold. From the point of view of population, too — which in these days holds greater political importance than even wealth, and often, than ability — they eclipse us. Furthermore, the chief agents of our "culture": the radio, the paper and literature, acquaint us

Despite all this, we know relatively

Radio Cinch For U of T

Editor, The Varsity:

We have investigated the existing conditions relevant to the building of a Varsity radio station, and have obtained from official sources the following information:

(1) The obtaining of an AM license will likely be little more than a formality.

(2) Provided that the Engineering Department will build the equipment, the costs will be low—trivial by comparison with the fortune recently spent on the stadium—used once a week for two months in the year. Surely an important cultural outlet deserves to be taken as seriously as a football field.

(3) As for personnel requirements, there are 200 members interested in dramatics alone. Need we say more?

The only remaining obstacle is the lack of one room to house a transmitter and studio (a room 30' by 15' would service the purpose well). There must be one vacant lecture room in one of the many colleges on the campus. Or what about the catacombs of Hart House, the stadium press box, the new library extension, residences, etc. We personally think a college is the best bet. Lectures is kept open for The Varsity in any case. If for a all day. As the problem of night caretaking, UC could be arranged to leave one small room vacant newspaper, why not for a radio station? From this standpoint a room in the UC basement would be the most logical choice. So, as we said in our last letter—let those who are interested express themselves.

Legs are back on the front page of The Varsity. These too belong to members of the All-Varsity Revue cast. The Varsity makes no attempt to count them.

A national comedy team at the All-Varsity Revue this year will be broadcast from the stage of Hart House Theatre during the show, announced producer Jim Guthro last night.

Negotiations lasting several weeks with local network officials have finally been completed, he said, but because the show is sponsored, it is impossible to announce the name of the show until the actual night of the performance.

Guthro said that the price of tickets will not change, but that on the two nights of performance it may be necessary to cut out a skit from the All-Varsity Revue in order to make time for this special event. It was also hinted that the stars of this show would likely be U. of T. graduates in order to tie in with the theme of the show.

Skule Buys 'Oike' To Boost SHARE As Campaign Lags

"We're not going to make our objective," said Tim Armstrong last night, Chairman of the Student Help to Asian Relief and Education Campaign currently being wound up on the campus.

Returns are coming in so slowly, he said, that it is very difficult to know just how much money has actually been raised for SHARE.

Chairman Armstrong urges that all Colleges and Faculties who have not yet made their returns, do so at the Students' Administrative Council Office in Hart House by this Friday.

Engineers are paying for the current issue of Toike Oike for the benefit of the SHARE campaign. There is no price set, but as George Burns, IV Eng. Bus., puts it, "Nobody even thinks of taking a copy without dropping at least a dime into the box.

According to Burns, the 1700 copies printed should net at least $150 to SHARE. Average contribution is around forty cents per student at Skule, he said.

For the first time ATL cards are stamped by the Engineering Society to insure that everybody gets his copy and may make his contribution, said Jim Allan, Engineering Vice President, and added, "The Toike Oike should have come out last week, during the campaign. It was one of our planned efforts to raise money for SHARE, but it was delayed at the printer's."

Allan claimed that Skule-At-Home tickets were held back until this week to give SHARE a better chance to collect contributions from students who are usually short of funds about this time of year.

UC and Meds Debate Seats for Universities

The question of whether the major universities in Canada should have seats in the House of Commons will be debated in the UC-Meds Parliament at 8 o'clock tonight in the Junior Common Room. Speakers include Lyle Moran, II Pre-Meds, and Bill McRae, I Meds, for the government, and Vern Turner, IV UC, and Roger Bull, II UC, for the opposition.

"We entered into this debate with the attitude that here was just another subject that would be typical UC debate material," said McRae. "However our research revealed that here was an imperfection in the Canadian governmental system, a matter of true importance to the nation at large and to the University student in particular. We shall stress the need for the addition of the independent objectivity of the university mind to the executive branch of the government."

The question of representation of universities in parliament is one of some standing. British universities were represented until recently, on the principle that each person should have a vote in the area in which he did business. Since this meant that each student had two votes, and since they usually voted conservative, this was abolished by the Labor government when they came into power. There is some speculation that the Conservative government will restore this practice.

The question has been much debated in Canada, but the main objection seems to be that it is unfair for the university student to have two votes.

"We of the opposition welcome this opportunity to enter into debate with the representatives of . . . uhh . . . Meds, I think. I am sure that the general tone of the Parliament will be serious and scholarly, befitting such an important occasion. These remarks to the casual observer may seem meaningless but my colleague and I hope to reveal the substance behind them this evening," said opposition speaker Turner.

(BLOODY)

For The Birds

By HENRY SHMUNK

Even a cursory glance through Toronto's fourth daily these days should be enough to convince the most sceptical that they're after something more than the undergraduate soul.

'Was it only last week that the word "bloody" appeared something like four times on one page of The Varsity? At the same time, Convocation Hall was ringing with stirring phrases about the Blood of the Lamb. And again today, on The Book Page, a Mr. Moritsugu talks of blood and guts in reference to Literature. He mentions "bloody," too, but it's doubtful anyone will read that far.

While all this may have seemed to some the exercise of undergraduate licence, it has actually been the thin edge of a wedge that was shoved in even farther yesterday when a post-dated picture of Syd Wax lying down on the job was printed. Well, for your information, smarty, he wasn't.

Syd was giving blood. They're after yours, too. And if you show even the slightest interest in the campaign they'll get it.

Actually aside from the need for plasma for our capitalistic boys in Korea there's no reason for you to give it. You'll probably faint at the first sight of it anyway but that won't get you out of donating. The Red Cross (an unfortunate name) likes its donors limp. They're easier to handle that way.

But if you decide to give out of the goodness of your heart there are a few things you should know. I won't number them because I can't remember them all.

Anyway the first thing they do is take you name and phone number. This may give you a little confidence if only in your own identity, but don't let it make you cocky. You'll just regret it.

The blood test is the acid test but even if you pass it you'll never be the same. You see, a pretty girl takes your hand in both of hers. She's been watching you ever since you came in, and it might be flattering if you're not used to that sort of thing.. You may think she's being romantic when she fondles your plump little patty, but she isn't. She stabs you.

After that it's just one cringing defeat after another. A brisk starched young lady marches you into a room where a lot of people are lying around on slabs waiting to be covered up.

"Which arm?" she asks. And as you fumble with your arms she she laughs a merry, tinkling laugh and ties one of them. Then the veins, which have been standing out on your forehead, stand out on your arms. It's not a pretty sight.

The brisk young lady licks her bottom lip and her eyes dart maliciously from vein to vein. She picks one and "plup" you're a donor. That's all there is to it.

After a while they let you get up and sneer at the quaking cowards coming in to give blood. If snivelling poltroons like that have any.

Then you can have some coffee. They give you a lecture on temperance and the good life as it applies to the rest of the afternoon, too. Then, if you feel like it, you can fly down to Rio.

If you do this 20 times, they give you a medal. But then, of course, you'd have to give up smoking entirely. Tobacco makes the blood lumpy and unpalatable, or something.

'Daily' Boobs Reprints Gag

Montreal (CUP) — The McGill Daily was caught unawares in a big boob recently when it reprinted as serious articles from The Gateway, undergrad paper at the University of Alberte, stories that were actually part of a gag issue.

The issue of The Gateway, which hit the campus as students returned to classes for the spring term, caught the Daily offguard.

Headed up with the slogan Quaecumque Vera (The Gateway is a Pillar of Truth!) the special issue featured articles reporting that the provincial government had abolished tuition fees, that frats were to be abolished on the campus, that written exams had been abolished and that the Alberta government was in collusion with the Russian government.

Campus Blood Donor Drive Starts With Sirens' Serenade

Students hearing sirens around the campus yesterday need not be alarmed. It was only the fanfare for the opening of the blood donor campaign, which will last until February 1.

From 12 noon to 2 p.m., every day this week, there will be a Red Cross worker sitting behind a table in the lobby at the main entrance of Hart Hause, waiting for would-be blood donors.

About forty-five made appointments yesterday, which was the first day of the drive. The cards to be filled out for appointments have been given out to representatives of each year in the different faculties, and will be distributed to the students. They are to be collected and taken to the SAC office in Hart House every day. Women can pick up cards at the Women's SAC Office in the basement of University College.

Everyone who fills out one of these cards will receive a letter from the Red Cross Society, confirming the receipt of the card and the time of the appointment. He will also get a phone call approximately every three months, asking him to come down and give another pint. Special pins are given after the third, fifth, tenth and twentieth donations.

The blood donor clinic is in the Old Hospital for Sick Children, at College and Elizabeth Streets. Students are asked to enter the building by the first door south of College, on Elizabeth. There are a number of signs around to guide them.

The clinic is open on Tuesdays, 12:00 to 3:00 p.m., and from 5:00 to 7:30 p.m., and on Thursdays from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. and from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. It will not be open on Thursday, February 14, however. If necessary, it will be open from 12:00 to 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 8; Monday, February 11, and Friday, February 15.

The length of time between arrival and departure from the clinic is approximately half an hour. This includes waiting, while drinking coke or fruit juice, taking the haemoglobin test, actually giving the blood, and resting for ten minutes. If the haemoglobin test shows someone to be too anaemic or tired, he is not allowed to give blood. The time of the actual giving depends on the speed of flow of the blood of the individual person. Usually, only one arm is used, but if it does not give the full pint, the rest is taken from the other arm. This, however, is very rare. During the rest period, coffee and light refreshments are served.

Students Sponsor Indian TB Ward

A $20,000 Students' Ward has been opened in a Tuberculosis sanitarium in Madras, India, the International Student Service office announced yesterday. Money for the ward was donated by World University Service, which is represented in Canada by ISS.

Opening the ward, Miss Elizabeth Pothan, WUS representative in India, pointed out that TB facilities for students and faculty are particularly important, because the disease is particularly prevalent among these groups.

Inter-Hillel Conference Debates On Reparations

The final session of the Inter-Hillel Conference last weekend in Montreal was devoted to the Inter-Hillel Debates. Bert Bloom and Ben Schlesinger debated for Toronto Hillel on the topic "Resolved that world Jewry endorses a program of negotiating with Germany for reparations." Danny Usher and Len Cohen from McGill had the affirmative.

Danny Usher, first speaker for the affirmative, stated that reparations did not constitute forgiveness, but justice. "The robber must not keep his booty, even if he is a murderer. The Nazis have left us a D.P. legacy of cripples; these cripples are an economic burden, and must be paid for." He then cited the case of King Ahab who arranged Naboth's death to obtain possession of the vineyard; but the prophet Elijah warned, "Wilt thou murder, and inherit too?"

Bert Bloom, the first speaker for negative enquired as to the ability of the German people to pay these reparations, and their willingness to carry out the program. He stated that, as total property losses amount to four billion dollars, and Germany could only pay $17 million now, "reparations would be a haggling in the market-place over the corpses of six million people. Adenhauer is painting a picture of Germany representing itself as willing repentents before the world," he concluded.

Lenny Cohen, second affirmative speaker, felt that the Jews are not in a position to engage in declining luxuries. "This money would alleviate a stress not equalled in England in her darkest days."

Germany is recovering the Ruhr valley, he continued, "and is capable of paying, and Israel is in desperate need."

Ben Schlesinger, final speaker, asked "are we to forget the crematoria where people were fuel? These are the crimes which have not been mentioned. "He also stated that it rested with world Jewry to prevent a rise of Nazism. He pointed out that former Nazis are sitting on the council where reparations are being considered.

In his rebuttal, Danny Usher said that these reparations will keep the eyes of the world on Germany's crimes. They do not imply forgiveness, we are only dealing with the crime of robbery.

After a lengthy deliberation, the decision and the Hillel trophy were awarded by the judges to McGill.

Harvard Men Getting Taller, Outgrow Beds

Cambridge, Mass. (Exchange) — Harvard men are suffering from the handicap of being too long. The Crimson, Harvard's undergrad daily, noted recently that there has been an increasing demand for seven-foot beds in the last few years. The reason is purely anthropological, a Harvard professor commented. "People are getting bigger all the time," he said.

But to save the university considerable expense, he suggested that students sleep diagonally.

University of Laval Invites Varsity Students to Centenary

Laval University has invited 20 students from this campus to Quebec City to attend their centenary celebrations the weekend of Feb. 22, 23 and 24. According to the letter received by the Students' Administrative Council from l'Association Generale des Etudiants de Laval, Laval is playing host to a large group of Canadian and American university students for the weekend of their biggest campus show "Le Festival".

Laval students have organised this "colossal project", the letter said, to honor the founding of the University exactly 100 years ago. They wish to group "in an atmosphere of cordiality and good - fellowship", students from various campi to share in the celebrations.

The delegates are promised a dazzling round of cocktail parties, dinners and dances with "Le Festival" Friday night at the Quebec Coliseums as the highlight of the weekend. The outline for the weekend shows that Saturday's plans include a tour of Quebec, tobogganing on the Dufferin Terrace of the famous Chateau Frontenac, followed by a sleighride and finally dinner and a dance at "Au Vatel" restaurant.

Accompanying the letter from the AGEL were application forms for those who would like to take advantage of the invitation. Expenses would include only trainfare (investigations are being made regarding a special rate) and three dollars extra. The Quebec students are supplying lodging and meals for all the delegates and also dates for those who wish them. The forms are available at the two SAC offices and application is open to all faculties and all years. Knowledge of French is not necessary.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Some of the boys think that the decline of western civilization can be blamed on one thing: the American woman now has the upper hand. If you worry yourself about this state of affairs you probably won't appreciate WESTWARD THE WOMEN (Loew's). But the rest of us should like it fine.

For WESTWARD THE WOMEN tells how a band of women conquered the dangerous trail to California in 1851, by mule train and covered wagon.

The women are prospective brides for a western valleyful fo men, and desert heat, Indians, floods or mountainous passes aren't going to stop them, by gum. The male guiding party, headed by rugged virile, unshaven Robert Taylor, finally dwindles down to two: Taylor and Japanese cook Ito (Henry Nakamura). The other men fall prey to Indians, desert the train or are disciplined. Taylor's method of keeping the men away from the women: he shoots the men.

So it is the women, over 120 of them, who have to grit their teeth and shed their petticoats to do man's work. They drive wagons, pitch camp, fight off Indians, and conquer mountains and desert. There are a variance of types among the women, of course. Denise Darcel, who has enormous shoulders, is a shady lady who wants a change. She and Taylor begin to hate each other, and lash each other verbally or physically. So naturally, all falls into place, and they line up at the end to be hitched just like the rest. Hope Emerson is a big stern New England widow who talks a sea-going jargon. She is novel, but still a stereotype of a character. But it is a happy thing they did not cast Marjorie Main for the part. There are others: two blondes who are crack shots and excellent mule drivers, a pregnant schoolteacher who has her baby in the desert, an Italian immigrant with her young son.

WESTWARD THE WOMEN is the product of three talents, producer Dore Schary, director William Wellman, and writer (in this case) Frank Capra. Schary is the successful producer and head of MGM who believes in the compromise between Message and Entertainment. So you get the documentary veneer of the westward trek, the insistence on language usage by the Italian, the Japanese and the French. You also get the stereotype characters, which may partly be the Capra touch. Capra is the master of heart-tugging American hokum. There are large doses of it here, e.g., the death of the Italian boy, and the resulting emptiness in the lives of the mother and the pet dog. You know that there will be replacements to make up for the losses, and there are. Wellman is more successful with this film than he was with ACROSS THE WIDE MISSOURI, another offbeat "message" western by the same studio. His pictorial love for the wide-sweep of pioneer country is well-integrated here, perhaps because the Capra story is more coherent. One shot of the wagons and the women making their way across the white hot desert is a beautiful study of black and white.

Technicolor was not used for WESTWARD THE WOMEN. This was an intelligent decision; there is no lipstick or artificial coloring on the weather-beaten faces of the women. Beauty and glamor come from natural attributes in this film; my goodness, life in the raw!

The new Hollywood concern with the facts of life go even further than no makeup. Tastefully if sometimes melodramatically, rape, man's hunger for women, and birth in the desert are presented directly, not by coy innuendo.

WESTWARD THE WOMEN is not particularly original, but it is good entertainment expertly done. One question deserves to be asked though, especially since the veneer is of authenticity: where does Ito, the Japanese cook, come from? In 1851, Japanese in America were very few. Commodore Peary did not open up Japan until 1853. But Nakamura, who was the awkward rookie in GO FOR BROKE, helps things a lot, by mugging and pratfalls, to make up for the high seriousness of rugged "Buck" Taylor, temporary misogynist.

ANOTHER MAN'S POISON (University) stars Bette Davis and Gary Merrill, who were last seen together in the very good ALL ABOUT EVE But stars don't mean a heck of a lot, it seems, if the story is no good. ANOTHER MAN'S POISON is a real stinker.

This film was made in England, which gave it the fine hedge-rowed country background, but didn't do a thing for its quality. Like many other Bette Davis efforts, this is a dark picture. Even during the day, shadows lurk everywhere.

But the darkest shadows are under Miss Davis' eyes, and we see a lot of them. It all has to do with a mystery story writer who looks like Tallulah Bankhead. She kills to get rid of the surplus men in her life, and this leads to one difficulty after another. Davis emotes heavily in her bluntly stylized way to each crisis. Merrill is an unshaven refugee from the law who wants to live in sin with Davis because it makes things easier for him all around. She won't have any, and that makes things difficult too. Emlyn Williams, who is a good actor often seen in bad pictures, is a smooth Nosey Parker. Anthony Steele was also in THE WOODEN HORSE.

There isn't much motive for all this except Miss Davis runs the usual panting, pulsating gamut. The neat Mister Magoo cartoon in the program is hardly strong enough antidote for this dish of POISON.

New Citizens' Art Featured In Show

A collection of over 100 paintings by new Canadians from Lithuania, France, Madagascar, Austria, Denmark, Germany, Russia, the United States, and other foreign countries will be the next exhibit on at Hart House, according to Dave Gardner, assistant to the Warden. Gardner says that this exhibit will only be shown in Toronto at Hart House and should be one of the most impressive hung this year.

The exhibition, which will be shown for two weeks starting next Monday, was chosen from about 300 paintings by artists who have come to live in Canada since September 2, 1945. The artists came from 20 countries in Europe, Asia, Africa and America.

Some of the artists are professionals who had achieved recognition in their own lands before either political or economic events prompted them to seek a new life in Canada. Others were amateurs—students, housewives, office workers, designers, an ambassador, and a member of one of the ruling families of Europe.

Tomorrow night, Paul Duval, art editor for Saturday Night, will review the current exhibition of paintings by John S. Walsh of Montreal.

COMMERCE JOURNAL

Unique Magazine

One of the University of Toronto's most unique student publications makes its annual debut to the campus today. The Commerce Journal is possibly the only student publication on the campus wholly financed by its own revenues and with a circulation off the campus considerably exceeding its student sales. In continuous publication for twenty years, it has steadily gained recognition both in the business and academic worlds as University of Toronto's "miniature magazine of management", disclosed Editor Mel Watkins.

This year's issue contains fourteen articles, largely written by prominent men off the campus. Featured is an article by W. F. Lougheed, economist in the Canadian Bank of Commerce, on the taxation of capital gains. Paul G. Hoffman of international repute is the outstanding contributor with his article on the relief of world tensions. Dr. H. M. McLuhan, author of "The Mechanical Bride: Folklore of Industrial Man" has contributed a provocative study of modern day advertising as a magical institution.

Thor Hansen, responsible for the design of the interior of the new B-A Oil Building, asks the question, "Is There a Place for Canadian Folk Art in Modern Commerce?" and concludes that there are great commercial opportunities in this so-far neglected field. The story of Alcan's Kitimat development in British Columbia is an inside story of expanding enterprise written by the Vice-President in charge of this development; E. B. Jolliffe urges immediate adoption of a policy of conservation of the world's waning resources; and Ira G. Needles, President of B. F. Goodrich Rubber examines a pertinent problem of today in his article on "Fighting Inflation in a Free Society".

Watkins promised that this year's cover would once more be a break with the "staid and conservative" ones of the past.

The Journal will appear on the campus at the Commerce Club luncheon at 1:00 tomorrow — an earlier date than it usually rolls off the press. Students may inspect and purchase at the Economics Building or at the University Press Bookstore.

Union Halted Half-done

Edmonton (CUP) — The second stage in the University of Alberta's student union plans has been shelved for the time being. At a recent meeting of the student council, it was decided not to press for the $1,015,000 needed to erect the second stage of the union which has already cost over $1,000,000.

It was felt by the members of the council that neither the Board of Governors of the University nor the provincial government which, it is hoped, will supply the funds for the second stage, would support the scheme at the present time. One building is already being constructed and another planned for the near future on the Edmonton campus.

Though it was suggested that money be raised either by an increase in fees or public subscription as well as by direct appeal to the government, none of these methods were deemed advisable at this time. The public has already contributed a large amount to provide furnishings for the present building.

The council resolved, however, that the building should be constructed as soon as possible and that a priority be obtained from the Board of Governors that Stage Two of the Student Union will be considered as the next building to be erected when the two current projects have been completed.

VIC'S CORNER

Well, here we are again at Tuesday: Things have been happening around here what with winning the Band Concert, raising money for Share, giving away our blood and watching our senior hockey team on their way to a championship.

The Installation of the Hon. Lester B. Pearson as Chancellor of Victoria College in Convocation Hall, Mon., Feb. 4, at 8:00 p.m., will be given atmosphere by the VIC BAND (SGLIRPB!! which also won the band concert) and by other means which we are not yet permitted to disclose.

There is to be a reception afterwards at Vic and that means eats. We are expecting a good turnout to impress the Minister of External Affairs.

The Music Club says that there are still some good seats left for the Tuesday evening, Wednesday evening and the Saturday matinee performances. Tickets are on sale in Alumni Hall and at Hart House Box Office. It's worthwhile to note that it has been our experience in past years that the opening night (Tues.) is often more successful than some of the other performances. COMING: 1. The Glee Club Festival and 2. The Music Club At-Home.

Don't forget that the Vic At-Home is only two short weeks away. It's scheduled for Fri., Feb. 8, at Hart House with Benny Louis and Ken Dean providing the music. As an added attraction flowers will be given to all the young ladies—so their escorts will not have to worry about corsages—lucky boys! We hope we'll see you all there, and—watch the pink hats!!

There will be a second election for girls' S.A.C. rep. on Fri., Feb. 1. The original three names will stand. Friday's election was frustrated when two of Vic's gallants went ballot snatching before the polls closed to do a little G.O.P.ing for their desired candidates.

VIC PINS — Those who ordered pins before Xmas can pick them up on payment at the V.C.U. any time this week. New orders will be accepted on payment of $1.00.

Gethletics — The Vic I's lost their first (and only one they say they are going to lose) hockey game to PHE I's last week. They play Meds, Thurs. at 12:30. The II's tied U.C. I's last week in a very close encounter.

Mathletics — Sr. Vic Hockey continues its winning ways and is a team to watch in oation. Keep an eye on The Varsity, for the game times. Vic III's won its game on Fri., 8-1. The big line was Bill Angus, Jack Shiner, Mac Macdowell, which scored 5 of 8 goals. The IV's won their game 6-0, with Doc Rumball registering his 23rd shutout of the season. In B-Ball, Vic Srs. are on top of the league. The Jrs. definitely have the best teams in the group, but unfortunately are edged consistently. Vic swimmers came third in the interfac. meet. Congrats to Gord Stewart, who is doing a great job with the Vic swimmers and Water-Polo teams!

What is Nickel, anyway?

"Nickel is a metal, the same as copper and silver are metals. It is a very useful metal because it has a silvery-white color, does not rust or corrode easily, and is strong and tough.

"When we want to make other metals whiter or stronger or more resistant to rust or corrosion, we add nickel to them and then we can make things like white gold or stainless steel.

"The reason our new television set works so well is that nickel and electricity work so well together. Telephones and radios work better because nickel is used. Nickel is a good metal and Canada produces 90 per cent of it."

Mental Evolution Outlined

PSYCHOLOGY OF MAN'S POSSIBLE EVOLUTION
P. D. Ouspensky.
Vintage Book Company, 1951, $2.00.

The late P. D. Ouspensky, a Russian mystical philosopher and psychologist predicts in this posthumously published book a fascinating evolution in man's psychology. He states that the next phase in the evolution of man will be about the acquisition of consciousness, inner unity, permanent ego and will. Most human beings believe that they already have these characteristics. According to Ouspensky they are under an illusion. Men do not know themselves.

Culture has only developed man up to a certain point, and it is left to him to further the process by his own efforts. The author suggests several methods by which man can accomplish his own development. A large part of the forty-two pages in this book is devoted to the analysis of helpful and hindering factors in this development. Surprisingly, Ouspensky lists imagination as a factor to be avoided. He points out that when man wishes to observe something his imagination is called into play on the same subject and he forgets to observe further. Hence imagination is an obstruction to correct observation.

The question may be asked, what are the details of these new faculties which man may acquire by his own efforts. Ouspensky is not very explicit about these. He implies without proof that if men will follow methods similar to those he suggests, they will evolve to a higher state. Readers interested in this process can turn to The Psychology of Man's Possible Evolution for further enlightenment with regard to Ouspensky's ideas.

Dean Innis Communicates Bias

THE BIAS OF COMMUNICATION
By Harold A. Innis.
The U. of Toronto Press, 1951, $4.50.
(Student price $3.75, at the Press Bookstore.)

An increasing interest in the mass media and in communications in general has for some time been noticeable among the intellectual strata of undergraduate life in this university. It would probably be unfair to call it a fad. It is hard to find another term that adequately describes it. In spite of the fact that discussion often levels off at the comic-book-controversy level or concerns itself with the undoubtedly horrid things that television will do to the young, the increasing interest is an important comment on recent evaluations of communication as one of the basic tools of civilization.

Those who study with Dr. Harold A. Innis in the Department of Political Science and Economics will need no introduction to his work in the rapidly widening field of communications. The same may not be true of the more casual student. Dr. Innis has been developing his thesis for some years now, a thesis that finds its "bias . . . (in) the oral tradition, particularly as reflected in Greek civilization, and (is concerned) with the necessity of recapturing some of (the Greek) spirit."

Bias of Communication is a collection of eight papers designed to develop and "support in a more detailed fashion" that thesis. The most important statement of the thesis is contained in an earlier book, Empire and Communications, published in 1950, and a knowledge of that work is pretty well assumed by the present collection of papers.

To Dr. Innis the key to the development of civilizations can be found in communications.

As he explains in Empire and Communications, his original interest in the subject grew out of his studies of economic history, particularly work in Canadian economic history such as the studies of the fur trade and the cod fisheries. In these studies he became interested in the factor of communication as a basic element in the structure of particular industries. And from that basis, he has widened his view until he now includes many civilizations in his compass.

Two problems are isolated: the problem of space, which can be roughly equated with the area over which a civilization holds sway, and the problem of time, or the length of life a particular civilization enjoys. Dr. Innis examines these two concepts in terms of various media of communication (stone, clay, papyrus, paper, printing, the radio, television, etc.). His view of the instruments of communication is very wide, and includes such things as the horse and its influence on military campaigns (a problem of space) or the political implications of architecture (a problem of time).

Pointing out that a study of communication is difficult because we are subjected to the prejudices and bias induced by our contemporary environment, Dr. Innis plunges gaily ahead, running through the development of Western civilization from his particular bias, the Oral tradition.

It is difficult, perhaps impossible, for men in the modern West to understand the Oral tradition because of the overwhelming bias of the written tradition in which we exist. But through investigations along the lines suggested by Dr. Innis, he hopes that we may come to a better understanding of the reasons for the rise and fall of civilization, for an indication of "why we attend to the things to which we attend."

That roughly is the Innis thesis. As a thesis it was developed in Empire and Communications. The papers in Bias of Communication support and expand parts of that thesis. Included are "Minerva's Owl", a cryptic propositional precis of the thesis, which makes for tough reading because of the extreme condensation in which it indulges; an eloquent and stimulating "Plea for Time"; and "A Critical Review", extracts from an address made to the Conference of Commonwealth Universities held at Oxford University in July 1948 which turns a cold, hard eye on the universities. Also in the book are papers on "The Problem of Space", "Industrialism and Cultural Values", "The English Printing Trade in the Eighteenth Century", "Technology and Public Opinion in the United States" and two appendices, a note on "Communication and Electromagnetic Resources in North America" by D. Q. Innis, and "Adult Education and Universities", revised extracts from the Report of The Manitoba Commission on Adult Education, of which Dr. Innis was a member.

Some harsh things have been said about Dr. Innis' writing style. The strongest is probably the "when do you think he will be translated into English" comment; more generous is a request for an "interpreter". Bias of Communication is uneven in style. "Minerva's Owl", for all its erudition, almost engulfs the readers as statement tumbles ruthlessly on statement. For many it will be too much. Yet there are times when the author writes well and is impressive, perhaps because his pace is less intense. "A Plea for Time" is an excellent example of this, particularly when Dr. Innis "digresses" on the state of the modern university. I particularly enjoy a sly and often subtle sense of the ironic and humorous which from time to time crops up in the long catalogues of fact. From his study and reading he has preserved much that is designed to entertain, as well as instruct.

For the faddists and their comic-book-television controversies Bias of Communication (and its companion, Empire and Communications) is probably too tough. For those who don't mind a little slugging it is an interesting and stimulating book.

She Was A Real Blonde . . .

I, THE JURY; MY GUN IS QUICK; VENGEANCE IS MINE; ONE LONELY NIGHT; THE BIG KILL
Mickey Spillane.
Signet Books, 25 cents each.

The publisher's blurb: "Mickey Spillane is the most sensational new mystery writer to appear in years. His stories . . . are a mind-shattering blend of action, passion and suspense . . . In less than three years, over 10,000,000 copies have been printed.")

To the casual observer, Henry Shmunk, I Victoria, was working quietly in the University library at 8:45. He had Bradley's Shakespearian Tragedy propped up before him, and his snub nose was completely buried in the thick volume. Henry, who shouldn't have been in the stacks at all, was already committing Thoughtcrime. He was reading Mickey Spillane.

I, The Jury, like four other Spillane works, comes in the pocket-size edition. Freshman Shmunk had his I, The Jury sandwiched in the Bradley, and except for the occasional furtive look-around, he was deep in the world of Mike Hammer, Private Investigator.

("Mickey Spillane has been discussed with reference to Spenser's Faeri Queen. The intellectuals are taking him up." "This Spillane fellow is a keen satirist of the American scene. Next to Pogo, Spillane is the subtlest thing around.")

Henry Shmunk was thinking that Shakespeare should have written like this stuff. No long fancy words. When Mike Hammer did things, he just did them. Like that. Hammer had just slammed a guy who attacked him from behind. Now he was telling sinister George Kalecki off. But Kalecki didn't say anything. ". . . ." He found a chair and slid into it, his eyes narrow slits of hate. If he had a rod right then he would have let me have it. He would have died too. I've had an awful lot of practice sneaking that .45 out from under my arm." Gee, thought Henry, no hesitating about this guy Hammer. If he was after his stepfather, he would have to give it to him in the gut without thinking about it.

("Darling, you look marvellous tonight. Mickey Spillane should write a book about you." "Spillane is pure crap, I tell you, it's for the birds, for the bloody birds.")

Henry Shmunk couldn't understand what the fellows in residence meant when they talked about Mickey Spillane's books being hot. This secretary, Velda, wasn't bad at all. But the blonde, Charlotte, was a description! Imagine women like that, with legs a little heavier than the Hollywood variety. Sure didn't get that around the university. Look at that librarian walking after a new book. Nothing torchy about her. Then there was the Bellemy girl, and Mike Hammer goes away leaving her still waiting. Now, thought Henry, licking his lips and loosening his collar with his forefinger, if it was me . . .

("This Spillane stuff, it's dull, unimaginative, can't see why it should sell millions of copies. Hell, even I could write this kind of stuff." "Sex and mayhem, how can you miss? What price imagination?")

Henry Shmunk was thinking that he should be getting back to the Hamlet essay. After all, Wednesday was the last day. He had been with Mike Hammer as he crippled two thugs who tried to rough him up, a visit to the beautiful blonde psychiatrist, which had promised developments, a tour of a higher-class brothel, and discoveries of corpses with Hammer's pal and rival, police chief Pat Chambers.

But here was Charlotte again to meet Mike Hammer in the park, somebody tries to shoot him . . . and Bradley looks like pretty grim stuff anyway. Wonder when he's going to meet up with the Bellemy girl again . . .

("Did you see that picture of Spillane on the back cover of The Big Kill? Sweatshirt, crew cut, and a .45 revolver pistol in his right fist." "Well anyway with Velda always posing her legs like the stocking ads, and all the women posing in thin negligees in front of bright windows or bed lamps, Professor McLuhan gave his title to the wrong book.")

This was the longest time Henry Shmunk had ever spent in the University library. Hammer had been shot at again, found a couple more dead bodies, and had been fending off or succumbing to beautiful girls who all wanted him and his ugly face and beautiful body. But Mike Hammer still didn't know who the killer was, the killer he was going to shoot in the gut in revenge for his wartime buddy whose murder had started off this adventure.

("How did you like the book where Hammer meets Juno? He's so damned stupid he falls in love with this blonde and it turns out Juno is a man, well-padded." "The book about Communists is frighteningly hysterical. Hammer wants to smash the Commies in the face. He feels the same way about sexual deviates. A violent, unreasoning animalistic type.")

At last, Henry Shmunk and Mike Hammer knew who the killer was, the killer they had been after all the time. It was the blonde psychiatrist, Charlotte, who Hammer had fallen in love with. And Hammer was now going to have his revenge. He sat there waiting with his .45, confronting the beautiful blonde . . . Henry Shmunk thought this was hell. He unconsciously scratched a pimple as he read on.

("You cant tell who the villain is in Mickey Spillane. If it's a woman, she will be the one Mike Hammer falls in love with and the only one he doesn't make love to. It's a sure clue.")

As Mike Hammer told Charlotte her record of crime, the blonde was tempting him in italics. "Lovely shoulders. Soft curves of hidden muscles running across her body . . . she was so pretty. Young and delicious and exciting . . ." She tempted him while he talked ("She was a real blonde.") until Mike Hammer having finished his account, shot her in the belly with his .45. Henry Shmunk squirmed inside his shirt and looked around. The library was quiet, except for somebody's heels softly clicking on the tier below. Almost the end.

"Hey, really working, hey?" Henry Shmunk nearly jumped out of his chair, and hurriedly closed the Bradley unon the Spillane.

"Yip, yup . . ." gulped Henry huskily, to the cheery unwelcome classmate, "doing essay on Hamlet . . . Shakespeare . . . Ophelia . . . a real blonde . . ."

("Women offering themselves like virgins at a pagan altar. Evading the law or violating it to get the Bad Guys ahead of the police. Shooting the archvillain in the gut, and then casually rolling a cigarette. Isn't this the great American day-dream?" "The Signet people make their money on Spillane and Erskine Caldwell, and also publish the Mentor series which include Thoreau, A. N. Whitehead, Thomas Wolfe, Edith Hamilton, Ruth Benedict and Irwin Edman.")

Rambling Western

WINDS OF MORNING
By H. L. Davis.
McLeod, 1952.

"Winds of Morning" is no book for the High-Lifer. It does not solve, nor even state, any of the Problems of the Universe, such as Life, Death, Sex, and T. S. Eliot. It tells a story simply, and with a good deal of color and humor. It is a Western.

The story centres around the Columbia River district of the Northwestern States in the 1920's. An old horse herder and a young deputy sheriff, who is the narrator, are the main characters. Through the eyes of two generations we are introduced to the Northwest, in the descriptions and anecdotes which are the main justification of the work. There is a killing or two, and even some sex, just to satisfy those who are too impatient of the amiable gait of the story, but the countryside, and the people who inhabit, or infest it, receive most of the author's attention. One fascinating side-story tells of a man who married two sisters six times. Every time he married one of the girls, he had an affair with her sister, and in order to keep his babies legitimate, he married and divorced each of the girls three times.

Davis' style suits the mood and theme of his story. He writes easily, and seems to amble aimlessly from one situation to another. There is very little dialogue, but a good deal of excellent description and quiet humor. The combination of these factors makes some of the quite gory episodes in the book seem less affairs of passion than of common sense. If a man murders your son, it is the normal and sensible thing to do to relieve him of the burdens of this life with a double-barrelled shotgun. The anarchy and muscle-bound individualism which made life in the west and northwest exciting even after the turn of the century are presented as parts of the setting, like the wild flowers or the horses.

No symbolism, no Deep Meanings, no Veiled Inferences. "Winds of Morning" holds nothing for the High-Lifer, but the Low and Middle Lifers will find it an excellent and entertaining novel.

Blues, Assumption In Mutual Opener

Tomorrow night at Mutual Arena the Blues and the Orphuns face some very tough opposition. The opener will see the Orphuns play Nortown Tri-bells and the nightcap will feature Assumption College as the visitors.

In their first meeting with the Tri-bells the Orphuns lost out sixty-seven to sixty. The game was close until the final minutes when the Bells grabbed the winning margin. The Seniors also lost their first meeting with Assumption College in another seven-point decision. This game was an upset and Toronto will be out for revenge.

Tickets for the double-header are going on sale today at the Athletic Office in Hart House. Students can buy $1 reserved seats for 50 cents if they buy them today but all tickets sold at the arena will be at the regular price. The first game starts at seven-thirty and the main one at nine o'clock.

The Mutual Gym has a full-sized floor and very good seating accommodation. This is the first of five double-headers to be played there. All of the twin bills will feature the Senior Blues in the night-cap.

Toronto fans will be getting their first look at Ray Monnot playing the first string center spot. Ray led his team in their double victory over last weekend as he potted forty-three points. Another freshman star on view will be George Stulac. George has taken enough time off from his swimming practice to become the leading scorer for the JV's this season.

Skule Takes Fencing Meet

Intramural fencing, after four days of competition, was culminated by the victory of SPS, but it was not without a hard fight. First place in the epee tournament necessitated a play-off bout between the two top men, Lucien Goldenberg and Georges Kovatch, due to the equal drive of the two fencers. After a very disputed match, Goldenberg, of SPS, won the first place. Bill Anderson, St. Mike's, won a well-deserved third place.

The sabre competition, fought yesterday, was won by Goldenberg over Kovatch. Third was Wagner, a promising new arrival among the Varsity fencers.

The overall results, from foil, epee and sabre, therefore, put L. Goldenberg, SPS, ahead; Georges Kovatch and Bill Anderson in the second and third places respectively.

The skill and good sportsmanship displayed in this competition seem to promise an interesting exhibition at Buffalo, where the Senior Team is going next Saturday.

Colt Wrestlers Still Undefeated Face Blues Soon

The Varsity grunt and groan boys had better be in extra fine shape, come the 9th of February when the matmen from Western pay their annual visit, for according to the latest reports from London the Purple and White are out to cop the Intercollegiate title, with one of their best mat teams ever. Although ending up on the end of the pack last year, with the added experience and three wins already under their belt, they will undoubtedly be a potential threat.

In the three meets already held, the Western matmen beat Toronto Y.M.C.A. twice by the scores of 31-10 and 25-20, and floored a strong Ontario Agricultural College squad 33-10. The men to watch when Western comes next month are Colin Hubling in the 191 and John Dreisman in the 123 pound class as well as Ron Preston at 147, all of whom are undefeated in the three starts this year.

Coach Don Conway is also very pleased at the return of two former Intercollegiate Intermediate champs, Reg Ort in the heavyweight division and Dick Killinger in the 130 pound class.

By CAROL LOGAN

The University of Toronto women are beating the birds this morning, over at the Carlton Club in the opening round of the Interfaculty Badminton Tourney. The meet continues tomorrow with the semi-finals, so if you interested in picking up a few pointers, go over to Church Street at Hayden and join the gallery. The form displayed there-in should be well forth the effort. Ruth Netercott (Vic) and Anne Greey (UC), two of the members of last year's championship team will be back defending their positions, and they will have some stiff competition. Daphne Walker, who battled her way to the Canadian Junior Championship last year, will be vying for a chance to represent Varsity at McGill in February.

Plans for the Athletic Night swim meet on March 1st are taking shape. President Pam Perrin and her committee meet tonight to select the teams, and a meeting is called for Wednesday at 5 in the L.M. gym to give competitors the latest info concerning team divisions. If you signed up for an event be sure to be present. And even if you didn't commit yourself in writing, but are interested in entering the meet, there is still room in some events. Bend an ear in the direction of the Lillian Massey Gym tomorrow at 5.

The basketball game last Wednesday night, started the Senior and Intermediate teams off on, what we hope will be, the road to glory. For the last three years, the Varsity Intercoll team has swept the boards. The Bronze Baby is getting to be a permanent fixture here and we'd like to keep it that way.

A big reason for the Blue teams' successes is coach Mary Barnet. "Mickey" took over the controls three years ago and so far has piloted all of her squads to top position. This year looks like no exception.

The Senior team hasn't been picked yet, but the game tomorrow against Hamilton Normal School should provide the answers so that the team can whip into shape for a return bout with McMaster on February 12. The Varsity squad hoped for a Senior-Intermediate tilt with OAC, but the Hamilton Normal School game clashed with the tentative date suggested by Guelph. However, negotiations are still being carried on so we may get a crack at the Mac Hall girls before the end of the season.

Husband Wins Interfac 220 Murray Gaziuk Takes 1,000

Clint Husband and Eric Kofmel gave SPS a one-[two] punch to aggregate the most points in interfaculty [track] meets, the third straight time SPS has triumphed. The [tall] (6'4") long-striding Husband, III SPS, won the 220 in [yes]terday's interfaculty meet in a fast 24.7 seconds, while [Kof]mel tied for second with Jack Warga, OCE, in 24.8.

Bill Davis, St. Mike's, placed fourth in 26.1 seconds.

Murray Gaziuk looked like he was getting back into last year's form when he nipped Chuck Wortman in the last 60 yards in the 1,000 yard run. He finished in 2 minutes, 27.8 seconds, Wortman being timed in 2:27.9. Gaziuk holds the indoor records in the 600, 880, 1,000, and mile. Wortman beat Gaziuk last week in the 880 by about ten yards.

Wortman took the lead from Earl Fee after about 300 yards, and kept ahead till Gaziuk, who stayed within five yards of him, picked him off at the bend before the final straightaway.

George Webster added two points to Skule's points in this meet by placing third, winning his heat from Mal Crawford, UC, who placed fourth. Webster ran a steady pace throughout, while Crawford faded 110 yards from the end after threatening to take the Skulemen.

Results

220 yards — 1. Husband, [SPS] 24.7; 2. Kofmel, SPS and [Warga] OCE, 24.8; 4. Davis, SMC, 26.1

1,000 yards — 1. Gaziuk, UC, 2:27.8; 2. Wortman, Vic, 2:27.9; Webster, SPS, 2:29.3; 4. Crawford, UC, 2:30.9.

Don Fawcett

Don Fawcett, II P.H.E., has scored eighty-two points for the Blues in Senior competition this year. This ranks him as the fourth highest scorer on the team. Fawcett scored sixteen points as the Blues won their two games over the weekend. Don, who stands about 5'8" and weighs 156 pounds, came to the Blues from UTS where he played on the basketball team there with Doug Reeves and Bill Corcoran, both of whom are now on the JV's. Fawcett is probably the fastest man on the team and is also the smallest. He is a very shifty ball-handler and was a big help in filling up some of the gaps on the Senior Blues. He coaches the Trinity A's, which beat the UC III in major intramural basketball yesterday.

Sportswoman

University College seconds edged out PHE seconds in a very tight hockey game played at noon yesterday. The lone goal was scored by Di Walker. She potted the goal late in the final period. The Fizz-Ed players did all they could to tie the score but they couldn't score against Beth Armstrong who recorded a shutout for the Redwomen.

In the opening period the puck was batted from one end to the other but neither team managed to score a goal. Control of the play shifted from the winners to the losers and although there were some close calls the goalies were at their best.

The outstanding players in the game were Liz Scroggie, Jane Firstbrook and Di Walker for the winning UC team. Mary MacLean and Ann Sutherland were the top players for the luckless PHE team.

Pitching Sportshoes

There were very few games played on the interfaculty sports front yesterday but the ones that were played were close and exciting.

Vic IV shaded a fighting Meds team 42-37 in a very tight major league basketball game. The Vicsters went five points up, 11-6, in the first stanza and maintained the gap despite the Doc's best efforts. Vic added another point in the second period but Meds got that one back in the final canto as they tried to close the gap.

There were eighteen fouls called in the game but this was just a sign how exciting it was. The Vic scorers were J. Coles with 14, B. Cunningham with 10, and J. Wilson and M. Pearce with six apiece. These players bore the brunt of the attack for the winners staying on the floor almost the entire game. Urquart and Bassingthwaite were the Medsmen who hooped the most with eight and seven respectively.

Over in University Arena there were two games in intramural hockey. Dents B dropped UC IV by a score of 4-2. Baker scored twice to spark Meds and Glenny and Deverill added the other two. Swanson and McCartney put the puck in the net for the losers.

Trinity celebrated a hockey win as they squeezed by St. Michael's B 2-1. The game was tied 1-1 going into the final period but Trinity rammed in the winner. The Mikemen did all they could to tie it up but they didn't score. Don Malcolm and Stu Fisher posted the Buttery markers and Gerry Timmins got St. Mike's lone tally.

PHE dropped PreMeds II B 32-24 in the late basketball minor league game. Schat scored seventeen of the losers' points and Hugh led a more balanced PHE crew with 12.

Blue Skiers Win 2 Firsts In Ski Meet

Skiers from Toronto University took a big share of the awards in the Southern Ontario Ski Championships held last weekend. The top winner was Odd Michaelsen, a post graduate student in aero-engineering. Michaelsen took the fourway combined, his first major championship. He was a member of the Toronto Ski Team for the last three years and is now ineligible for intercollegiate competition.

Per Berg-Johannesen won first place in the Nordic combined; he is a member of this year's team. Hal Godding also a member of this year's team placed second behind Michaelsen in the fourway combined.

Another Toronto skier, J. Myhre placed fourth in the cross-country, sixth in the combined cross-country and jumping and placed fourth in the fourway combined. Pete Bowen, Don Esson and H. Greaker entered the meet and also placed in some of the events.

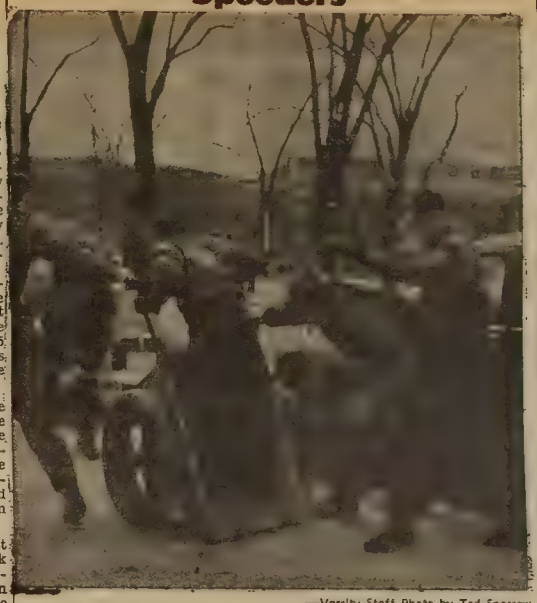
Optimism Of Student DP's Sagging Down At Innsbruck

In 1948 a program of material and non-material aid for three hundred displaced students was started at Innsbruck University, Austria. This relief effort was organized by the D.P. Section of the World University Service.

Some of the most serious problems facing these students are not financial ones, says a report received recently by The Varsity. They have been pushed around from one country to another, not wanted here, uneasy there. They have lost confidence, sometimes in themselves, somtimes in the institutions established for their benefit. Students who have retained an optimistic outlook are few and far between, says the report.

The first step taken by WUS was the erection of two wooden barracks on the Innsbruck University grounds. One of the barracks contains a club-room, an office, and a room for the office assistant. The other barrack provides space for a kitchen equipped to feed up to 165 students in one session, dining rooms and limited storage space.



In an attempt to run the Innsbruck program as democratically as possible, a Student Council was organized in October 1950. Each of the nine nationalities participating in the activities had one representative on this council. A WUS staff member was chairman. The Council met once a week. Unfortunately each national representative tried to get the best advantages for his group, and by February 1951 the council had become ineffective. However time and intelligent leadership may overcome these national egotisms. It is hoped a more successful council will be formed in the future.

Another practical advantage obtained by the students was the noon mensa. Substantial meals, at one-fifth the usual cost, were provided each week day. About 165 students took advantage of this chance to stretch out their meagre funds.

Chances to prepare for a future in a country like Canada or the U.S.A. are made available to these students. Four times weekly lessons in English helped to prepare one group for emigration. Emigration schemes on scholarships and campus job assurances, have been created.

By April, 1951, it appeared that the D.P. operation in Innsbruck could be discontinued as the number of needy students had been reduced to 70. However, because of new arrivals and a drastic increase in the cost of living in Austria, the numbers began to increase and at present the project is still continuing.

Speeders

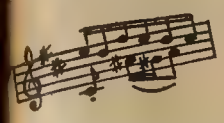
In case you didn't know by now, the Skule Chariot Race was held last Thursday, and here we see the winning Mining and Metallurgy entry doing its best to speed past the University Library. The entry seems to be ignoring all the laws of gravity and friction as it careens perilously close to the cars parked beside the campus. However, Insurance Companies report that no claims have been filed for smashed bumpers, and no hospitalizations resulted. And, as a matter of fact, defying friction, the gentlemen straining above won the race.

Fireworks Start Show At McGill

Montreal (CUP)—McGill University's biggest annual smash, The Winter Carnival, gets under way amid a blaze of fireworks and bonfires on Thursday, February 14. High atop Mount Royal, Dr. Cyril James, Principal of McGill, will officially open the weekend's festivities.

Since the beginning of the school year students have been working on a budegt of $13,000 planning the round of activities that will be climaxed Saturday night with the Carnival Ball.



Now in its fifth year, the Winter Carnival has already become an institution in Montreal.

Skiing, skating and tobogganing under floodlights on Mount Royal, skiing competitions at St. Saveur and the crowning of a carnival queen by Mayor Houde of Montreal will highlight the activities of the weekend.

University of Toronto students are invited to take part in the festivities.

SCOOP!

The latest Ontario Department of Lands and Forests report reveals the lowly muskrat as the most valuable wild fur-bearing animal. Far more pelts, in number and in total value, were taken from this "beaver's little brother", called "musquash" by the Indians, than from all other wild fur-bearers.

Opera School

A capacity audience in the Great Hall of Hart House heard the Royal Conservatory Opera School give an hour's preview of some of their forthcoming productions last Sunday. Excerpts from Mozart's "The Magic Flute" and Smetana's "The Bartered Bride" made up the program, with the Bach chorale "Now Let Every Tongue Adore Thee" added to start the concert off.

A large body of singers was present, and choruses as well as ensembles and solo numbers were performed. Nicholas Goldschmidt conducted and ably substituted for an orchestra at the piano, assisted in the choral numbers by George Crum.

The selections from "The Magic Flute" were apparently chosen with a view to displaying the solemn, ceremonial character of the opera. The duet in apotheosis of love (Pamina and Papageno), Sarastro's invocation to the gods, and the chorus of priests set the tone of the first half of the concert.

It is unfair to mention some soloists and leave out others, since their casting was in every instance apt that it is a matter of pure whim whom to decide. I was particularly struck with the quiet, moving, undramatic way in which Mary Morrison and Andrew MacMillan sang their duet.

Especially notable, too, was Pamela Snell's singing (in German for some reason) of the Queen of the Night arias, particularly the second. The purity of her intonation was beautifully demonstrated by the resonances of the Great Hall; in the famous coloratura passage one could hear the whole chord of F major at once ringing from the rafters.

Victor White in his role as Wenceslaus, the young lad of retarded intellectual development, almost stole the show with his genuinely funny singing in the second part of the concert. The sextet "Think It Over, Marie", and Marie's almost tragic aria presented some of the other, more wistful aspects of "The Bartered Bride."

My round of praise has not included the chorus; the omission is deliberate. In spite of their very fine enunciation and neat, sharp attacks even in difficult situations, I grieve for the breaking of a tradition as old as the opera school.

For this was a chorus of individualists, each apparently striving to show us (and perhaps the conductor) that, given a chance she, or more particularly he, could sing Tamino far better than whoever was chosen for the part. Well, louder, anyway.

However, I confidently expect that within the next few weeks, the chorus, the pride and joy of the Opera School will adjust itself in matters of balance and tone. With soloists of the quality of those heard on Sunday, plus, of course, costumes and paraphernalia, we can all look forward to an opera festival as brilliant as any yet.

Christopher Hellelner.

President's Report (1)

Ciceros Wanted?

The President's Annual Report has revealed some ominous facts and made more than a few disquietening observations. From the incredibly high failure rate to the inordinately low circulation of library books, from the necessity of instituting remedial English classes to the lack of adequate residence facilities, it would appear that all is not entirely well in the hallowed halls of the holy place.

Indeed, the President cannot offer a very cheerful answer to his own penetrating question, "Are we of the University of Toronto discharging adequately that inescapable responsibility (of exerting a spiritual and moral force on the community at large)?"

The answer would seem to be a guarded and qualified "no." At least, it seems that the university could be much improved—to say nothing of the high schools.

The President suggests that the faculty should take a closer look at their own teaching techniques, that "lecture notes, sometimes unrevised from year to year or from decade to decade" are something less than inspiring. This is followed by Professor Gilbreth's analysis of lecturing in which "the mind of the lecturer must be 'en rapport' with that of his audience, and this can only come from the spontaneity of immediate thinking, done on the platform — the more genuinely impromptu the better."

Now, this appeal to the orators of the university is all very well. University professors should be urged to present their material in as interesting manner as possible. Yet, how many Ciceros can any campus be expected to contain?

And what of the others? The men engaged in research, be it humanistic or scientific, who are the focal point of any university, are not necessarily those who can best tantalize a group of students with wit and mellow phrases. Their work may be more valuable to the community in the long run — and it may even be more stimulating to the students who are willing to exert the necessary effort. And surely, in the university, it must be assumed that students are not fooling about in lecture rooms waiting to be pricked by shocking assertions.

What if the lectures are read? Is it not preferable to ensure that the material presented is of first rate calibre? Need students be subjected to a series of superficial observations by a man who is better fitted to express himself by means of written notes?

And when all the defences for unstimulating lectures, either written or off the cuff, are presented, the student may still feel that they are largely a waste of time. Which, of course, many of them are.

Dr. B. K. Sandwell once observed that the freedom to choose whether or not to attend lectures was the greatest freedom the university had to offer its students. And this of course, is indisputably true. Students should exercise a considerable degree of discrimination in their choice of lectures—more than they seem to do at present.

If such discrimination were practised, then the necessity for improving the nature of lectures would not arise. Students would simply resort to books for their education, with an occasional shot in the arm from an exceptional lecture.

There is more than a little danger in consulting the newest techniques of education. That is the sort of thing that the Ontario College of Education is preoccupied with—and look at the state of secondary school education.

As someone once remarked, so much time is spent in learning how to teach, OCE graduates have often forgotten what they are teaching.

It is to be hoped that the universities, if no other part of society, can be spared some of the more dubious benefits of technique.

Religion

A Human Necessity

The following is the second in a series of articles on Christianity in which the author, Stephen Somerville, III St. Mike's, shows that religion is a condition of man's sanity.

The physical universe shows to our reason that it must have an intelligent and purposive Cause. Our own human nature testifies to the existence of a moral order, over and above the physical order. We have the consciousness of right and wrong, of an inner law commanding us to do good and avoid evil.

We hear the voice of Conscience which we may obey or disobey, and if there are men in whom it is silenced we regard them as inhuman. We honour as heroes men who sacrifice their lives for the sake of duty. We suffer remorse when we have done wrong even though we have profited from the wrong and, because of its secrecy, we cannot be called to account for it by our fellowmen.

The general fact of Conscience, of perception of a difference between right and wrong, is undeniable. It is not affected by the fallibility of individual consciences, by different beliefs as to the rightness and wrongness of particular actions. Men may misapprehend moral as well as physical laws; they may progress, or retrogress, in the knowledge of the ones or the others, but the reality of the laws does not depend on human knowledge or ignorance.

Atheistic theories of how moral consciousness has evolved may be more or less plausible explanations of actual psychological states but they cannot explain the sense of obligation except by reducing it to an illusion. But this is denying the evidence of consciousness which is the one kind of evidence we cannot but accept.

The religious doctrine of God as our Creator, Sovereign and Judge, offers an adequate explanation of the imperatives of the Moral Law [illegible] the voice of conscience. Man as a moral [illegible] is inexplicable if God does not exist.

Moreover, man is not only a moral being, [illegible] also a religious being. He has a natural impu[lse] worship something greater than himself, to [illegible] that he is not his own end but that he [illegible] serve some end beyond himself. When he [illegible] from God he sets up some other object of [illegible] ship: Nationalism, Racism, Communism or [illegible] not. Religion in the sense of offering honour [illegible] sacrifice to higher and mystical powers is a [illegible] stant a fact in human history as any inst[itution] that can be named. The varied species of re[ligion] some of them degraded and degrading, illu[strate] the constancy of the genus.

Worship and sacrifice are instincts of h[uman] nature. Men have always believed in a [future] life for which the present is but a preparati[on]. the abnormal cases where they have [rejected] future life for the individual they have pr[oject]ed an exalted future life for the race. Thus Marxists see all past history as a record of [class] ness and class war but they say everything culminate in the beatitude of the classless [society] of Communism.

Men must by a necessity of their nature, condition of their sanity, believe that their have some rational and effective purpose. cannot believe that

"Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the st[age]
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury
Signifying nothing."

OUR READERS WRITE

A Human Invention

Editor, The Varsity:

I have read with interest the many answers published to Mr. Darrel's article, "The Lost Sheep", and was surprised to find that no one took a negative position to the question, "Is God Real?" I do not believe that God is actuality. I accept God as a concept, and I would like to give my analysis of the concept of God.

Mr. Gatt has given us an example of what I consider one phase of the concept of God. God is a symbol of the total of basic values or morals of a group. This however does not mean that an acceptance of the concept of God is necessary, for an individual to be moral.

I consider the second and earliest phase of the concept of God to be God is the sum of the phenomena we do not fully understand. In earlier days, the questions that led to the growth of religion were "Why am I in pain?", or "Why do all people stop breathing and walking eventually?" I have chosen these questions because anthropologists have found that religion started in the Middle Stone Age and some of the earlier forms were separate plots for the burial of the dead, and pictures of mutilated hands on the walls of caves. It is from this basis that we can see where the connection of the unknown, and fear, and worship were brought about. In the present day there are also questions that we cannot fully answer. Basically they are "Why are there laws governing the universe?" and "What is life and death?" In science the term, nature, is used to describe many of the things we cannot completely explain. However, there is a difference between nature and God in that the former has an emotional significance while the latter does not.

I believe that the concept of God is not a good one to hold, because the term implies that, as people, we do not have faculties for understanding everything, and in this way it slows down the progress of science. It may be true that we are incapable of understanding all. Perhaps the limitations of our senses and of the size of our brain, limits what we are capable of understanding. I would like to point out an example of where we have overcome the inability of our senses to observe. With the invention of the microscope, we can now study organisms which we previously could not observe. There is no proof that we will always be able to compensate for the inability of our senses to observe things in such a manner, and similarly there is no proof to the contrary. But, as I have said before, to accept the concept of God is [illegible] lieve that man is incapa[ble] understanding all. In my [opinion] it is better, in the interest progress of science and [knowledge] edge in general, to believe our minds are capable of [understanding] standing all (until we have proved false if this is the than to hinder ourselves by ing onto the concept of God its implications.

A second objection I h[ave] the theory, is that expound it do not try to uphold pointing out its advantages other theories, but by something to the effect that is not my thought, but [what] been put into my head by pernatural being" the attitude. Basically, the [point] here is that those people pound this concept, do not that it is a theory and not ity.

Library Line

Statistics show that the average student today is not taking out as many books from the library these days as did the average student during the war years and statistics don't lie. However, the lineups of students waiting to take out books at three p.m. on week-days are as long as ever as shown by this picture.

Average Library Use Halved In 12 Years

The average Toronto student last year took less than half as many books out of the University Library as he did 12 years before. And recent figures show a steady per capita drop in the use of Library books ever since the Second World War ended.

That's the trend in the Main Library's circulation shown by the Librarian's annual report, recently released by Simcoe Hall.

And Librarian W. S. Wallace puts a share of the blame on extra-curricular activities.

In the 1938-39 session, the average student took 40.1 books per year out of the Main Library; last year he used only 19.2. Since the war average student use has dropped from 28 books a year in the 1946-7 session, to 20.7 (1948-9), to last year's low.

However, today's student is reading more than his father did: twenty years ago the average student took out only 12.3 books. At that time library facilities were much less than today: in the Librarian's report for that session he reports the future opening of "two new reading-rooms".

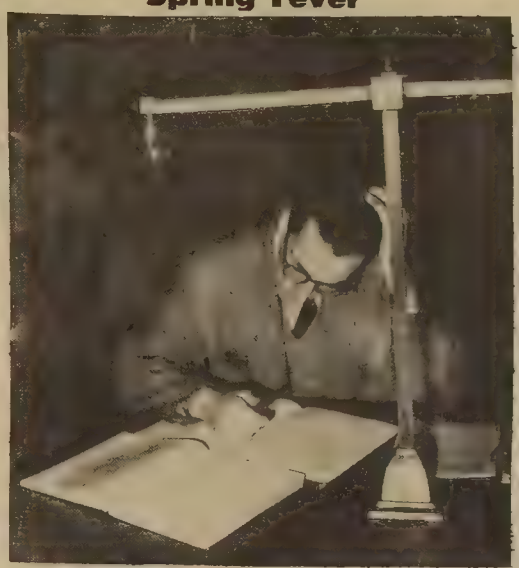
In his report, Dr. Wallace suggests that part of the drop last year was caused by the winter's influenza epidemic.

But he adds there is no way of escaping the fact that the undergraduate of today is reading less than the undergraduate of 1938-9.

Possible reasons for the drop in reading suggested by Dr. Wallace are that transportation difficulties in Toronto have reduced attendance at the Library, and that "the general feeling of unrest in the world today has affected the attitude of undergraduates towards their work."

"But I cannot help feeling that one factor in the declining circulation of books is the growth of extra-curricular activities in the University," he adds.

Several students suggested yesterday that one possible reason for the drop was that students may be buying more of their own books, instead of using the Library's. The use of pocket books in many courses increased this tendency, they pointed out.



Dr. Wallace qualified his circulation figures by pointing out they do not include the 32,000 reference books in the Main Library, nor the inter-library loans, which totalled almost 3,000 last year.

Nor do they take into account the "very considerable" circulation of books in many of the departmental libraries, he added.

Figures given by the Librarian for undergraduate use of Library books were 65,708 (in 1921-2) 319,349 (1938-9), 476,204 (1946-7), 344,284 (1948-9), 297,303 (1949-50), 251,884 (1950-1).

In those years the University enrollment was respectively 5,349; 7,960; 17,007; 16,635; 14,840; and 13,129.

Colleges In Parl't Upheld In Debate

A resolution by the Faculty of Medicine debaters which would give major Canadian Universities seats in the House of Commons was carried by a vote of 24-14 at last night's UC-Meds debate. The result allows the Medsmen to remain as Government of the UC-Meds Mock Parliament.

William McRae, I Meds, said that members elected to the Dominion Government by the universities would improve that body without upsetting the principle of "Rep by Pop" He described the proposed university delegates as 'independent members who would emphasize the interests of their constituents."

Roger Bull, II UC, said that if the proposed system were based on that recently practiced in England, "it would exclude the professional faculties from the voters' list" Bull added that professors would be the obvious choice for candidates and that in electing them to Parliament "we should promote our professors to ineffectuality."

Lyle Moran, II Pre-Meds, stated that "the intellectual voter will have a chance to vote for an intellectual candidate" if the system of university seats at Ottawa were adopted. As an independent member, the university delegate would be "unchained by party discipline and subject only to Truth", Moran said.

Vern Turner spoke against the principle of any citizen having two votes. "I do not think that this is what George Brown fought for," he added. Turner quoted President Smith's reports that "65% of U. of T. students are not literate" and concluded that they are not suited to vote twice. He brandished the Meds debaters' stand as "intellectual snobbishness".

Robert Osborne, grad, supported Turner's comment that students were unsuited to vote twice. He cited as example students who write for The Varsity. "Should they have an extra vote?" he asked.

"There is a danger of inertia in the universities," said Freda MacQueen, Meds. She explained the lack of interest in the U. of T. Mock Parliament as resulting from the fact that the parliament was a mock one. "Any movement which will make people think about our government, is a healthy thing", she added, and concluded that the proposed system of university members would thus be beneficial.

The resolution for the debate was prompted by the British practice of giving parliamentary seats to major universities, the graduates of which had two votes. The system was introduced in the reign of James I and was lately abolished by the Labor Government.

Smith Sets Up New Committee For Investigation of Humanities

A Presidential Committee to study the present state, and to prospect the future role of the humanities in the University of Toronto was set up last November by President Smith.

Members of the Committee are Principal Bennett of Victoria College, Professor Brieger, Head of the Department of Art and Archaeology, Professor Goudge of the Philosophy Department, Dean Innis of the School of Graduate Studies, Principal Jeanneret of University College, Father McLaughlin of St. Michael's College, Provost Seeley of Trinity College, and Professor Woodhouse, Head of the University College English Department. President Smith is an ex-officio member of the Committee.

The Committee has asked for information on the place of Humanities in the university from the various departments in the faculties and colleges. Dean Innis said that the Committee will consider the reports from the various departments and give its recommendations to the President early next year.

In his report, President Smith suggested the following questions for consideration:

"1. What areas of knowledge are included in the term 'humanities'?"

2. It it possible, within the terms of the University Act, to achieve greater co-operation among the Arts Colleges at the undergraduate level, without affecting the indentity or sacrificing the pecular traditions and ethos of any college?

3. Could the departments that teach humanities in the Faculty of Arts, University College, Victoria College, Trinity College, and St. Michael's College, speak with a more united voice at the graduate level?

4. Could the humanities be represented in the administrative bodies and committees of the School of Graduate Studies in such a way as to make their influence felt more widely throughout the University?

5. It it possible to inject more humanistic studies into the honour courses in the natural sciences and the social sciences?

6. Could courses such as Music and Architecture be offered to a greater extent in curricula of the Faculty of Arts?

7. Could more study of the humanities be required in the professional schools?"

The report states "I have often declared and I reaffirm the view, that the federated structure of the University of Toronto provides sources of strength not available in unitary institutions of higher learning. It may be, however, that the dispersion of courses among four Arts Colleges has weakened the Humanities in this University." . . . "In the hope of finding a remedy for this situation, and of securing for the humanities, in fact, the precedence which they warrant in theory, I have established a committee. . . "

Ex-Staffer McCarthy's Latest Red

An ex-Toronto faculty member is the latest man to be singled out by American Senator Joseph McCarthy as a former Communist. He is Dr. Philleo Nash, now a White House advisor on minority affairs and formerly on the staff of the University and Royal Ontario Museum from 1938 to 1940.

McCarthy said his reports included a charge that "In the early 1940's, parts of the Communist spy ring in Canada used his (Nash's) home in Toronto as a point to rendezvous, some of them living there."

Present staff members, who were associated with Nash during his stay here, say they knew nothing which would stamp him as a Communist. "We knew he had left-wing tendencies," Prof. T. F. McIlwraith, head of the Department of Anthropology, said last night, "but they were certainly not extreme or out of the ordinary."

To Install Pearson At Vic on Monday

The Honourable Lester Bowles Pearson, Minister of External Affairs, will be installed as the new Chancellor of Victoria University on Monday evening. The formal installation of the Chancellor will take place in Convocation Hall at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pearson has long been connected with the University of Toronto. After graduating from Victoria College in 1919, he went to St. John's College, Oxford, where he received a B.A. and M.A. From 1924-1926, Mr. Pearson lectured in Modern History at the University of Toronto and was made an assistant professor two years later.

During his political career, Pearson has held many important posts. In 1928, he became the first Secretary of the Department of External Affairs and two years later he was present at the conference on the codification of International Law at the Hague.

Pearson was also present at the disarmament conference at Geneva in 1932 and the next year was appointed as a special assistant to the League of Nations. From 1945-46, Pearson was the Canadian ambassador to Washington, and previous to this was the Canadian minister to the U.S. for 3 years.

At noon-hour, Monday, The Board of Regents of Victoria College are holding a luncheon for the Chancellor at Burwash Hall as part of the installation. When Mr. Pearson gives his inaugural address in the evening, representatives of various groups throughout Canada will be on hand to extend their greetings

The Principal of Queen's University will be present on behalf of the Universities of Canada and Dean Beatty of the Faculty of Arts will represent the University of Toronto. After the installation, a reception will be held in honour of the new Chancellor and his wife.

Campus Profiles

Keith Girard and Jim Guthrol

By PEARL PARNES

"Music now is suffering from over-professionalization. We're used to hearing the best. We can turn our dials and get perfect performances. The emphasis is placed on perfection, and the amateur performer feels that if he can't rise to the top, what's the use of bothering?" Keith Girard, conductor of the university of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and All-Varsity Mixed Chorus, has this pet peeve.

"In the ages most musically healthy and productive, there was a great deal of amateur home activity. In every educated family, each member could perform in some way. Composers were writing for home consumption. Today they have ideal performing media in mind and write only for the top performers. The music written for high school use is usually tossed off, and very, obviously only for high schools."

Keith, now at OCE, with high-school teaching very much in mind, is worried about the situation. "There are some serious composers, like Hindemith, who are turning their attention to the amateur performer. The time has come for composers and the public to realize that amateur activity should be recognized and encouraged, and that the literature for such amateur groups should be of a high musical quality. Music should be an everyday activity and not just something reserved for Tuesday night at Massey Hall."

A graduate of the Faculty of Music at the University of Toronto, Keith, at 22 years of age, has a fine record of experience in conducting and flute-playing. He makes his living by "odd jobs" in the opera festival, the Eaton Operatic Society and CBC Wednesday Night, playing the flute in the orchestra. He sings, occasionally composes, and cooks. Last summer he even worked as a Customs Officer.

His favourite acting roles have been the villain in the UC Music Club Production of "Naughty Marietta" last year, and the comic actor-turned-solicitor in OCE's production of "Wurzel-Flummery". He is soon to appear as Koko in "The Mikado". As far as cooking goes, "I never use the same recipe twice". It started as a necessity, grew in order to stay out of an eating rut, and is now an obsession. "I may send my wife out to work, while I tend the kitchen!"

His main activity is conducting, though last year he composed the music for the UC Players' Guild performance of "Sweeney Agonistes". The Symphony Orchestra and Chorus performs twice a year, in Convocation Hall. Rehearsals are difficult, particularly for the orchestra, which rehearses in the OT huts, which were never intended for that purpose. "If we only had a Students' Union!"

The orchestra is half composed of players of professional or semi-professional standards, and the other half of amateurs who like to "come out and blow once a week." And here is Keith's main problem. "We must use material of a high technical standard to keep the professionals happy, and yet avoid having the amateurs feel left behind. It's difficult to drill and drill, because interest will wear off for the professionals. Everyone must be kept more or less busy."

The numerically-smaller orchestra and chorus is a problem another talented young man has some opinions about. Jim Guthro, producer of the All-Varsity Revue, sees the campus musically at a very low ebb.

"We have the musicians, and our standards should be of the highest. But most of the professionals are out playing for money. Those who are not interested in the Symphony Orchestra won't waste their time on small shows. The solution is to push something, like the AVR, on a large scale, where they can find a worthwhile outlet for musical, acting, singing and writing talents."

Jim is against the idea of many small college and faculty shows. "The show at the University of Western Ontario is an excellent example of one large show with the whole campus behind it. It sold out for six nights in a theatre of 1200 seats (compared to Hart House Theatre's 500) in a city one-ninth the size of Toronto!"

Originally the music director of the AVR, Jim took over the production reins when the original producer resigned. "I wanted to see that there was a show, and a good one. If it failed now, it would be gone for good." As far as the controversy about professional directors is concerned, Jim sees no need for one.

"If you can establish a tradition in a show, you don't need a professional director. Students work better with students, and would save even more money. Professionals won't rely on enthusiasm rather than professional standards, particularly in things like scenery-painting." Jim is economising to offset the rise in prices and the advertising in The Varsity. "We'll break even—and we could have made a profit."

Jim started playing the trumpet when he was laid up after an accident. In his four years with the Air Force, he played in bands. He studied under John Weinsweig, the Canadian composer, and then entered the Faculty of Music. "DVA said 'I wasn't suitable,'" he remembers. So he had to pay his own way. His success in his course (he is now at OCE) and in extra-curricular musical activities proves how wrong DVA can be.

Like Keith Jim plays off the campus to earn money. He writes some music for symphony orchestras, and plays with popular outfits like Mart Kenney to support himself and his wife. Last summer he played with the Royal York Hotel orchestra.

Jim's composing career is a varied and impressive one. He writes dance band arrangements and has written some and arranged most of the songs for the AVR. The University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the Hamilton Civic Orchestra have each performed his composition "Amnesia". He has written experimental music for small groups, and orchestrated a 20-minute score for the Canadian Ballet Festival.

Robertson Davies Supports Culture For Second Time

Robertson Davies will speak for the affirmative at a Trinity College Centennial debate on Thursday. Davies, who wrote the plays Fortune My Foe and Eros at Breakfast supported a motion that Canada is culturally constipated at a Hart House Debate last year. The topic being debated Thursday is that the Canadian environment is conducive to distinctive culture.

Dwight Fulford, IV Trinity, will support the motion alongside Davies. Last night Fulford said Canada's culture may lack the insight of the British or the force of the American for it reflects the nature of Canada's people, but its existence is real. He cited the presence of Robertson Davies as proof in the flesh, of the existence of a distinctive culture.

Speaking against Davies and Fulford will be Prof. Lyndon Smith, associate professor of divinity at Trinity, and John Barton, IV Trinity, one of the two Brading Trophy debaters.

Barton said that the concept of a distinctive Canadian culture involves the total and unwarranted dismissal of a consideration of the economic stratification of Canada today. The unrestrained pursuit of the arts, he felt, can only take place under conditions of multificant patronage. Barton said that Canada is not a Florence under the Medici.

Declares Public Opinio A Real Force To Peace

Speaking in the third of a series of talks on "The Nature and the Attainment of Peace", B. Mickleburgh, Public Relations Director of the Canadian Peace Congress and editor of the Peace Review, claimed yesterday in West Hall, UC, that "public opinion is the only force which can bring about the end to the scourge of war". He said that the World Council of Peace and the Canadian Peace Congress both believed that wars were man-made and that wars could be stopped by men.

The topic of Mickelburgh's speech was "Peace is in Our Hands" and the series has been organized by the Political Commission of the Student Christian Movement. R. G. Cavell of the Canadian Colombo Plan and Mrs. Ursula Niebuhr representing the Church have already spoken.

Mickelburgh stated that the aim of the Peace Councils was to bring together the millions of people who desire to repulse war. "There is no common ideology, no common philosophy, no common religion, in the World Council of Peace," he continued, only a common desire to prevent war.

The speaker strongly believed that if such a unity of public opinion could be organized "it would be impossible for any government to launch aggressive war — people are needed to fight wa

Mickelburgh pointed out that Stockholm Peace Appeal co 500,000,000 signatures and that Five Power Peace Pact had ar 590,000,000 names though campaign was not yet over World Council rejects Tru solution by force, he said, urges solution by diplomacy

Quoting Sir Edward G warning that "big armaments inevitably to war," Mickel asserted that the road to "lies in fair and controlled armament". He said that reason the spirit of negoti na snot prevailed throughou world is because they (the believe that rearmament is way to peace."

"Men together have solved common problems. Though is a long, hard road ahead I that peace is within our hands," Mickelburgh conclude

Russ Visit In Red Paper

Canadians Co-operative Says Komsomol Pravda

The Russian student visit ques- on has hit Russian papers.

Komsomol Pravda, the Young Communist League paper, claimed yesterday that the policy of the reactionary" leaders of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and their American inspirers in attempting to obstruct the development of iendly relations between the youth of Russia and of Canada is being exposed by Canadian students.

Komsomol Pravda said that at a student meeting attended by 500 students, 497 voted to invite a delegation of Soviet students to Canada. (The Russian paper was referring to a general vote taken at McGill last fall.) "In many Canadian Universities discussions are going on which clearly show a tremendous desire among Canadian students to establish co-operation with the youth of the Soviet Union," the Young Communist League paper said.

So far 13 Canadian Universities have supported the principle of a Russian student visit, while three have turned in negative votes.

The question of a Russian visit originated at Warsaw when Denis Lazure, then International Affairs Chairman of NFCUS discussed a possible exchange of Canadian students with Russian students attending the Warsaw Conference. When Lazure's proposal was raised at the NFCUS conference in London last fall it was defeated by a vote of 12 to 6.

Because of the number of Canadian Universities which passed favorable votes for a Russian visit, the national executive of NFCUS has decided to discuss the matter at their next meeting in February.

On the Toronto campus, the External Affairs Commission of the SAC decided last October to ask for discussion of the proposed Russian and Canadian student exchange. After a month of discussion, the principle of a Russian visit was approved by a vote of 14 to 4 in a meeting of the SAC. This closed the discussion of the visit on the campus and Toronto became one of the first Canadian universities to support the idea after the proposal had been killed at London.

Hams Fans At Defence Film Show

Civil Defence preparation in Toronto and York County was highlighted in the Hart House Amateur Radio Club meeting last night. The communications service hams can perform during any civil defence or other emergency was graphically shown by a March of Times film.

This film showed a workout of emergency communication groups in Syracuse and Onandaga County during a simulated emergency last fall. Other radio communications films were shown, by the courtesy of the Bell Telephone and Canadian General Electric.

The Assistant Maintenance Technician of the club announced that the station was now operating with new equipment. He said that any member could arrange for his key at the Graduate Secretary's Office.

The Shewing-Up

Above is a scene from G. B. Shaw's "The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet" to be performed by the University College Players' Guild tomorrow night in the Women's Union Theatre. It will be shown along with W. H. Auden's "The Dog Beneath the Skin".

Christian Anatomist Talks On Re-birth

Dr. C. P. Martin, the Robert Reford Professor of Anatomy at McGill, spoke at the Varsity Christian Fellowship monthly service in Wycliffe College chapel last Sunday evening. "A Christian," Dr. Martin said, "is one who is born again by the Spirit of God, through faith in Jesus Christ. One becomes a human being," Dr. Martin went on; "by being born a human being. In like manner, one is born into the Christian experience."

Dr. Martin, who holds the degrees of M.B., Ch.B., M.A., and D.Sc., from Trinity College, Dublin, continued: By not keeping the greatest commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind", man reveals that he is no longer a God-centered being. "Natural man," claimed Dr. Martin, "is eaten up with self admiration and self esteem."

"But man can only come to God on one condition," Dr. Martin said; "he must acknowledge his sin." If the Spirit is within us, we are actually, now, members of the body of Christ. "The faith of a Christian," maintained Dr. Martin, "may grow to the strength and greatness of that of Job: 'Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him.' "

VCU Band At Pearson Installation

The SGLIRPB (Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band) will be present at the installation of the Honorable Lester Pearson as Chancellor of Victoria College, Vic Publicity Director Ed Pile announced today. Far from detracting from the solemnity of the occasion, they will represent a "spontaneous outburst of student enthusiasm" befitting the installation of an old Vic graduate and former resident of Gate House.

Besides, the SGLIRPB can be extremely ceremonious on occasion, Pile added. While it is a rule that they never practice, they make up for this with spirit. A few of the bandsmen play in the Varsity band, and the tasteful sweatshirts and discarded Skule band uniforms worn by the SGLIRPB can be seen at many Vic functions. They specialize in playing "The Old Ontario Strand" but can play anything the occasion requires.

The band was organized last year to add to Vic spirit. There had been no Vic band before, except for the Burwash Bugle Band, and some other smaller organizations.

"Since the Engineers have lost all their spirit, Vic is trying to regain a bit of it around the campus," Pile explains.

The installation of Mr. Pearson will take place in Convocation Hall at 8 o'clock Monday night.

Over The Waves

A swimmer that may appear in the synchronized swim display at Hart House during the Athletic Nite is shown here about to disappear into the waters of Lillian Massey Pool. It still remains a mystery as to how males are able to get into the pool. However photographers on The Varsity have certain privileges, it is rumoured.

Public Relations Are Slipping Brewery Exec. Tells Luncheon

"In my company phone operators and receptionists are frequently subjects of complimentary letters and telephone calls," said Mr. Charles S. Watson of the Canadian Breweries Limited at the Commerce Club luncheon yesterday, talking on public relations. "They are people who know how to do a good public relations job," he went on.

"Too many of us are busy doing a profession forgetting about our public relations," Mr. Watson claimed and added, "We have lost the smile in the grocery store if that's the business we are running. We don't call on someone any more, we contact him."

Canadian Breweries inaugurated their public relations department in 1945 and a survey conducted in 1951, showed that, as a result, 55% of the people had high opinions about breweries and welcomed employees in their communities, said Mr. Watson.

At one point Mr. Watson referred to the controversial advertisements containing a picture of Hart House, and said that they were very happy to get into the distinguished pages of The Varsity, "the kind of publicity we couldn't buy in a very prolific market."

As an example of poor public relations, Mr. Watson said that his company once donated $10,000 to a hospital building campaign. He phoned the office of the chairman of the campaign, who was also manager of a firm, three times on three following days unsuccessfully, even though he told the secretary each day why he wanted to speak to the chairman. Finally, it took a letter and a $2,000 cheque to make the manager get in touch with him.

Being curious about the company, Mr. Watson "contacted" salesmen and other people who dealt with the company, and each time got the answer, "Oh, that outfit! Well, if you want an artistic brushoff, just call on them."

Schools' Set Rules Destroy Initiative In Students: Gough

"Modern architecture has a worse battle for recognition now than thirty years ago," said Bruce Gough, a well-known American architect and head of the school of Architecture at the University of Oklahoma, to a group of students of this university and local members of the profession. "At the begining of the century modern architecture had only to compete with classical eclecticism while now it still has the same to oversome, a swell as an added handicap of modern eclecticism," he continued. He say that architects are not directly to blame for this modern eclecticism but rather the schools of architecture that kill all initiative and creative ability in the architectural student, by teaching him to design in a style, according to set rules. The only change from the Beaux Arts type of architecture is that magazines are used as source of ideas rather than expensive books of engravings of classical buildings, he said.

Gough expressed his belief that the individual client's character has become second in importance to "the style" in modern architecture. He also stated his appreciation of the problems faced by contemporary architects on the continent, especially outdated building by-laws, and lack of proper financing.

This address given on Monday at Henderson Hall was part of a lecture tour sponsored by the University of Toronto Architectural Society.

Agent To Uncover A Tale of Intrigue

"Familiar with half a dozen European languages and posing as a native wherever he went, John Roy Carlson," according to his publicist, "posed in turn as pro-communist, pro-fascist, pro-Arab nationalist and anti-Jew, and took and changed color with incredible skill in order to learn first-hand the activities of political racketeers, religious fanatics, and would-be fuehrers of every description."

Carlson will speak at the Hillel Foundation this Thursday night on "Undercover Adventures in Europe and the Arab World."

John Roy Carlson is the pseudonym of an American who was born in Europe. Carlson is a graduate of New York University in journalism. In 1938 Fortune magazine assigned him to do research an Fascist activities in the United States. According to Carlson this launched him upon his mission of exposing extremist groups which would sabotage the United States' way of life. He is the author of several books.

During the war Carlson lectured at U.S. Army camps on how to recognize the propaganda of the "enemy within". Carlson is a firm believer in the ultimate triumph of democracy over all the dark forces he reveals in his books and describes this faith as "the faith of a child".

Too Eager, To Recast Vic Vote

The re-running of the women's SAC elections at Vic will take place Friday, according to Joan Dancy, Vic Women's SAC representative.

Yesterday's Varsity carried a story quoting Associate-President Barb Taylor at Vic as saying the elections would be held Friday. The same issue contained an advertisement announcing that the elections would be held yesterday.

VCU president John Deverell cancelled the first election held Friday when some over-eager students started counting the ballots before the polling booths were closed.

News Out To Trounce Sports In Varsity Staff Trophy Classic

Rivalry rears its bloody head on a gymnasium floor next week. The Varsity's News Staff are going to show the Sports staff that the Sportsmen can be beaten at their own game. The occasion will be the annual contest for the coveted and tarnished Porter Trophy, symbolic of sporting supremacy in the staff of the campus daily.

Frank Moritsugu, a veteran of all four Porter Trophy clashes, said yesterday that News would easily retain the silverware they took so convincingly last year. Then the OCE gym was the site of a truly epic crash in which Walt Mackenzie and Hugh Niblock led News to a sound trouncing of the Sports four in a basketball tilt.

Lining up for the News team which will easily keep the Porter Trophy where it belongs is cartoonist Hugh (Fancy Dan) Niblock, Rich (Shoulders) Anco, Ches (Jazzbo) Smith, Jerry Michigan) Brown. Sports boasts Mal (Track) Crawford, Dave (Dribbles) Rotenberg, Joe (Stretch) Scanlon, Barry (Whistle) Thomas, and others.

A new feature for the Porter Trophy struggle is the promised appearance of female hoopstresses in the game. Both News and Sports claim to have some women players to trot out when the situation get desperate.

The Porter Trophy classic started four years ago, when their cub reporter Bob Dnieper (who may make a guest appearance at this year's game) arranged the donation of a new untarnished trophy from Mr. Porter. The first clash was a gridiron game, in which Sports scored a last-second touchdown (by fleet Bob Red Jones who galloped the length of a muddy field) to take possession of the Porter cup. There was some complaint from disinterested observers that Jones was one of the few players on the field with cleats. But this was ruled non sequiter.

Basketball became the game in the second annual contest, in 1950. Sports led by John (Buckets) Kennedy and Bruce Macdonald took an easy victory from News [illegible] staff photo taken of the two teams after the game shows a sweating crew flushed with victory and despair, accompanied by an absent-minded timekeeper and a bewildered referee (both staff members). This occasion was the [illegible] time that women (all staff members) crashed Hart House's athletic wing in broad daylight disported themselves in the weightlifting room, as well as other places.

Last year, News finally secured its place of supremacy. At the OCE gym, Walt Mackenzie's [illegible] bound work paid off to give News a cosy victory. Now this year, negotiations are being made to acquire gym space where all members of the staff may attend the contest.

After the Porter trial is [illegible] there is a serious rumor that the Varsity quintet will challenge the SAC to a basketball contest, no holds barred, all sexes allowed.

Second National Ballet Showing Claimed Satisfying, Entertaining

The second program of the Canadian National Ballet provides its audience with an extremely entertaining evening. Sandwiched between the classical "Giselle" and the more modern "Casse-Noisette" was a new number, "Ballet Composite", choreographed by David Adams.

Act II of "Giselle" received an attractive and sensitive interpretation. David Adams as Albrecht dominated the scene with both his dancing and dramatic ability. In effective contrast was Lois Smith, a charmingly wistful—although sometimes uncertain — Giselle. Celia Franca was a precise Queen of the Wilis, and this precision was mirrored by an excellent corps de ballet.

"Ballet Composite", set to Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, was interestingly choreographed by David Adams. Three men in red and four women in blue danced through a series of figures which led into each other intelligently and effortlessly. A couple of rough spots can be attributed to first-night jitters and will doubtlessly vanish with practice.

In the second act of "Casse-Noisette" the company finished off the evening with a number which should become part of its standard repertoire. Even the decor, which hitherto had been Spartan in its plainness, approached the proper festive air of the piece. Irene Apine as the Sugar Plum Fairy turned in a particularly delightful performance. As the Nutcracker Prince, Jury Gotshalks ranked not far behind.

In the individual numbers, the less prominent dancers of the company displayed talent which speaks well for the future. Natalia Butko was a sensuous, hip-swaying Arabian lass. Robert Ito and Brian Macdonald danced the Chinese Dance in a very amusing manner.

The Russian Dance showed Earl Kraul to good advantage. The two women's groups, the Fairies and the Candy Canes, were all that one could have desired in charm and grace.

This second showing of Celia Franca's company was completely satisfying in nearly every respect. One gets the feeling that too much reliance is placed on standard works to attract an audience. A vigorous group, which this one certainly is, should not hesitate to experiment. Let's hope that the day is not far off when we can see the Canadian National Ballet perform on a full-size stage, complemented by brilliant decor and a sympathetic orchestra.

Feature Soprano At Noon Recital

Today's mid-day recital in the East Common Room of Hart House will be given by Elizabeth Puley, soprano, with Donald Strathdee at the piano.

Elizabeth Puley was heard shortly before Christmas in the mid-day series as soloist with the UC Singers. She is 22 years of age, a member of the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir, and pupil of Weldon Kilburn.

Miss Puley is in the first year of the Faculty of Music. She already has the degree of ARCT. Last year she sang in the chorus at the Opera Festival. She was a 1951 scholarship winner at the Kiwanis Music Festival.

Miss Puley's program will include operatic arias by Handel, Mozart and Gounod, two Elizabethan love-songs, and a group of three songs called "Secrets" by Fleming.

The concert begins at 1:30 p.m. All members of Hart House are invited to attend.

Varsity Errs Blanco Shews —Not Shows

The Varsity wishes to correct an impression. In Monday's issue a double-bill was announced by the UC Players' Guild, "The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet" by G. B. Shaw, and "The Dog Beneath The Skin" by W. H. Auden.

At the time, The Varsity was unaware that when Shaw wrote this one-act play (1909) the verb 'show' was usually spelled 'shew'. The staff, therefore, obviously, thought that the Players' Guild publicity agent herself had erred, and had meant to say "The Chewing-Up, etc.," undoubtedly by "The Dog". (The Varsity printed this.) What is more, in the UC rotunda is a poster which seems to say "The Stewing-Up, etc." Since the two plays are entirely separate, "The Dog" could not possibly chew Blanco Posnet, as Monday's issue implied.

Since the plays will be performed in the UC Women's Union Theatre this Thursday at 8:00 p.m., and since UC is the provincial Arts college, Blanco Posnet will not get stewed, as the poster in UC implied. (Refreshments suitable to a provincial Arts college will be served.)

By DAVID PEDDIE

In the words of its author, Christopher Fry, THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING is "a romantic comedy set in the fifteenth century, more or less, or exactly". Which leaves the door open for one to say in all truth, that The Lady is a modern play. It was written just a few years ago, and though it centres around an old 15th century-type witchhunt, the attitudes and responses of the people to the situation in which they find themselves are as modern as you and I. The central character, one Thomas Mendip, is just out of the army —following his nose from pub to pub, and smelling out damnation to such an extent, that he wants to be hanged for having "perpetrated human nature."

When I heard THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING last Wednesday night over the CBC trans-Canada network (but through the courtesy of the BBC) it was all too clear that Thomas Mendip had just returned from World War II. Perhaps not all too clear, but it never crossed one's mind that he had been fighting any other war. All of which leads one to a position from whence to chastise a fellow critic—by name, Nathan Cohen—who believes that Christopher Fry's "disinterest in modern people and modern times . . . are defects which can undo him". I think not. Certainly it takes a little imagination to follow Fry's overpowering and almost vulgar display of metaphor, but I do think the people he portrays, their attitudes to life, and his attitude to them, is modern.

Of course, no sane person would cold-bloodedly try to place each of the characters in a modern setting—like saying, for instance, that Thomas Mendip had just returned from World War II. That is quite unnecessary; for as long as the atmosphere, the general tone or feeling of the play is conveyed to the audience, Mr. Fry is perfectly happy.

As he puts it himself in a foreward to the first edition, "It might be helpful if the producer thinks in terms of light, of inconsistent April sunshine, of sunset, twilight, and full moon . . . the comedy is a climate of damp and dry, of spirit and matter playing April with each other and the climate is the comedy."

Starring in the BBC production of the play was Alec Clunes—the original Thomas Mendip—to my mind he was better than the Gielgud we hear on the commercial recording of THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING. There was more strength in his playing, and less of a tendency to over-dramatize the world-weariness of the hero.

Pamela Brown played the beautiful and not quite genuine witch Jennet Jourdemayne with seductiveness enough to convince a hundred lecherous old men, that she really was a witch. The part of the lecherous old mayor of Cool Clary, Hebble Tyson, was taken by Harcourt Williams.

The other players including these last two were all in the Gielgud production. Eliot Makeham, the Chaplain, deserves special mention for his excellent rendering of those lines, "All my friends tell me I actually exist. And by an act of faith I have come to believe them."

This Sunday we shall have another chance to hear Christopher Fry. STAGE 52 is presenting A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT. But of course this will be done by Toronto radio actors. Let us pray they do not abuse the example set them last week by the cast of THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING.

Skule Grad Shows Art Collection

Engineers should be particularly interested in the current collection of paintings being shown in the Hart House art gallery. John Walsh graduated in engineering at London University before studying art at the London Central School of Art. Since then he has combined a career in engineering with increased activities in the fields of painting and writing.

The afternoon at 5:00 p.m. Paul Duval, art editor for Saturday Night, will review Walsh's paintings. The Art Gallery will be open to women from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m.

TWIN BILL AT MUTUAL TONITE

Fox And Vernon Return To Blues

There was some good news from the Blues' hockey camp last night, as Norm Fox and Pete Vernon returned to the line-up. Fox has been out since the New Year with twisted knee ligaments, and his return should add the scoring punch that the Blue team will need in their game against the Carabins this Friday.

Vernon was not playing in last week's tilt with the McGill Redmen as he had a final exam the next day, but he will be back Friday playing on the line with Al Conboy and Norm Fox.

Joe Kane, who suffered facial cuts and a slight concussion in the McGill contest will not be back for some time, and his defence slot will be filled for the time being by Paul Prendergast.

The Blues will have to come up with a win in Friday's game in order to stay in the race for the Intercollegiate championship. The Carabins now have a seven point lead over the third place Varsity squad, but the Blues have two games in hand. Laval is now holding down second slot just two points ahead of the locals, but the Quebecois have played two more contests.

The UC Intramural basketballers had a good day all around yesterday as the Fourths matched the UC. Seniors' win with a 39-29 conquest of Emmanuel A's. The score was 20-19 for UC entering the final period but the Red and White outscored the Clerics 19-10 in that frame to win going away. Fullerton tossed in 13 for the winners while Frame racked up seven. For Emmanuel Lowery swished 18 points, ten of which came in the second period.

The Minor basketball schedule was as crowded as ever, this being the peak week in Intramural competition. The UC Huskies mushed to a 27-23 triumph over III Chemical, but had to withstand a late rush by the Skulemen to come out in front. Trelliving led the Canines with 9 points while Mowat dropped in 11 for the losers.

Trinity Crumpets ran up a 13-2 first period margin to coast to a 41-26 win over the Vic Rugby quintette. Dyba took time off from his afternoon tea to hoop 18 points for Trinity with Anderson getting 8 for the Vicsters.

It was strictly no contest between PHE B and Trin Orphans as the Biceps Squad humiliated the pore l'il orphans by a 59-5 count. Herbie Tilson netted 12 for PHE with Richardson and Bewley scoring 11 each.

Hockey activity saw SPS VI shut out Emmanuel 2-0 and Law trample Med IV 8-0. In the first game Day and Pinkney fired second period goals to wrap up the contest for the Engineers. The second tilt was Law all the way as the Legal Eagles netted four goals in each of the first and second stanzas. Burns scored the hat trick for the winners with J.A. Tory and Montgomery garnering two apiece.

In Water Polo St. Mike's B splashed their way to a 5-0 win over Dent B. The Medsmen really had a field day as their III's swamped Arch 9-0, the IV's edged Dent A 5-4, and the V's took Trin B 4-2.

The most exciting major b-ball game of the day saw SPS III nip Pharmacy A 40-39 despite a 17 point output by McCauley of the Druggists. Pinkus tossed in six for the losers while Brown and Danic got 12 and 8 in that order for winners.
